A news item in the Post-Boy reads: "It being publicly known here, that Nathaniel Rogers (one of the Boston Merchants who has all along refused to come into the Non-Importation Agreement) being about to arrive in the City, it was his Endeavours to prevail on the Merchants here, to break thro' and put an End to their Agreements; his Effigy was exhibited (last Thursday Evening) hanging on a Gallows, with Labels on the Back and Breast of it expressing his Crime. It was attended by some Thousand Spectators, who after assembling through Part of the City went from the Coffee-House to his Lodgings, about 9 o'Clock, in order to pay their Respects to himself, in which they were disappointed, as he didn't out of Town and had not yet returned. They then proceeded through several of the principal Streets to the Common, where the Effigy and Gallows were committed to the Flames, amidst the joyful Acclamations of the People, who immediately after dispersed. . . . About 12 o'Clock, a Number of Persons call'd at his Lodgings again . . . and left a Letter which was soon after forwarded to him; upon the Receipt of it . . . he immediately ordered a Servant, about 2 o'Clock in the Morning to bring out his Carriage and Baggage, and decamped for Boston." The following is a copy of the letter:

"Whereas you have hitherto acted in opposition to your Fellow Merchants of the Town of Boston . . . and as you have by such, your infamous Conduct, rendered your Commercial Relations in the whole this City; a great Number of them called at your Lodgings this Evening to know the Reasons for Your Conduct in this Matter; and as they had not the Pleasure of seeing you, they take this opportunity to inform you, that it is their Pleasure you depart this City within Twenty-four Hours from this time, or you may depend upon being visited in a more disagreeable Manner, by . . ."

"The Dying Speech of the May Effigy of a wretched Importer, which was exalted upon a Gibbet, and afterwards committed to the Flames, at New York, May 10, 1770," is the curious caption of a broadside preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library. It is supposed to have been printed before the riot on this solemn occasion, to behold the tragic end of an unhappy stranger, exult not at my misfortune; but consider, that there are some people among yourselves, as culpable as me, and who’s exit (if justice is done them) will be equally ignominious. As it is usual for criminals to give, at the place of execution, some accounts of their parentage, birth, education and manner of life &c. I shall in hopes that it may redound to your advantage, give you an account of mine. My father was one of Oliver Cromwell’s descendants, and my mother was only forty-five generations removed from the Witch of Endor; they both drew their first breath in New-England, as did also their unhappy son—your buzzing prevents me from saying any more, only that I acknowledge the justice of my sentence, and sincerely wish that all that are guilty of the crime for which I suffer, may be ninety-two degrees more severely punished than me. I die in the Presbyterian persuasion, and in hopes that the spectators will demolish each other’s noses with my legs and arms, after my dissolution."—From broadside in N. Y. Pub. Library. Another broadside, without date, from the pen of "Brutus" (see Jan. 15) To the Free and Loyal Inhabitants of the Colony of New-York, informing them of the divers ways of the New-England "Ranks," in the maintenance of the "Non-Importation Agreement," concludes with "Ol ye Betrayers of the glorious Cause, remember the Boston Importer, Rogers, I say, remember him and treat— From broadside in N. Y. Pub. Library.

"A Son of Liberty" issues a broadside headed "The Salvation of American Liberty. To the Public." He traces the political history of the colonies since the imposition of the stamp duties and shows the growth of the non-importation agreement. He argues that a strict adherence to this agreement is the only weapon the colonists have to force parliament to repeal the tax on tea in addition to the duties on paper, glass, etc. (see April 12).—From a photostat (made from an original in the Library Company of Philadelphia) in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Cullen informs Hillborough that "The Merchants in this Place and in Philadelphia have under consideration, whether to import goods from Great Britain or not," but he adds: "The party in opposition to the present administration join with the people of Boston in measures to prevent importation." After mentioning the attack on the Boston importer (see May 10), Cullen continues: "I do not think the design of nothing of the other. Otherwise I believe it would have been prevented—The parties are much exasperated against each other, I hope the public peace will be preserved, and the issue will be favourable to the Government."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 214-15.

The governors of King’s College petition the common council, as they did on Jan. 7, 1767 (M. C. C., VII: 51-52), for the water lots fronting their ground in the West Ward, free of any quitrent. They state that "the East River is daily wasting away," and it is necessary to improve these water lots without delay. In case the board has reason to alter their former "indulgent sentiments" in favour of this projected improvement, the petitioners ask for a grant of these water lots 200 feet into the river, "on such moderate terms and quit Rents as may with Confidence be Expected by the Inhabitants of the Island, and the greatest care being taken by any person who have the power and means thus to Contribute to its promotion, without Charge or Expense to themselves." The petition is granted.—Ibid., VIII: 215-16. Drafts of these water lots were subsequently granted to the board by the city clerk on June 25, and approved (Ibid., VIII: 221). On Aug. 16 (p. vii), —Ibid., VIII: 226. On Dec. 5, a committee of the college governors formally thanked the common council.—Ibid., VII: 248.

A petition from the grandchildren of Jacob Boden, one of the original grantees mentioned in the grant of Hunter’s Key, states that "the said Jacob Boden, in his last Will and Testament, May devised unto Hendricus Boden (the father of the said Petitioners) the House & Ground on Rotten Row situated at present between the houses of David Provost and Captain Kennedy. The petitioners, believing he has been thus treated, and also because there is a grant of the water lot "adjoining their upland, on the same Conditions the other Water Lots there have been granted." The petition is granted.—M. C. C., VIII: 217-18. The "Engrossed Grant" was signed by the mayor on March 1, 1771.—Ibid., VIII: 268.

of Liberty [see June 4]. My own merit out of the question, I June 6 imagine the respect you have for my mettle companion, will in- sure me a welcome reception amongst you. Sons of Liberty, foes to Tyranny, avowed Entreprenuers, Chivalrous Merchants, Guardians of the Liberties of America—To you I call, and with a friendly voice—Listen attentively to the words that shall proceed from my marble mouth, and treasure them up in your unfeeling hearts—I have bellowed for you both in the lower and upper house of the British Senate until my guts are worn to fiddlestrings, and the extremities of my body, thro' the exasperating pain of the gout, are petrified to stone.—Your views and mine have been always similar. The distress of my country was the occasion of my emerging from my original obscurity—had England never bled I had never been a Peer—had the Highland Thane never been a prime minister, I had never been a patriot.—Be advised by me to take care of your own interest, and be convinced from my experience, that the most successful fishing is carried on in troubled waters—Let the mechanics cry punic faith, take no notice of them.—Let the Pelibians murmer, and if the French and Indians are now too pacific to take off their scalps, you can disarm them, which will answer the same end.—Be courteous my friends, Do not blemish your country, and is not my statue for ever with you? I shall say more when properly fixed upon my pedestal” (see Sept. 7).—From a photostat in the N. Y. Pub. Library (Evening of the 7th June).

The common council grants permission to the inhabitants of Montgomery Ward and of the Out Ward “to fill up the slip adjoining the Lott of Anthony Shackleby on one side and the Lott of Peter Earl on the other side, so far as to Range with Cherry Street,”—C. P. A., 23, 359, Vol. I.

A number of merchants and mechanics call upon the committee appointed (see March 13, 1769) to inspect into the importation of goods. It is apparent that they are not in sympathy with the views of the citizens who met on May 30 (q.v.), because they request that the “sense of this city should be taken by subscription, whether the Importation Agreement of Boston and Philadelphia, and receive their Answer by return of Express, when if this Agreement should be rejected by the other Colonies, the Sense of this Town will be again taken.”—N. Y. Merc., June 18, 1770. See July 5.

This notice is published in New York: “Whereas a Number of Persons have been put under a great Importation Agreement at a strange Importation of Goods from Great-Britain; have entered into a Scheme, to frustrate the laudable Endeavours of those Patriotic Merchants, and Inhabitants of this City, who are determined to continue, and sup- port the Non-Importation Agreement, if carried into Execution, will not only inflame upon this Colony, (for so base a Deser- tion of the other Colonies, at this critical Juncture) but will un- doubtedly be the Means of inslaving the whole Continent. It is therefore requested that every Friend to the Liberties of his Country, will not fail to meet in the Fields, at 12 o’clock this Day, in order to fall upon a proper Method to counteract such a Design. The Public are cautioned not to sign any Paper, till a general Determination upon this Matter.

An agreement regarding importation also bears this date. Whether it was drawn up by the meeting in the Fields, or by an opposing faction, does not appear. The subscribers to this paper promise to import, after Dec. 1, all the articles which are made free of duty by the Act of April 25, 1767, but not to import tea until the tax shall be taken off. “If any Goods shall arrive con- trary to this and our former Agreement, they shall be re-shipped immediately. And any Persons, Masters of Vessel or others, that shall import, or cause a Consignment of any dutiable Goods shall be deemed Enemies to the Colonies, and treated accordingly.”

The concluding paragraph states: “But that this Agreement shall June not take Place until we desire the Concurrence of Boston and Phila- delphia, and receive their Answer by return of Express, when if this Agreement should be rejected by the other Colonies, the Sense of this Town will be again taken.”

A vendue is advertised to be held on this day at the Merchants’ June 16 Coffee House, of “69 Years Lease of the Wind-mill in the Bowery Lane, near this City, with five Lots of Ground, two Houses thereon, and a good Garden . . .”—N. Y. Merc., June 11, 1770.

“On Academy of the Liberal Arts,” under the tuition of William Adams, is advertised to open at Harlem on this date.—N. Y. Merc., June 11, 1770.

The 27th regiment of foot is reviewed by Gen. Gage, who is “much pleased with their Behaviour on the Occasion.”—N. Y. Merc., June 25, 1770.

Mayor Hicks communicates to the common council that the city members of the assembly and the governor’s council desire the statue of Pitt [see June 4] to be erected in Wall St., “opposite to the Houses of John Thumman and Evert Bancker, nearly where the pump [see July 25, 1829] now stands.” The board gives per- mission for its location there.—M. C. G., VII. 210.

James Parker dies in Burlington, N. J., and is buried at Wood- bridge, N. J.—N. Y. Jour., July 2, 1770. His birthplace was Wood- bridge. For a sketch of his life and work, see footnote by O’Calla- nan in N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII. 221. Besides his professional con- cerns, he was engaged in various public employments, among that of “Comptroller and Secretary of the General Post-Office for the Northern District of the British Colonies.”—Pik., citing Thomas, Hist. of Printing in Am. (1810), I: 121-22.

1180, among which are the principal inhabitants, declared for importation, about 200 were natural or unwilling to declare their determination, and a few a distinction declared in opposition to it."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 217; broadside issued at New York, Dec. 20, 1777. Alexander Colden, in a letter to Anthony Todd, secretary to the postmaster-general, on July 11, described the resulting occurrences in New York City.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 222-23. The packet sailed on July 11 (p. 94).

This notice, "By Order of a Number of the Inhabitants," is issued: "Whereas a small Number of Persons met last Night in a private Manner, at the House of Mr. Bolton, in order to nominate Persons to take the Sense of the Inhabitants,—Whether an Importation shall take Place, notwithstanding the Merchants and Inhabitants of Boston, Connecticut, Jersey, and Philadelphia, have, in the most solemn manner, declared their firm Determination to abide by the Non-Importation Agreement, until the Act imposing a Duty on Tea, is repealed: And as this is a Matter of the utmost Importance to the Liberties of North-America, no private Set of Men have a right to determine on a Mode, by which the Citizens are to give their Voices, on a Question, pregnant with the most dangerous Consequences to the Freedom of Americans.—This is therefore to notify every Friend to this Country of all Ranks, to meet at 12 o’clock, A.M. next Day, (being Saturday the 21st) in order to determine, whether the Sentiments of the People is to be taken, and in what Mode, on the above Subject.—In the mean Time, every Friend to the Cause of American Liberty, is cautioned against signing Papers that originated from an inconsiderable Number of President’s (made from the Library Co. of Phila.) in the N. Y. Pub. Library (Evans, 1785).

A disturbance arises between the two factions of the Sons of Liberty. This affair was described by "A Citizen," who, from the character of his letter, must have had strong loyalist tendencies, and whose absolute fidelity of Northern Abeam. was manifest. The disturbance took place in the city hall and resolved to refuse to accept the opinion of the city. They assembled later at the tavern of Jasper Drake, where they erected a flag as a signal of rendezvous and, "after carousing and drinking very plentifully, and heating themselves with liquor, in the tavern, and in the streets, they sailed out in the evening to put their project in execution, carrying with them musick, colours, and staffs, upon which were labels fixed with the inscription of Liberty, and Non-importation, headed by a number of that faction." Elias Desbrosses, a city magistrate, and others, attempted to disperse the mob, who used sticks, clubs, and stones; the magistrates, according to this writer, being unarmed except for a few walking sticks.—N. T. Merc., July 23, 1770.

Another meeting was held on July 25 (p. 9), at Hamden Hall to protest against the conduct of "those who have broke the Non-Importation Agreement." This protest was left "at the House of Mr. Jasper Drake," where signatures were desired.—Ibid., July 30, 1770.

The same issue of the Mercury contains a thrust at the conservat-ives in the form of an announcement from the inhabitants of the city of Philadelphia (see July 90). Jasper Drake Again, in a letter to Governor Bradford, for the more aggressive faction of the "Sons of Liberty," was, in 1774 (see Mar. 14), on the East River near Beekman Slip.

A New Yorker writes that a "majority" of the people in the city have voted to resume importation from Great Britain except in regard to tea (see July 10). He says that the authorities are "protesting and treating it as if the public was at war with the government accordingly." He adds: "it is expected they will give strict orders to their correspondents, masters of vessels, and others, not to ship or take on board any tea or other article whatsoever subject to duty for the purpose of raising a revenue in America."—Upcott Coll., in N. Y. P. L. 58. 3, July 10.

DockAGE of the merchants in New York wrote to the committee of Philadelphia: "we are directed to acquaint you, that the Sense of our Inhabitants has been again taken [see June 11 and July 3]... and as there appeared a great Majority for import- ing every thing, except such Articles as are, or may hereafter be subject to Duty for the Purpose of raising a Revenue in America [see July 7], and in consequence thereof, many Orders for Goods may be sent by the Packet to sail To-morrow or next Day; we are ordered to give you the most early Advice respecting this on every Side. If your Merchants should chuse to send any Orders, they may avail themselves of a Vessel, which, we, hear, will be ready to sail from your Port for London, on Saturday next."—N. T. Jour., July 19, 1770.

For answers to this, see July 11.

An unsuccessful effort is made by loyalists to break the non-importation agreement.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 218-20.

The merchants of Philadelphia write in answer to the letter from New York (see July 10): "We are sorry to find... that a Majority of your City, have determined to abide by the Non-Importation Agreement; for a Measure which we think will be prejudicial to your own, and the Liberties of all America.—Arguments are now vain—to Posteriority, and to your Country, you must answer for the Step you have now taken. You have certainly weakened the Union of the Colonies, on which depends, and will thereby strengthen the Hands of our Enemies, and encourage them to prosecute their Designs against our common Liberty. We cannot forbear telling you, that however you may colour your Proceedings, we think you have, in the Day of Trial, deserted the Cause of Liberty and your Country." A letter from Princeton, dated July 15, stated that when the students received news of the action of New York, they went in procession to a Place fronting the College, and burnt the Letter by the Hands of a Haugman, hired for the Purpose; with hearty Wishes, that the Names of all Promoters of such a daring Breach of Faith, may be blazoned in the Eyes of every Lover of Liberty, and that they be handed down to Posterity, as Betrayrs of their Country."—N. T. Jour., July 19, 1770. According to a letter from Connecticut, dated July 6, 1770, the people there thought it very astonishing that New Yorkers, who had been the first to sign the agreement and had been very sharp in their reproof of all delinquents, should now "flinch, turn back, and be the first and foremost to break the measure so interesting and important, and thereby enslave all America with themselves."—N. T. Jour., July 19, 1770.

The "Earl of Halifax," packet-boat, sails with the mail for Falmouth. "She carries Orders from the Merchants here for a general Importation of Goods, except the single Article Tea, (on which the Duty laid by the Parliament for raising a Revenue in America remains unenforce’d) and all other Goods on which a Duty for the like Purpose may be laid. These Orders are in conse-quence of a late Alteration in the Non-Importation Agreement, which, since the last Session of Congress, and even before, they had refused their consent to, has been made, upon the subscription [see July 7] of about 800 of the Inhabitants, which the opposite Party, who were against the Alteration, say is but about a fourth Part of the People who had a Right to vote upon this Occasion; but who think- ing the Proceedings of the inhabitants will induce them to publish a protest [see July 25] with their Names sub-scribed, as also of the principals on the other Side."—N. T. Merc., July 16, 1770.

In the Bauckler Library, in N. Y. P. L. Library (box B-G, fol. 59, 59b, 5b, & 5c, and Jour. of surveys of the hills, one bearing this date and one 1792, by "F. M." (Maarschalkey), and "G. B." (Bauckler); they show the first almshouse, town, and bridewell. See also June 21, 1774.
Hillsborough, writing to the Earl of Dunmores, says: "As His Majesty's ship 'Tweed,' which is designed for Your Lordship on New York is (I understand) now ready for the Sea, I enclose to Your Lordship's Maj'Y instructions for your guidance and direction in the administration of that Govern' and I am to signify . . . that you should prepare to embark with as much dispatch as the health of His Majesty and private affairs will permit.

"I have the satisfaction to requite your Lordship that His Maj'Y hath been graciously pleased to direct . . . that a Salary of £2000 per annum should be paid to your Lordship from the date of your Commission, out of the Revenue arising in America by the duty upon Tea; and I am to signify . . . His Maj'Y's commands, that the present Salary, or an allowance whatsover from the Assembly of New York . . . and it is His Maj'Y's pleasure that a majoyt of the perquisites and Emoluments of the Govern' of New York be accounted for and paid to your Lordship from the date of your Commission to the time of your arrival."—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII. 223.

A notice in the Post-Bay states that, as the letter from the committee of merchants in New York to those in Philadelphia (see July 10) has asserted that the people here are in favour of importing goods, "the friends of the non-importation agreement, submit the same to the public as the most probable judges in a case which concerns American liberty in general. . . . To enable the world to determine whether the resolution to import goods from Great Britain is founded on the opinion of a majority of the inhabitants of this city it will be proper to observe, that . . . the militia roll of this city, as has been stated, in the last year of its existence, it is therefore highly probable that at this day, could we be favoured with a [sic] militia act, the number of effectives would amount at least to 3000. And yet the public will be surprised, when they are informed, that notwithstanding the greatest pains taken to induce numbers to prejude so important a cause . . . not more than 794 . . . have acceded to the resolution to import."

The paper named the names of those for and of those against the agreement.—N. Y. Post-Bay, July 23 and July 30, 1770.

In accordance with a printed advertisement for the purpose, a number of inhabitants meet at Hanmer Hall where a protest against the conduct of those who have broken the non-importation agreement (see July 11) is read, unanimously agreed to, and signed. "It is hoped that the Counties, will likewise protest; as it will be the only Means to preserve the Reputation of the Colony which has been mainly prostituted to serve the vile Purposes of a Party."—N. Y. Jour., July 26, 1770.

The following "Card" appears in the Mercury: "The Inhabitants of the City of Philadelphia, present their Compliments to the Inhabitants of New-York, and beg they will send them their Old Liberty Pole, as they can imagine they cao, by their late Conduct [see July 11] have no further Use for it."—N. Y. Merc., July 30, 1770.

A committee appointed by the common council "to examine the State of the New Gai & Alms house" reports upon the need of certain alterations and repairs. Among those proposed is "That the west end of the new building is very convenient to erect Cells for the mad people instead of the Cuddys [lockers] taken out of the hot house" (see April 7, 1766).—From the original report in a memorial file labelled "Filed Papers, 1700-1800," city clerk's record-room. "Agreeable to a Report filed this day," the board appoints a committee to make the repairs.—M. C. G., VII. 223.

Inhabitants of the city who live in and near "Hannover Square" state in a petition to the common council that they conceive "The Alley Leading from Hannover Square to the Slot [see Pls. 34 and 64, Vol. II] as a very Great Nuisance . . . as the Lives of many of the Inhabitants are often endangered in passing through the said street, it has occasioned meetings Cattle running through the same." They ask that the board consent to buy land along the west side of the alley, which Archibald Kennedy is willing to sell, "to make a good and Convenient street."—From the original MS, endorsed "filed Augt the 10th 1770" in book No. 6, in city clerk's office. At the meeting of the board on the same day it was agreed, "in Case a purchase of said land should take Effect," to contribute £100 toward said purchase.—M. C. G., VII. 224-25.

No further record appears, however. It was not until 1850 that Hannover St. was formally opened.—M. C. G. (MS), LXXIII. 36.

The above all orders that the treasurer pay Peter Cour- tendus £14, "to be by him applied towards assisting several poor Inhabitants in defraying the Expense of regulating & paying of Crown [Liberty] Street [see July 12, 1769] in the Westward."—Aug. M. C. G., VII. 223. See, further, June 13, 1771.

An equestrian statue of George III (see June 4) is erected in Bowling Green. In its report of the occasion, "This beautiful Statue is made of Metal, richly gilt, being the first Equestrian One of his present Majesty, and is the workmanship of that celebrated Statuari, Mr. Milton, of London."—N. T. Merc., Aug. 20, 1770. In the account as given by the Post-Bay, it is said the statue was "used as a pedestal for a statue of Marcus Aurelius in Rome."—N. T. Post-Bay, Aug. 20, 1770.

Colden, describing the occasion to Hillsborough under date of Aug. 18, said: "I was attended on this occasion by the Gentlemen of the Counsell and members of the Assembly then in town. The Magistrates of the City, the Clergy of all denominations and very large number of the principal inhabitants. Our loyalty & firm attachment and affection to his Majesty's person was expressed by drinking the King's health & a long continuance of his Reign, under a discharge of 33 pieces of cannon & band of musick playing at the same time from the Ramparts of the Fort. The General and the officers of the Army gave us the honor of their Company on the occasion. The whole Company walked in procession from the fort round the statue while the spectators expressed their joy by loud acclamations the Procession having returned with me to the Fort & to the Ceremony at the Bath.[Mercury.

For the razing subsequently erected around Bowling Green, see Nov. 22. For improvements in the vicinity, see Oct. 24, 1771. For the demolition of the statue, see July 9, 1776. This statue and that of Pitt (see Sept. 7) were the first statues erected in New York City.

The city grants to King's College the water lots extending from the rear of its lands, between Murray and Barclay Streets, to a line 200 feet beyond low-water mark, with the obligation that it shall make for the city a street along each side to be the extensions of Barclay and Murray Streets into the Hudson River the whole length of the lots, also First Street across the lots at high-water mark, Second Street at low-water mark, and Third Street fronting the 200 feet limit.—City Grants, Liber D: 86.

During a storm, "The Philadelphia Stage Boat . . . lying at Anchor back of Nutton Island" is struck by lightning and her mast shattered.—N. T. Jour., Sept. 6, 1770; Upcott Coll., IV: 75. For the "Stage-Wagons" to Philadelphia from Paulus Hook with which such a "Stage Boat" doubtless connected, see May 28, 1767.

Edward Bardin, who "for several Years past kept Tavern in this City," notifies the public that he has "taken the large commodious House, known by the Name of the King's Arms Tavern, near White-Hall, long kept by Mrs. Steel, which he will again open as a Tavern" on this date.—N. T. Jour., Aug. 23, 1770. His stay was brief. Before Dec. 10, 1770, Bardin had left and the house was again advertised to be let or sold. It was described as "furnished with excellent fixtures, viz. in the Kitchen a large good copper boiler, well fixed; a new metal perpetual oven, with proper shelves, tables, stoves, &c., a good yard, pump and cistern; also a set of bells well hung; and if left to a tavern keeper, there stands a fine new barn, with a hundred sash-lights in it. For particulars, enquire of the printer, or of Mr. Carleton, in Broad street."—N. T. Merc., Dec. 10, 1770. Burns succeeded Bardin, but, by May 13, 1771 (p. 48), he was offering the house for rent having chattels and success with the tavern, as bad Bardin before him. The latter, on June 13, 1771, opened a tavern at St. Eustatia in the West Indies, "commonly known by the name of Denison's tavern."—N. T. Merc., July 8, 1771.

A public vendue is advertised to take place on this day at Sept. the 30th, the "Sign of the Fighting-Cocks, Whitehall."—N. T. Merc., Sept. 3, 1770. Evidently this tavern sign was removed from the old house on Water St. to the new site some time after 1766. See May 24, 1776.

John H. Livingston, from the Academy of Utrecht, arrives in New York, and is received by the consistory of the Dutch Church, by whom he has been called to be minister, in the English
The statue was mutilated by British soldiers on Nov. 30, 1777 (q.v.). After many removals from place to place (see March 7 and July 16, 1788; Aug. 3 and 12, 1811; 1841; 1843; April 26, 1847), the headless trunk was finally presented, on March 1, 1846 (q.c.), to the N. Y. Hist. Soc., where it is still preserved.

Samuel Francis announces his return to the Queen's Head Tavern, "As the best Clubs, and the greatest Entertainments in this City, were at the above Tavern, in the Time of the Subscriber, he flatters himself the Public are so well satisfied of his Ability to serve them, as to render the swelling of an Advertisement useless. . . . N. B. Dimmers and Suppers dressed to send out, for Lodgers and others, who live at a convenient Distance; also, Cakes, Tarts, Jellies, Whip Syllabubs, Baumgute Sweetmeats, &c. in any Quantity; cold Meat in small Quantities, Beef Stakes, &c at any Hour; Pickled Oysters for the West Indies or elsewhere." —N. Y. Jour., Sept. 17, 1776.

In the same Jour., Feb. 11, 1776, is a notice of the improvements in the Queen's Head Tavern, in Broad and Pearl Sts., which he purchased on Jan. 15, 1762 (q.v.). He had rented the house, first to John Jones (N. Y. Gen., Nov. 14, 1765), and later to Bolton & Sigell, who had been proprietors since Jan. 12, 1767. After 1770, Francis continued keeping tavern at this Queen's Head Hotel till the eulogium and brief history of his tavern, see Landmark Map. Ref. Key, III, 978.

Extracts from the State of Lord Dunmore's Case laid before Council in England, 1773, 6 pp. folio, in Smith's handwriting.

Opinion of Mr. Dunning (an English attorney retained by Colden) "on Lord Dunmore's Case ag'g Lt. Gov'r Colden 12 Aug(?) 1773."—Wm. Smith MSS., folio 178, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

"Ordered . . . a Committee to meet and Confer with the Committee of the Governors of the college in order to have the Quitt rent reemed that is reserved in the Letters patent for the Lands lately granted for the use of this Corporation."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See, further, Oct., 14, 1771.

The governors of the college give an entertainment in honour of Gov. Dunmore.—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 16, 1770.

The common council orders that "a Temporary fence be forthwith made Round the Bowling Green of post and Rails, not to exceed five Rails high."—M. G. C., VII: 244-45. A payment of £13 to Henry Fielding "for sundry posts & Rails" for this fence was ordered on Jan. 2, 1771 (ibid., VII: 254). Manifestly this temporary wooden fence was to protect the king's statue recently placed on the Green (see Aug. 16), and to prevent the littering up of this space.—See May 3, 1771. Ultimately the expense for permanently "railing in" the king's statue was met by the assembly (see Jan. 27, 1770, and May 8, 1771). For the contract to erect the iron fence, which still stands, see May 8, 1771.

The corporation decides that "the Common Council do for the future meet on the first Wednesday in every Month to Issue Warrants, for discharging such debts as shall be due from this Corporation."—M. G. C., VII: 245.

The common council ordered "that the Committee of the Bridewell and Alms house, provide three Iron Stoves, two for the use of the Bridewell and one for the use of the Alms house."—M. G. C., VII: 245. See June 6, 1771.

The principal lawyers of the city organize "The Moot," a 23 club for discussing legal questions. William Livingston is elected the first president, and William Smith vice president. The Moot continued in existence until January, 1775. During that time it "materially influenced the judgment of the Supreme Court."—Sedgwick, Life of William Livingston (1815), 151. In the discussions, which were conducted with great regularity and order, Peter Van Schaack, the Corporation's counsel, "made a conspicuous figure" (see April 24) and expressed satisfaction that "they can securely rely on your Lordship's Countenance and Protection."—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 5, 1770.

Colden writes to Hillsborough regarding his unreasonableness when Dunmore demanded of him "a moiety of the perquisites and Emolu- ments of the Gover'n of New York . . . from the date of his Commission [Jan. 2] to the time of his arrival" (see July 16). Colden reviews the precedents to show that "Every oldest Coun- cillor or Lieut' Gov't has received and retained the whole profits of Govern', from the death of one Gov't to the arrival of another," and points out to Hillsborough the bad effect which such demand will have on the minds of the people.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 250-53; 257-58. Regarding Colden's claim to "the whole profits of Government from the Death of one Governor until the arrival of another," see the voluminous papers in the case among Colden papers in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1877), X: 232-339. On Jan. 15, 1771, Dunmore refused to accept compensation from the assembly "after the rate of £2000 per annum," beginning with the date of his arrival, Oct. 18, 1770 (p. 5). In the middle of March, 1771, he submitted his case to the judges of the supreme court, and about a month later they decided against him.—Colden Papers, N. Y. Hist. Soc. Notwithstanding this opinion, Dun- more thought he had a clear case. He finally determined to send the papers to the ministry.—Ibid., 325. No decision appears of record.

In this case William Smith (Jr.), was counsel for Dunmore, and, among the Smith MSS. in the N. Y. Pub. Library, are the following documents relating to the case:
1779. "for materials found & work done to the Coffy House Bridge, fly Dec. 5 market & ferry stairs," and the payment of 557 "for the costs Charges & expenses of additional work done at pecks slip for the Corporation, to the further sum of 556 in full of all demands against this Corporation for building & finishing the Wharf of pecks slip" (see Sept. 14).---M. C. C., VII: 247.

6 Colden, in a letter to Hillborough, states that commerce between the British and the colonies has been renewed, largely through the influence of New York merchants who had his personal encouragement.---N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 257.

Duurnore writes to Hillborough of the defenseless condition of the city.---N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 259.

10 Assembl. Jour. Dec. 19, 1770. Mr. Ely, this day, is appointed Secretary and Comptroller, of the General Post Office for the Northern District of North-America, in the room of James Parker, Esq; Printer, deceased.---N. Y. Merc., Dec. 10, 1770. Alexander, who was the eldest son of Lieut.-Gov. Cadwallader Colden, continued to be post master of the New York District until his death in 1773. He had served as deputy post master as early as July 30, 1753 (p. 60).

11 A newspaper advertisement reads: "To be sold at public vendue, at the Merchant's Coffee-House, on Monday the 31st day of December last, the lease of a certain lot, piece and parcel of ground, on which the theatre or play house now stands, together with the buildings thereon now erected, containing in length on both sides, ninety two feet, and in breadth in front and rear forty eight feet, all English measure."---N. Y. Merc., Dec. 10, 1770. The dimensions given above tally so closely with those of the Chapel St. Theatre (see Apr. 2, 1764), as to lead to the belief that this advertisement refers to the same theatre. Some portions of the building apparently escaped demolition, on May 3, 1766 (p. 9).

In his first address to the assembly, Gov. Duurnore says: "I esteem myself peculiarly fortunate in having been appointed to the command of this province, whose example has been the happy means of renewing that mutual intercourse between the mother country and her colonies [see July 11], which is so much the interest of both to preserve uninterrupted; this salutary reconciliation effected by the people of this province, cannot fail of endearing them, in a particular manner, to our most gracious Sovereign."---Assembl. Jour. (1770-1), 3-4. On Dec. 18, the assembly answered: "The representatives of the people regard with the highest satisfaction this peculiar mark of his Majesty's patronage attention to the welfare and happiness of this faithful colony, in the appointment of a nobleman of your lordship's distinguished rank to preside over us, while your lordship's amiable character affords the most pleasing prospect of a happy administration."---Ibid. (1770-1), 13.

Hillborough informs Dunmore of the latter's appointment by the king as governor of Virginia in the place of Lord Botetourt, deceased.---N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 286.

13 Alexander McDougall (see Feb. 21) is ordered to appear before the general assembly to answer a charge that he was the author of the broadside of Dec. 16, 1769 (p. 4). He contends that he can not reply to the question, "whether or not he was the author or publisher of the same," since "the grand jury and house of assembly had declared the paper to be a libel. Secondly, that as he was under prosecution in the supreme court, he conceived it would be an infraction of the laws of Justice, to punish a British subject twice for one offence." These words are deemed "a contempt of the authority of this house," and McDougall is therefore ordered to be taken into custody---Assembl. Jour. (1770-1), 7-8. On Dec. 14, the sergeant at arms reported that he had "conveyed Alexander M'Dougall, to the common goal of the city."---Ibid.

17 The public is informed that "John Anthony Beau, Engraver and Printer, in the sign of Lord John Gainsborough, is come to prac- tise to learn, the Art of Drawing, in all its Branches. He engraves and does all sorts of Chisel Work, at the most reasonable Rates. Whoever will favour him with their Commands, are desired to apply to Mr. Lewis Fueter, Gold and Silver Smith, opposite to the Coach House."---N. Y. Jour., Dec. 13, 1770. "He was evidently an engraver upon copper-plates; this Lady, one of many others of his trade, he may have engraved upon copper."---Stauffer, Am. En- gravers on Copper and Steel, I: 19.

A motion is made that the board "either recall off the Common Council Chamber or shut the Doors, during the sitting of the Common Council, as formerly." By a vote of 8 to 5, the council decides that the doors "for the future he Shut during their Sitting."---Dec. 17. M. C. C., VII: 252.

The assembly resolves that "Edmund Burke, Esq. of London, be and hereby is appointed agent for this colony at the court of Great Britain, in the room of Robert Charles, Esq. deceased, and that for his services as such, there be allowed to him . . . five hundred pounds per annum."---Assembl. Jour. (1770-1), 48. Prior, in his Memoir of the Life and Character of the Rt. Hon. Edmund Burke, 123, erroneously states that this appointment was made in November 1771. Sparks says that the correspondence of Burke with the assembly of New York during his agency is not known to exist in the United States, except one letter on the Quebec bill in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Society, and that such correspondence has been "studiously excluded from all the publications of his writings in England."---Sparks, Gouverneur Morris, I: 51 (note).

Smith writes: "from all my experience hitherto, the Govt is a very weak Man in Matters of Business."---Wm. Smith's Diary (M. S.), IV. On Jan. 16, 1771, he adds: "This poor Creature exposes himself daily—How can the Dignity of Government be maintained by so helpless a Mortal, utterly ignorant of the Nature of Business of all Kinds."---Ibid.

Capt. McDougall issues a statement to the public in which he revises in the facts of his case the misconception of the public opinion on the broadside (see Dec. 16, 1769), the legislature's proceedings (see Dec. 19, 1769), the examination of Parker and his apprentices (see Feb. 7), his own refusal to give bail, and consequent imprisonment (see Feb. 21), and his experiences before the general assembly (see Dec. 13).---N. Y. Jour., Jan. 24 and 31, 1771.

The "Long Room in the Exchange" is designated as the place for the annual meeting, on Jan. 14, of the "Marine Society of the City of New-York."---N. Y. Jour., Jan. 3, 1771.

The population of the city and county of New York is 21,856, of whom 18,726 are whites. The population of the province is 168,017, of whom 148,124 are whites. Gov. Tryon gives authority to the census by his signature.---N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 457; Doc. Hist. N. Y. (470) ed., I: 474. This was the last census of the city and county of New York before the Revolution.

The item from the British Admiralty Records cited in the description of Pl. 50, I: 364, as of this date, has been entered in the Chronology under its exact date, April 17, 1776 (p. 9).

Warrants are ordered to be issued for the payment of $51514 Jan. 2, John Watts "for lodging four Indian Chiefs from the 14th of September last to the 24th of October following," and for the payment of $52150 for to John McComb "for paving at the End of the Coffy house Bridge & for paving Stone & Sand lound."---M. C. C., VII: 254.

Several leases of "Common Land at Indinbarack" (see July 8, 1765) file a petition with the common council, for a deduction in rent. They complain they have been "much deceived" as to the "Quality of their lands and 'their Capacity for receiving Ma- nure and Cultivation." Furthermore, "with the Rain and Springs about the Land, the Cellars are filled with Water, and the Land rendered almost unfit for profitable Use, for about Six or seven Months in the Year." They ask the board to "mitigate" half their rent from the time of their taking their leases, and to extend their term.---From original petition in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room, endorsed "Read & filed March the 1st, 1771" M. C. C., VII: 267. For the action of the board, see March 12.

To every admirer of Real Curiosities, The noted William Partridge begs leave to acquaint the ladies, gentlemen, etc. that he has taken a large and commodious room at Mr. McDougall's at the sign of Lord John Gainsborough, in the Passage, fitted up in a genteel Manner, where he proposes to divert the Company every Monday—Wednesday and Friday, by exhibiting his Art of Dexterity of Hand after a new Method different from other Per- formers. Likewise he will make it his chief Study to divert the Company by introducing Mr. Punch and his merry family, with new Alterations every Evening. Likewise his Italian Shake, so much admired in Europe. He has taken proper Care to have the Room well aired and all Accommodations for the Reception of those who choose to favour him with their Company.

"N. B. Gentlemen and ladies that chose to have a private Performance, by giving timely Notice will be waited on."---N. Y.
Gentlemen

The alarming Misfortunes of the British, are truly distressing to a people, who have so long been the Objects of some affection, and have been so amiable in their conduct, that we cannot help feeling some sympathy for their misfortunes. We are sensible of the difficulties in which they are placed, and of the consequent miseries of which they are likely to suffer. We have, therefore, considered your case as a common cause, and are inclined to contribute what might be done on a national scale. The want of resources is, however, the greatest obstacle to our assistance, and we are therefore inclined to oppose a plan which appears to us impracticable.

We are, Gentlemen,

PL. 42.

Merc, Supplement, Jan. 7, 1771. Duncan McDougal had a tavern Jan. with the sign of Lord John Murray on "Fair or Nassau-Street, near 7 the Moravian Meeting." In 1769, when the house and two lots were tresented for sale—ibid., May 15, 1769. The site of this tavern is fixed still more clearly by an advertisement of Isaac Garnier’s, in 77 of a house and lot on Golden Hill, and in Nassau St., "opposite the sign of Lord John Murray, and the house where the 78 the tenants have kept their lodging."—ibid., Jan. 14, 1771.

An advertisement reads: "To the Publick. Likenesses Painted for a reasonable Price, by A. Delanoj, jun. who has been Taught by the celebrated Mr. Benjamin West, in London. N. B. Is to be spoken with opposite Mr. Direk Schuyler’s, at his Fathers."—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 15, 1771. An advertisement of H. D. Peston for the grant of 10 of two water lots "fronting his Houses & Ground on Hunters Key" (see Pl. 42, Vol. I), and a petition of Cornelius Wynkoop for the same lots, the common council decides "that the granting the prayer of either of said Petitions will be very Injurious to the publick, and therefore the same are to be refused: the only advice is,
"Coming to the markets in that part of this City." The board therefore rejects the petitions and resolves that the two water lots be reserved "for the use of the publick, & appropriated to no other use or purpose whatsoever."—M. C. C., VII: 235.

The assembly resolves, "that they be allowed unto his Excel-17 lency the Right Honorable John, Earl of Dunmore, for his administering the government of this colony" from Oct. 13, 1770, to Sept. 1, 1771, "after the rate of $2000 per annum."—Assem-24 (1770-1), 33. For Dunmore’s action in regard to this, see
Jan. 18.

Gov. Dunmore sends this message to the assembly: "Seeing, by the proceedings of your house yesterday [p. 11], that a sum was voted for my salary as Governor of this province, I must acquaint you, that his Majesty has appointed me a salary out of his treasury [see July 16, 1770], in consequence of which, I am not at liberty to receive it from the Assembly; therefore, I desire, that the article which relates to it, in your resolues, may be omitted."—Assem. Jour. (1770-1), 41.

The board having agreed to lease without public bidding the Nassau Ferry for three years, Samuel Waldron, the present lessee (see Oct. 17, 1770), appears before the common council in regard for it. He is informed that he may have the lease at the rate of $550 per annum, and asks leave to consider the offer.—M. C. C.,

Gov. Dunmore, in a message to the assembly, writes: "I have ordered an estimate to be laid before you of the expense that will at some alterations, which I cannot dispence with being made, for the accommodation of my family, within and about the Fort; and I am induced to hope you will take this matter into your consideration, as I think they are only such that you will easily perceive to be requisite."—Assem. Jour. (1770-1), 47. For the further action of the assembly, see Feb. 16.

The mayor produces before the common council an indictment found by the last supreme court "against the Oswego Market as a Nuisance." The indictment recites that this market-house, 150 feet long and 20 feet 1½ inches broad, stands "in the middle" of Broome, whereby this thoroughfare "is greatly obstructed, Narrowed Strained & spoiled," so that the king’s subjects cannot "go return pass road & labour with their horses Coaches, Carriages as they ought & were wont to do, without great Danger of their lives To the great Damage & Common Nuisance, & to the endangering the lives of many living in this tier of houses. Subjects of the King . . . " The attorney-general having moved for a writ to the sheriff "to prostrate without Delay the Oswego Market, as a Nuisance," and the mayor having sought time to consider whether the city would defend the indictment, it was ordered by the supreme court, on motion of the attorney-general, "that unless the said Indictment is traversed within twenty Days, that a Writ to abate the Same Nuisance do issue to the Sheriff of the City & County of New York." On motion of the mayor, the common council agrees to this, appointing an indictment, and appoints a commitee "to Employ Mr. Duane as Council in Defence."—M. C. C., VII: 259-60. See, further, Jan. 29. See, also "Oswego Market
(first site)," in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 995; De Voe, Market
Booth, 274; and Min. Supreme Ct. (MS.), 1769-1777, p. 318.

A bill given on April 6, 1771 (2d Sess. 1), by the common council to the inhabitants of the West Ward to build a public market-house "in some Convenient Place in Thurmans Slip," a petition is presented to the board by Peter Meier, John Thurman, Jun., and others, stating that they are ready to carry the grant into execution; asking the board to appoint "to direct the Same."—From original petition, endorsed "Read & filed Jan. 24th 1771 & deferred for further Consideration," and filed in metal file No. 6, city clerk’s record-room. Accompanying this is a copy, attested Jan. 4, 1771, of the Minutes of April 6, 1770, showing the earlier grant. This action of the common Council is recorded in M. C. C., VII: 261. On Sept. 12, the petition was denied.—ibid., VII: 312.

Samuel Waldron, the lessee of the Nassau Ferry (see March 18, 1766), accepts the common council’s offer of the ferry for an additional three years at the annual rent of $550 (see Jan. 18).
M. C. C., VII: 260-61. Waldron died before the first year of his new lease had elapsed, and Nicholas Bogert succeeded him as lessee (see April 10, 1772).

Samuel Francis offers for sale his house called Vauhall, with the gardens and stables, the property consisting of 36 lots of the corporation, on lease from Trinity Church, of which 61 years still remain. Francis describes the house as containing "4 good rooms on a floor, with a large entrance and other conveniences, an excellent cellar, a very good Kitchen, and a large room 26 by 56 feet adjoining the house, with an arched ceiling, a convenient music gallery, two fire places and two entrances." He is unable, he says, to attend both his houses "in the manner he could wish," which is his reason for offering the house for sale.—N. T. Jour., Jan. 24, 1771. Francis was proprietor, also, of the Queen’s Head Tavern, on Broad and Pearl Sts. He did not succeed in disposing of Vauhall Gardens until Nov., 1771, when he removed his collection of wax works to the Queen’s Head Tavern.—N. T. Merc., Nov. 22, 1773. Erasmus Williams succeeded him, and renamed the resort Mount Pleasant. See June 6, 1774.

Mr. Duane having informed the mayor by letter that he "declined being concerned for this Corporation in defence of Indictment lately found by the . . . Supreme Court against the Oswego Market as a Nuisance" (see Jan. 24), Samuel Jones is offered the office of counsel and accepts.—M. C. C., VII: 262.
See July 29.

A storm does great damage to some of the wharves of the city.
Feb. 18. The Whitehall Ferry State is almost carried away, and the Wharf from thence to the first Corner Eastward, is entirely destroyed, as also part of Conticcis’s Dock and Cruger’s Wharf."— N. T. Merc., Feb. 11, 1771.

Trinity vestry appoints "a Committee to make a final Settle-mement of the agreement entered into between a former Committee of this Board and the Lutheran Congregation relative to a piece of Ground adjoining the Parsonage House and the Lutheran Church and that the Seal of this Corporation be affixed to any Deed or Instrument that may be necessary for that purpose." It is further ordered that "Aldermen [Eliza] Debroux [also a warder of the church] have power to employ Mr Hampton to repair the damage that was done to the Roof of S. Paul’s Church by the falling of the covering from the Tower and also to new Cover the same."—Trin.
Min. (MS.).

A city ordinance is passed forbidding butchers, buckstaves, and retailers from occupying the tables and benches in the Fly Market intended for the use of the country people.—M. C. C., VII: 264-65.

A payment of $62:161 is authorized by the common council for "an addition to the Albany Pier" (see Aug. 13, 1767), as M. C. C., VII: 261. For this paid said Lewis said Lord the King . . . " The attorney-general having moved for a writ to the sherif to prostrate without Delay the Oswego Market, as a Nuisance," and the mayor having sought time to consider whether the city would defend the indictment, it was ordered by the supreme court, on motion of the attorney-general, "that unless the said Indictment is traversed within twenty Days, that a Writ

Although unrecorded in the Minutes, inhabitants of the city present a petition to the common council that, in the event of the Oswego Market being removed, they may be given leave to erect a new market in the Fields at their own expense. They prefer to the North River as more convenient for them and others, "by being more in the Center of the City, the City's Tenants residing at and about Inclinn Barrack."—From the original MS., in box No. 6, in city clerk's record-room. See also De Voe, Market Book 275.

Likewise, a large number of carmen and other inhabitants, in a petition to the common council, dated "1771," state that they are informed the Oswego Market is to be removed, and that a petition has been presented "praying Liberty to erect a Market at your Lordship;" that they "daily receive money from the Country People for Cartage of their Produce to the said Market," and that "a Market being fixed at the North River will entirely deprive them of that Benefit." They claim that a market at the North River will be a detriment "to far the greatest part of the City;" and ask that the common council "will be pleased to grant Liberty to Erect a publick Market at a proper place in the Fields pursuant to the prayer of a former Petition."—From original petition in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room.

Another petition, in five parts (undated), is circulated and signed by hundreds of the inhabitants of the city, asking that "if the Oswego Market be removed the said Oswego Be restored in the Fields Instead Thereof."—From the original papers (MS.), in File 4, city clerk's record-room. For the result of these petitions, see Aug. 19.

In a letter to Hillborough, Gov. Dunmore says: "I transmit to Your Lordship the proposal of a number of German People settled in this Province, for the forming themselves into a company, to serve in conjunction with the Militia of the Colony, in case of an emergency; I presume Your lordship will think it right to give encouragement to their zeal and spirit; the emulation, which is observed to actuate all bodies of men, serving with others, never fails to produce good effects, & there cannot be the same objection made, which is common to Auxiliaries, these being established in the Country and their interest concerned in its safety."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII. 165-66. In May 4, Hillborough replied to this: "The spirited proposal of the Body of German Protestants in the City of New York . . . could not fail of being pleasing to the King, and although there is not now any occasion for their service in the Military Line, you will signify to them his Majesty's approbation of the Zeal, and the satisfaction it gave his Majesty to receive from so respectable a Body such declaration of sincere affection to his Royal Person and Government, and that the said de- duction, furthermore, is to continue "until the Expiration of their said Leases, provided they pay into the hands of the Chamberlain the Balance of such Arrears immediately, & discharge for the future all such Taxes & Impositions, as the said Premises shall from time to time be chargeable with."—M. C. C., VII. 270.

The anniversary of the repeal of the Stamp Act is celebrated "at the House of Mr. De La Montagne," where "a great Number of the principal Inhabitants of this City, Friends to Liberty and Trade, dined on an elegant Entertainment which was there prepared." Thirty toasts were drunk.—N. Y. Merc., March 25, 1771. This tavern was at the present 255-54 Broadway.

On March 25, poor debtors in prison thanked the "friendly brothers of St. Patrick" for their contribution sent to Mr. Coxo this day "to be laid out on necessities for their relief." They also thanked the "Sons of Liberty," Mr. Faulkner's for provisions and a "barrel of strong beer," and the "Sons of Liberty who met at Hamden Hall and sent provisions."—Ibid, March 25, 1771.

The committee appointed to investigate the encroachments made upon corporation lands by some of the Inhabitants of Harlem make their report. The common council of the Corporation, in the Banceller Collection, N. Y. Pub. Library (box B-G, folder 74). See also check-list of some of the more important plans in this collection, in Vol. I, p. 358.

The governor's message, recommending that provision be made for quartering troops (see Feb. 16), is read in the provincial council.—Col. Coun. Min. 484.
A motion is made "that as applications have been made to May this Corporation for the Grants of Water Lots fronting the Great Dock, this Board will previous thereto for the Course of the Streets to be Extended from the Exchange into the East River upon a Straight line." After a debate on the question, the motion is carried.—M. C. C., VII: 280.

In order that the Bowling Green, on which the King's statue has been erected (see Aug. 16), may be known as "A Receptacle of all the Rich of the Neighbourhood," the common council contracts with Richard Sharpe, Peter T. Curtenius, Gilbert Forbes and Andrew Lyall "to fence in the same with Iron Rails and a stone foundation . . . for the consideration of £500."—M. C. C., VII: 281. Payments for the same, totalling £434, were ordered on June 20, 1771, and Jan. 11, 1772 (ibid.: VII: 292-93). The final part payment on the latter date being "for making an Iron Fence [hence] Round the Bowling [Green], Sundry Lamps Irons & fixing them &c." A temporary wooden fence had been erected earlier (see Nov. 22, 1770). Among N. Y. M. S. (1761-1826) in N. Y. Hist. Soc. is a "Plan of the Ground as laid out to be ranged round the King's Statue. Scale 30 feet one Inch." It is endorsed "King's Statue." See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 968. For further improvements in the neighbourhood, see Aug. 22.

A committee is appointed "for preparing the draft of a plan for docking out the water Lots between Counties Key [Fly Market Slip] and Bedmans Slip."—M. C. C., VII: 180.

Francis Maehochclke and Henry Bogart, inspectors of flour, notify farmers and millers that, as there are frequent complaints of New York flour "being of a dark and brown colour, occasionally chiefly by the wheat not being well cleaned," hereafter all flour not made of "good clean wheat, and properly ground" will be condemned.—N. Y. Merc., May 6, 1771.

The committee of the constable of the Dutch Church appointed April 29 (p. 22) submits a plan of a New Tower and of repairs for the "Old Church" (on Garden St.). These will cost at least £500; but there is "no money in the Treasury," and the constable is not in a position to borrow any. It is therefore resolved "That if the congregation will supply sufficient funds," the committee is disposed to execute the plans. Domine Rizema is requested to draw up the heading of a subscription paper. This was prepared and approved on May 19.—Eccles. Rec., VI: 4200-1.

Regarding the sum subscribed, see June 9.

Cornelius Vandenbergh notifies the public that he "continues keeping a publick house, for the entertainment of all gentlemen travellers," at "the sign of the Bull's Head, in the Bowery Lane." He also offers pasture for horses, "at 1s. per night."—N. Y. Merc., May 6, 1771. For a history of the Bull's Head Tavern, see Dec. 15, 1755.

Resolved and Ordered that for the future all the Water Lots behind Trinity Church be leased for Fifty three years at the rent of three pounds 3 & 3/4 Annun for the first Twenty one years four pounds for the next Twenty one years and five pounds for the last Twenty one years with the usual Covenants."—Trin. Min. (MS.)

The "King's Arms" sign, which he carried from tavern to tavern, indicates loyalist tendencies, which may account for his unpopularity at this time.

A plow or "draft" of Turtle Bay (on the East River shore—see Pl. 59, Vol. 1), and of the neighbouring roads and landmarks, bearing this date, is made by Francis Maehochelk. It has the following inscription: "At the request of the Recorder Thomas Jones Esq' Chairman, & the other Gentlemen of the Committee, I have Surveyed the Farm commonly called Turtle Bay, granted by William Keist [Kidlet] 259 of April 1464 unto George Holmes & Thomas Hall, and find the same to be agreeable to the above description: Tho. Maehochelk," and the label "Filed Papers, 1700-1800," city clerk's record room. The map is reproduced in facsimile in Man. Coun. Com. (1860), opp. p. 570.

A letter from Olfson says: "I must not forget to tell you, that the Colony of New-York is in great Esteem in England, at least with all wise and good Men, for her prudent and loyal Conduct."—N. Y. Merc., May 20, 1771.

subject, see July 12, 1750). As a result of this, the committee had written a letter to the "Trustees and Freetholders of the Town of Harlem relatively to the Settlement from the City of New-York the Corporation of this City," and in answer the town of Harlem had made certain proposals which, in the opinion of the committee, ought to be adopted. The board thereupon orders "that the Committee Carry into Execution the several Matters by them recommended . . . as soon as possible, & Report to this Board the progress they shall make therein, with all Convenient Speed."—M. C. C., VII: 272-75. For the next report, see Jan. 9, 1772.

The Chamber of Commerce votes "to request the favour of Mr. 20 Colden to sit for his Picture to be put up in the Chamber as a Memorial to their gratitude." The heartburn-governour had secured the charter for the institution (see April 5, 1768).—Col. Recs. N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 126. Payment for the picture was made on Nov. 3, 1772 (q. v.).

The provincial council is notified that additional quarters for the troops are needed.—Col. Coun. Min., 485. See Feb. 16 and 25.

The council appoints Montague inspector of potash, although John Abed has been strongly recommended by the governor for the position. Smith writes of this: "How weak the Govt!—This Colden and Colden House formerly of the Honble Governor Fields where the De Laney Party meet—a Low Fellow, ignorant and a Fool Barends was the House where all the Riotous Liberty Boys met in 1765 & 66—There they celebrated the Repeal of the Stamp Act last March, Oliver De Laney & Apthorp pres.—All- 22 cok is to be Montague's Assistant in the Writing Part—Tha Man was one of the Kings of the Mob in 1765 & 66."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

"Caps. Stephen Kemble, of the British army, sends from New York to John Singleton Copley, in Boston, a list of those in this city who have subscribed to have their portraits painted by that artist. The list includes "Mr. Gage, Mr. Ogilvie [probably the Rev. John Ogilvie], Miss Johnston, Captain Gabriel Maturin, Jonathan Mallet, Mrs. [Roger?] Morris, Captain and Mrs. [John] Montessor, Mr. Barrow, Mr. [Milis] Sherbrooke, Mrs. [James] McEver, Mrs [Abraham] Martels, Mrs. Hust and lady, Mr [John] Tiber Kemp."—From "Letters and Papers of John Singleton Copley and Henry Pelham 1739-1776," in Mass. Hist. Soc. Collections (1914), LXXI: 114, 179. For Copley's arrival in New York, see June 16.

Such great Quantities of Pigeons were brought to Market last Week, that no less than 100,000 were sold off in one Day.—N. Y. Merc., April 22, 1771.

Abraham Skillman advertises "The new Flying Machine." His card reads: "This is to inform the Public, that Abraham Skillman, hath erected a Flying Machine, or Stage Waggon, to go from this City of New-York, as near the City of Philadelphia as to set out from Powles Hook Ferry, every Tuesday Morning, beginning the 30th Instant."—N. Y. Merc., April 22, 1771.

The "Anniversary of St. George" is celebrated at Bolton's tavern by about 120 prominent residents of the city, including Gov. Dunmore and Gen. Gage.—N. Y. Merc., April 29, 1771.

Jonathan Lawrence and others, owners of estates near the Oswego Market, in a petition to the common council, refer to "the late Indictment of the Grand Jury" (see Jan. 24) against this market; and, believing that the market is to be removed, they offer to contribute £500 toward purchasing "One third of Conrons Lott," and conveying the whole of the ground to the corporation, "with covenants that it shall for ever remain a place for a publick market," provided the corporation will contribute the balance of £500 on the purchase price.—From original petition in file of 4, city clerk's record-room. The petition is endorsed "Read & filed April 24th 1771 and Referred for further Consideration." It is recorded in M. C. C., VII: 278. See also De Voe, Market Book, 275.

The consistory of the Dutch Church appoints a committee "to make the plan to be done by the Baptists, and all other parts of the Old Church. They are to take with them a couple of carpenters, and to bring in a plan of the Tower, and an exact estimate of the cost, as also of the other repairs."—Eccles. Rec., VI: 4200. This subject was considered in 1768, but apparently no work was done at that time. The committee reported on May 6 (q. v.).
Trinity vestry appoints a committee "to regulate the Street May and secure the Bank before Samuel Francis's House [Vauxhall]— see Jan. 24 in such manner as they shall think proper."—Trin. Min. (M.S.). For the petition of Francis, see June 6.

A committee appointed to the Society of New York in the City (see March 9, 1770)—Col. Cown. Min., 554; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 954. For the king's approval see June 13.

June 1 A fire breaks out in the house of Mrs. Wright, "the ingenious Proprietor of the Fire-work, and who paid for our Relief, as well as the Flames, produced the Life, which have for some Time past been exhibited in this City to general Satisfaction." With the help of the neighbours and the fire-engines, the flames are extinguished, "with little damage to the House; but the most of the Fire-work was destroyed . . . yet she was so fortunate as to save the various Pieces of the Reverend Mr. Whitehead, the Pennsylvania Farmer, and some others which she still continues to exhibit."—N. Y. Merc., June 10, 1771. See Aug. 5.

The common council authorizes the payment of £222:110 to "Messrs" Sharp & Curtenius & Company [see Aug. 20, 1767] . . . in full of their claim for two large Stoves & bars for the Bridewell &c and one other for the Corporations house [the Hospital] that formerly belonged to John Harris."—M. C. & Co. VII: 282. See Nov. 32, 1770.

The committee appointed to regulate the streets in Montgomery Ward reported that Queen Street has been regulated.—M. C. & Co. VII: 283. For earlier regulations of this street and other streets in the same ward, see July 9, 1755. At the same meeting the committee appointed to regulate the streets in the West Ward (see ibid., VII: 581) makes a report on the regulation of Warren St.—Ibid., VII: 285.

The clerk produces a "Bond from this Corporation under their seal to the Marine Society of the City of New York . . . in the penalty of £1,000, with Condition to pay on the 7th of May next the Sum of £100 with Interest at 5 per cent from the 7th of May last." The mayor is ordered to sign it. This bond discharges a "Bond from this Corporation to William Peartree Smith." Six other bonds for varying amounts are ordered signed at the same time.—M. C. & Co. VIII: 284–5.

Domine De Rondt and Mr. Stockholm report to the consistiency of the Dutch Church "concerning their going around with a subscription list for the Tower and repairs of the Old Church" (see May 6). The result does not exceed £100. "The Consistory was, therefore, compelled to suspend the work for this year, doing only what was indispensable."—Eccles. Rec., IV: 401.

The House commonly called and known by the Name of The Merchants' Fire-Tree," which is a public house, is advertised for private sale. It is described as "Situated at the lower End of Wall-street, and now occupied by Mrs. Mary Ferrara, Widow."—N. Y. Merc., June 10, 1771. For a history of this tavern, see June 19, 1782. See also description of Pl. 69, I: 453.

This report occurs which the courtesy of the British soldier and the spirit of the times. It is reported in the press by two of the principal participants as follows:

"On Tuesday the 11th Instant, we the Subscribers, Jacob Mills and Jeremiah Mulford, of Brookhaven, on Long-Island, having taken Lodgings at the House of Mr. William Milner near the Exchange, in New-York, about 9 o'clock in the Evening we went from his Door into the Piazzas of the Exchange, where three Soldiers who entered immediately after us, and the Centry who stood there before, without the least Provocation on our Part, furiously attacked us with drawn Bayonets, both by thrusting and striking, whereby we were both wounded in many Places and one of us dangerously in the Head, Face, Hands and Body, and then forcibly carried us away to the Guard House, and there confined us . . . They accused us of throwing Stones at the Centry in the Exchange. . . . We declared and offer'd to prove our innocence, of the Charge. . . . They insisted in vain, we also insisted in vain, we delivered the Money, when which they had received they suffer'd us to depart, . . . Next Day, being advised, that the shortest Means of Redress, would probably be by Trial before a Court Martial, we applied accordingly to Advice, and on Thursday the 15th a Court Martial being called, the 4 Soldiers were brought before them for Trial, We had several Witnesses to prove that we were not the Persons who threw the Stones at the Centry, that we had but just left the House of Mr. Milner, and had not meddled or concerned ourselves with them at the Time they attack'd us. On the other Hand, 3 or 4 Soldiers, in Behalf of the Prisoners, appeared as Witnesses, who declared that we had thrown Stones at the Centry, and that the Military Tyranny we paid for our Relief was not extorted from us, but voluntarily offer'd and press'd upon the Soldiers in Order to induce them to release us, that the Affair might drop without further Inquiry. . . ."—Ibid., VII: 291–2. See May 29.

"Upon the whole, we could obtain no Manner of Redress, and have since understood that the Soldiers were cleared. We have also been advised, that having first chosen this Kind of Trial, we can now obtain no Satisfaction in any other Court, either for the Loss of Money, or Injury to our Persons." The 45 shillings were later returned to Mills and Mulford.—N. Y. Jour., June 20, 1771.

The king incorporates certain persons under the title of "The Society of the Hospital in the City of New York in America" (see May 29).—From Papers relating to New York Hospital, among the Jay Papers, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. The common council showed its approval of this society on Sept. 12 (p. 6). The name of the corporation was changed by legislative act on March 9, 1810 (q.v.). The corporation's privilege to regulate and own land in the City of New York was established by and regulation of Crown (Liberty) St.—M. C. & Co., VII: 288. Its regulation was ordered, July 2, 1771.—Ibid., VIII: 291–2, 315. See March 11, 1791; April 21, 1794 and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 997. For a protest against the committee's report, see July 15.

The ordinance regulating public slaughter-houses, passed July 24, 1766 (q. v.), is altered and amended. It is now provided that anyone dwelling in certain parts of the Out Ward (carefully defined in the law) may slaughter on his own property, "without this subject or liable to the payment of any sum or sums of money . . . to Mr. Nicholas Bayard."—M. C. & Co., VII: 287–8.

Robert R. Livingston and others apply to the common council for permission "to lay a Block to the East River 20 feet in front of their several Wharfs, lying between the Whitehall Slip and the old Crane of the late Colo. Moore in order to secure their said Wharfs, against North Easterly storms." Such permission is granted.—M. C. & Co., VIII: 289.

Copley writes from New York to Henry Pelham: "We are now fixed in a very commodious House in this City. We arrived here on Thursday night . . . Our Journey was not attended by the least unpleasing accident, but was delightful beyond all our expectation. Our Horses held out wonderfully well and brought us with great spirit forty Miles the last Day of our Journey . . . I believe you will think I have done pretty well to be able to begin Mrs. Gages portrait [see April 17, 1771] tomorrow, which I propose to do more . . . This aggressive and uncertain weather has made the streets much Cleaner and some much broader, but it is not Boston in my opinion yet. I have seen the Statues of the King and Mr. Pitt, and I think them both good Statues. I find it so expensive keeping horses here that I think to send the Mare back . . . I want my Crayons much and Layman and Drawings . . . Clouth there is enough here."—Letters & Papers of John Singleton Copley and Henry Pelham, 1739–1776, 116–17; Dunlap, Hist. of Arts of Design, I: 121 (footnote). See June 20.

"For the Safety of Vessels coming into and going to Sea from the Port of New-York—the Master and Wardens of the said Port, did last Week place a large Can Buoy on the South West Spit of the East Bank, in eighteen Feet Water at low Water, bearing from the Light House on Sandy-Hook—N. W. and by W. half W. and from the Bluff of Staten Island, making the Narrows S. half East. Vessels going down must keep in 5 Fathom Water, till they open the Buoy with the Point of the South Spit. . . ."—N. Y. Merc., June 17, 1771. During the following winter, the buoy was carried away by the ice (see Feb. 17, 1772). In a letter to Henry Pelham, Copley says: "I have begun 20 three portraits already, and shall as soon as time permits fill my Room with it . . . We areoment we recommend[ed] as others into whose knowledge we have fallen here."—Letters & Papers of John Singleton Copley and Henry Pelham, 1739–1776, 120. See July 14.
Copley, writing to Henry Pelham, says: "There is so many that are impatient to sit I am never at a loss to fill up all my time. My large chamber is about 9 feet high and 20 feet long and near as broad, with a good room adjoining it, the light[ ] near north. I have been here in the time of P. Col. 1772 a L^2 Dunmore & a Coward who had never seen Flanders, and ran about in the Night assaulting one, & another... he was heard to say 'Damn Virginia—Did I ever seek it!'—Why is it forced upon me? I ask for New York—New York I love, & they have robbed me of it with violent force. This was a Day's journey, & Dunmore's exactly the true State of L^2 Dunmore Mind at that Moment."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. On the same day the common council convened, not at the city hall according to regular custom, but "at the Dwelling House of Samuel Frances in the Dock Ward."—M. C. C. VIII. 293. It is safe to assume that the board was combining business with pleasure. Almost the entire business of the meeting related to the new governor—the reception to him, the freedom, and the address. Also there appears, in the records of Aug. 22 (M.C.C., VII. 905), the authorization of the payment of L£814 to Samuel Frances "for an Entertainment by him provided by order of this Board for his Excellency Gov't Tryon.""
Mrs. Wright has been "so assiduous in repairing the Damage done to the Work Yard by the late Fire in her House [see June 3] that the Defect is not only supplied by new Fences: ... but they are of superior Skill and Judgment... The Mansion of Abd by Calm, and the Treachery of Delilah to Samson, are two principal Subjects of their last performance."—N. Y. Merc., Aug. 5, 1771. On Jan. 30, 1772, Mrs. Wright was ready to sail for England.—N. Y. Jour., Jan. 30, 1772. An account of her life and work is in Dunlap, Hist. of Arts of Design, I: 150–56.

In a private letter to Mayor Hicks, W. M. McAdam states that the proprietors of Dey's Dock are ready to pay when required £150 toward building a market there, believing it will increase the value of their lots. The location is between Vesey and Division Streets.—From the original letter in file No. 4, city clerk's record-room. This letter is not recorded in the Minutes, but is doubtless one of the petitions considered by the board at the next meeting.—See Aug. 19. See also March 15, 1795, when the Dey St. locality was first presented for consideration.

A remonstrance of this date is one in which several butchers who "have served the Oswego Market" protest to the common council against the proposal to erect a market at the North River instead of the Oswego Market (on Broadway), which "is now almost immediately to be removed." They recommend the Fields part of the city, "being nearer to the growing attention to the fact that the board gave leave for such addition at "the time John Lawrence Esq" was Alderman, & Dirck Brinckerhoff, Assistant," but that nothing was done at that time.—From the original MS., in file No. 5, city clerk's record-room. See, further, Aug. 19.

The common council orders the payment of £27:6 for "Candles to illuminate the City Hall."—M. C., VII: 328. See July 9.

Trinity vestry passes the following resolution: "Whereas the Oswego Market now standing in the Broadway way is ordered to be removed and it is proposed that a New one be erected on part of a Lands upon Hudsons river belonging to this Corporation for which purpose a Subscription paper has been exhibited as well by a Number of the Church Tenants as others to the Northward of division Street who have engaged to raise about Three hundred pounds towards erecting the said Market—Whereupon it is resolved and agreed that this Corporation also contribute the sum of Two hundred pounds towards building the said Market and will release their Right and Claim to the Ground on which the same is proposed to be built for the use of a Market for ever upon Condition that the Mayor Aldermen and Commonalty of this City will grant and confirm to them the Water Lots agreeable to the prayer of Subscription now before the said Mayor Aldermen & Commonalty for that purpose."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

A remonstrance to the common council, bearing this date, and signed by 71 inhabitants of the city, states that they will be great sufferers by the removal of the Oswego Market; that "the Hill Street will be a very considerable expense by putting new foundations under their houses occasioned by the regulation of said street"; that they consider the "most convenient place along the North River" to build the new market "would be from Mieiser slip unto Commissary Lakes. The owners of the lands fronting the street have offered "the ground fronting the river to erect a Market on (exclusive of the street) & to have it built by Voluntary subscriptions." A grant "for erecting a Market at or near Thurmans slip was given to the former Petitioners, ... In consequence of which they conceive themselves Instructed to the new preference of having the grant here prayed for."—From original petition in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room. See, further, Aug. 19.

The common council considers "the Subject matter of the several Petitions preferred by sundry Inhabitants of this City relative to the erecting of a Market at the respective places therein mentioned, namely, the Mieisers Dock, Dies Slip and the Commonse; & ... on some of the Lots belonging to this Corporation, lying to the Northward of Dies Dock." See March; Aug. 6 and 13. The vote of the board is against the Commonse or Fields, and in favour of "Dies Slip" rather than "Mieisers Dock," on the North River; but on Dies Dock, and "whether the Market should be placed at Dies Slip?" the vote is almost unanimous against it. The next ballot is in favour of "the Corporation's Lots to the Northward of Dies dock," as against "Mieiser's Dock," and it is ordered that," "if a Market be Erected by the Neighbourhood at the place now agreed upon, that the same do not exceed two hundred & ten feet in Length & thirty feet in breadth [see Aug. 22]; that a stone foundation be laid under the whole, and that the building of the same be under the direction of the Corporation at the expense of N. C., VII: 304–7. The site fixed upon was the west side of the present Greenwich St. between Fulton and Vesey Sts.—De Voe, The Market Book, 307. The market was first known as "Oswego Market" (a part of the materials of the old Oswego Market—see July 29—having been employed in its erection), later as the "Corporation Market at the North River," and finally as the "Bear Market." For origin of the name, see ibid., 308–11. See also Pl. 69, Vol. I; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 956, 959. For the building of this market, see Aug. 22, 29, 31; Oct. 28.

A plan for the new market to be erected "on the Corporation's Lots to the Northward of Dies Dock" (see Aug. 19), to be 166 by 28 ft., is submitted to the common council and approved. A committee is appointed "to superintend the Building of the same, & see that it be Completed by the 1st of November next."—M. C., VII: 306. See, further, Aug. 31.

Inhabitants of the Dock Ward petition the common council to appoint a committee to complete an addition to "County's Market ... on a range with the Old Market," for which a certain sum has been subscribed. They also ask that the board allow the countryfolk to sell meat there, "to which no Certain place is Assigned therein," and they also ask that the market be placed in the centre of the street.—From the original MS., in file No. 6, city clerk's record-room. The petition was granted, "to prevent the Opening of the said Market, provided the Petitioners be at the Expense thereof."—M. C., VII: 306. See also Nov. 16, 1720; March 15, 1763; April 16 and May 7, 1772; July 1, 1780; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 958; De Voe, Market Book, 116.

The common council appoints a committee "to Cause the Pavement from the Fort to be taken up, & the ground there to be repaved."—M. C., VII: 306. Manifestly, this is a further effort to improve the vicinity of Bowling Green (see May 3). When, on Oct. 14, the committee was increased from three to five, its purpose was noted to be "for Regulating and Causing to be paved the Streets, near the fort Bowling Green & Battery." The committee made report of their progress on Oct. 24 (g. v.).—Ibid., VII: 322–24. Payment for the work was ordered on three subsequent occasions.—Ibid., VII: 325, 328, 345. For a further improvement, see April 10, 1772.

The inhabitants of Crown St. (see July 15) are given "Liberty to fill up the Street belonging thereto."—M. C., VII: 306. See Sept. 14.

Lord Dunmore arrives in New York from Albany (see July 24) and we have set out for the Government of Virginia in a few Days by land."—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 3, 1772. See also N. Y. Col. Docs., VII: 289.

John Stagg, a bricklayer, is appointed by the corporation to receive the money subscribed for the building of the new market (see Aug. 19).... M. C., VII: 308.

"Ordered that in all the Church Leases that are granted for the future a Covenant be added that the Lessees shall be obliged to pave the Street before their respective Lots when ever it shall be required of them by the City Corporation."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

The first stone of the new market (see Aug. 19 and 22), which is known at first, as the old one was, at the Oswego Market, and which is "now erecting on the Corporation Ground at the North River," is laid by the mayor, and the second stone by the recorder. The market is to be finished "with all Expeditious."—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 2, 1771.

"The Macaroni Purse" of 9 pm is to run for on this day Sept. in a horse-race in the"New Market Races... over this course." Any member of the "Macaroni Club" may start a horse for the purse.—N. Y. Merc., Aug. 26, 1771.

The committee appointed to superintend the building of the new market (see Aug. 22) is ordered "to Cause the water Lots there to be deck'd ou at the Expense of this Corporation."—M. C., VII: 309.

The common council orders the payment of £379, the sum "this Board agreed to allow the Marshall & Constables for watching this City on New Years Eve last."—M. C., VII: 309.
1771 Royal orders are published by proclamation confirming the Sept. New York act enabling aliens to hold real estate (see May 13, 1769).—Cal. Coun. Min., 557.

7 The managers of the New York air furnace answer inquiries regarding the price of casting shot for Fort George.—Cal. Hist. MSS, Eng., 796.

12 "The Institution of a publick Infirmary or Hospital [see June 13] within this City, being not only a laudable but useful Undertaking, having for its object the Relief of the indigent & diseased and the promotion of the most extensive and most proper Principles; This Board being truly sensible of the same, and willing to patronize and encourage so benevolent an Establishment, have agreed to grant all the right and Interest they have in and to the westernmost half of the Lot formerly belonging to John Harris Decd & others but now to this Corporation ... for the purpose of building the said Hospital theron."—M. C. C., VII: 311. On June 16, 1772 (q.v.) £3,000 was donated in place of this land.

14 In accordance with the act of Feb. 16 (q.v.), for better regulating the election of city officials, the common council appoints the following persons as "Returning Officers" of the election in this month, and names the place of election in each ward, as follows:

"Wards Persons Places
West Ward John Wetterhead the Broadway Market South Ward John Harris Curzer the Exchange house.
North Ward Dirck Van Brinckhord the Coomites Market.
East Ward John Alop the Coffee house Bridge.
North Ward Nicholas W. Stuyvesant the City Hall
Ward
Montgomery Joseph Bull Peeks Slip Market Outward Jae Peter Stuyvesant the House of John Fowler"

—M. C. C., VII: 313-14. For later regulations of this kind, see ibid., VIII: 373-74; 443-44; 446; VIII: 52-53, 103-4.

The survey made by Andrew Maerschalck and Gerard Bancker, "Concerning the Amendment of a Late Regulation of Crown Street in the Ward of St. Peter, as taught by the Council on June 13," is read and approved by the common council.—M. C. C., VII: 315.

The common council authorizes the payment of £20 to Henry Dufour "in Consideration of the damage he has sustained by the digging down of Crown Street" (see June 13).—M. C. C., VII: 351, 374. On Sept. 25, 1773, Dufour received an additional £10. —Ibid., VII: 377.

Oct. The first of several payments is ordered by the corporation for "building a Wharf & Pier in front of the New [Oswego] Market at the North River."—M. C. C., VII: 319. This wharf was at the foot of Pulaski St. at Greenwich St., and is shown on Pl. 64, Vol. I. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 985, under "Corporation Dock." Subsequent payments show the total cost of construction was £35,675—ibid., VII: 328, 345, 352-53. The dock was ordered to be repaired on June 20, 1774 (q.v.).

14 "It is proposed that a street be laid [sic] out in a Direct line from the Broad way to Hudsons River between the south Bounded of the Lands of Mr Anthony Rutgers and the North bounds of the Church Farm agreeable to a plan thereof made by Gerard Bancker and now produced to this Board: It is upon agreement Ordered that Mr Desbrosses, Mr Renaudet, Mr Bacha, Mr Van Dam and Mr Kissam or any three of them be a Committee to Confer with Mr Rutgers about laying out the said Street and to prepare Such Deeds or Instruments as may be necessary to be executed between this Corporation and the said Mr Rutgers, to be laid before this board at some future meeting."—Trin. Min. (MS. Dock is the present Randle St., which appears as Read's St. on the Ratter Map, Pl. 41, Vol. I.

Ordered that an Address or Petition from this Corporation be prepared to his Majesty Praying a Removal of the Quit Rent reserved in a large Grant for a Tract of Land to this Corporation Agreeable to the Act of the 20th of Nov. of the City of Carolina and another to the Bishop of London desiring their Countenance and Interposition for that purpose."—Trin. Min. (MS.). See Nov. 15, 1770: Dec. 29, 1772.

15 From Oct. 15 to 16, a general convention was held in New York City of representatives of the Reformed Dutch Churches in the Province of New York and New Jersey, "for the purpose of procuring Peace and unity to said Churches."—"Articles of Union" were adopted, also "The Church-Order, or Rules of Ecclesiastical Government."—Eccles. Rec., VI: 426-27. A second convention, to ratify the "Union," was held June 16-18, 1772.—Ibid., VII: 4242.

Persons living around the Fly Market petition the common council for permission to build an addition to that market at their own expense, to serve as a shelter for the country people that resort to the said Market with provisions; ... and are obliged to stand exposed in the Open Street with their produce in all Weathers which is not only a Hardship on them but Inconvenient to some of the petitioners by having the Streets before their doors obstructed. This resort is entirely occupied by butchers. These petitioners ask "leave to build a Market in the Middle of the Street to begin opposite the House formerly poss’d by Theod Kendal & to extend to wards the river as far as the Smith’s Shop now possessed by John Roome." The petition is endorsed "Read & filed Oct 23, 1771." From the original MS., in box No. 6, in city clerk’s record-room. The record is entered in the Minutes on Oct. 24.—M. C. C., VII: 324. On Oct. 28, permission was granted to enlarge the market.—Ibid., 326. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 958.

Agreement to an order of the common council, the streets near the Bowling Green have been regulated, and the committee recommends "that Beaver Street be paved on a regular Ascent from a Pump opposite to the House of Mr Van Vorst to the upper part of the foundation of the Railing round the Kings Statue" (M. C. C., VII: 324-25). Payment of £80 was made Nov. 14, 1771, on this work (Ibid., VII: 328), and the balance on Jan. 24, 1772 (Ibid., VII: 345).

A committee is appointed "to cause such of the Streets in the West Dock & South wards as they shall judge necessary to be regulated and paved."—M. C. C., VII: 333. On Oct. 28, the chairman of the committee reported that the "Street [Whitehall St.] leading from the Custom House Corner, to the Whitehall Slip" had been regulated.—Ibid., VII: 325.

The following "Return of Difficulties in the Barracks of New York," by Lieut.-Col. Dudley Tenpoler, 18th Regiment, is perhaps worth quoting:

"Eighty of the men Blanks at the allowance of one Blanket man are old & wore out."

"The Stairs in the upper Barracks are so much out of repair that several of the men have been hurt by falling through them."

"The Room floors are broke in several places and wants repair.

"Several of the forms are broke and unrepairable"

"The Barrack Tables for the Soldiers are all old & too Small"

"The most of the men wants Candle sticks"

"The most of the Botoms are wore out of the Officers Chairs & some of them good for nothing."

"Both the gates at the upper Barracks are fallen down & the Fences round the square wants repairing."—From the original letter giving the Bancker accounts (in folder marked "Accounts of British Garrison in New York") in N. Y. Pub. Library. A petition to the common council, signed by a large number of citizens, and endorsed "Read & filed 28th Oct, [1771]" states that since their petition of last March, the "Oswego Market has been removed, and another Market erected on the Dock, at the North River," and that the new market is very inconveniently located; they now renew their former petition that one be erected in the Fields at their expense.—From the original petition in metal file No. 4, city clerk’s record-room. See Nov. 27.

A petition from "A Considerable Number of Inhabitants" having been made to the common council on Oct. 24 (M. C. C., VII: 344), asking that a committee be appointed "to Carry into Execution a former Order of this Board, relative to the Erecting of a Market at Thurman’s Slip in the West Ward" (see April 6, 1773), it is now taken up for consideration, with "two other Petitions each Subscribed by a very Considerable Number of Inhabitants of this City, the one praying leave to Erect a Market in the Fields, and the other also praying leave to Erect a Market at the head of Maiden Lane Street, on part of the Ground formerly occupied by Mr Conora, at their own Expense." The board defers action on all these petitions.—M. C. C., VII: 336. Final action was taken on Nov. 27 (q.v.).

In a petition to the common council, William McAdam and others set forth "that they have lately at the Ex pense of five hundred Pounds Erected a Market, on the Corporations Ground in

The "Chamber of Commerce," at its last meeting, "determined on the mode of Tonnage to be adopted from and after the first Day of May next."—Col. Recs. N. T. Chamber of Commerce, 142. This report (dated Sept. 3, 1771) appeared in the Mercury of Jan. 27, Feb. 14, and March 3, 1771.

The "Union Library Society" is organized. A twelve-page pamphlet of "Articles" was issued, the preamble of which declared that "the private purchase of books is attended with an expense too heavy for many persons whose inclinations lead them to improve. The establishment of a "public library" is thereby justified. A treasurer and 12 directors were provided for, to be elected annually. The directors were to hold monthly meetings and were entrusted with entire management, even to removing the treasurer for incompetence or neglect. The cost of a share was 20s, and the annual payment, 4s. —From the original pamphlet entitled Articles of the Union Library Society of New York, preserved in N. Y. Soc. Library. Cf. Keep, Hist. of N. Y. Soc. Library, 112-118. The library was opened Jan. 7, 1772 (p. 6).

Freebody, Jr., of New York City, writing to Christopher G. Cumplin, says: "The regularity says: 'Long enough to see you all. I work with extremity application to hasten that happy time which will be by Christmas at farthest, for I now see all my work before me. But it takes up much time to finish all the parts of a Picture when it is to be well finished, and the Gentry of this place [New York] distinguish very well, so I must slight nothing. I believe you will think I shall do very well to finish the amount of thirty Busto in 20 Weeks, besides going to Philadelphia which took up 2 Weeks of the 20; and this I shall do by the time I mention . . . I have been obliged to refuse a great deal of Business here and in Philadelphia. I have done some of my best portraits here.—Gage [see June 15, 1771], which is gone to the Exhibition. Robert Hull who "intends in a few days to open the well-known tavern in the Broadway, lately kept by Richard Bolton," announces his house on the "corner of the Jew's alley, in Broad-street" to be let—N. T. Merc., Nov. 11, 1771. See May 1, 1770.

Barrack-master Gerard Bancker is ordered to repair the barracks.—Col. Coun. Min., 457. On April 29, 1772, he was instructed to pay the accounts of Gavin Lourie "for repairing barracks and lodging officers of the 26th regiment."—ibid., 489. The accounts of Evert and Gerard Bancker as barrack-masters of New York prior to the Revolution are preserved in the MSS. Division of the N. Y. Pub. Library.

One William Davison, sentenced to death for picking pockets, is pardoned.—Col. Coun. Min., 485.

The common council orders that the platform at the end of the Fly Market be arched.—M. C. G., VII: 326.

Joseph Haviland is appointed "to the Office of a Measurer of Mahogany." Before he enters upon his duties, he is to take "an Oath well and truly to Execute said Office."—M. C. G., VII: 336.

The common council denies the petition "of John Thurman Junr and others [see Oct. 28], relative to the Building a Market at Meiers Dock." The "Several other Petitions preferred to this Board, to erect a Market or a Mart, to be erected in other Places, herein mentioned" (see Oct. 28) are likewise voted down in one inclusive motion.—M. C. G., VII: 311-32. See, however, Jan 7, 1772, for the favourable action finally taken by the city as a result of the initiative taken by the projectors of the market at Nov. 27, Mesiers's Dock.

The petitioners complain "that they have since heard with much surprise of a late application [in the Board] for Leave to Erect another Market within two hundred yards of the one they have Erected." They ask that, "in Consideration of the Great Expe ince they have been at, this Board will not permit any other Market in that Neighbourhood to be Erected, as the one they have lately set up, will for many years to Come be sufficient for every purpose of a publick Market in that quarter of the City, But should this worshipful Board nevertheless authorize a Market to be Erected within the distance aforesaid, of the one they have Erected; that in such Case, they Rely on the Equity of this Board that they will repay the money they have so Expended on the Good faith of this Corporation." The common council postposes consideration of this petition also.—M. C. G., VII: 326. See, further, Nov. 27. The Bear Market survived the Revolution.—See Landmark Map Ref. Abraham Meier and others inform the common council that they have erected a market-house at the North River, and desire to convey it to the public, for the use of the public.—M. C. C., VII: 341. This was in conformity with the original permission to build given in 1773.—See summary under April 6, 1775, for the long history of this grant. This was the Crown Market, in Liberty St., west of Greenwich St. It was sometimes known as Meier's or Meierman's Market.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 958. For the city's acceptance of it, see March 31. On Jan. 14, 1775, an advertisement, signed by Adrian Rutgers, Richard Sharp, John Morin Scott, and Benjamin Kinnsam, for the sale of part of the estate of the late Petrus Rutgers, refers to the lots as "situate at the North River fronting Thurman's Slip, near the new market."—Reinisen's Gazetteer, Jan. 14, 1775. The Crown Market was destroyed by fire in September, 1776 (p. 80).—De Vos, Market Book, 329.

The inhabitants who reside near where the Oswego Market formerly stood, who petitioned "some time ago . . . for leave to erect a Public Market on the Lot known by the name of Coaro's Lot." (see April 8, 1774) petition again for considerations of their former petition, believing that it was not favourably considered because the place asked for was not "put Separately" in their petition,—that is, not specifically asked for.—From original petition, in metal file No. 6, in city clerk's record-room, endorsed "June 1772 & Referred for further Consideration."—See also M. C. C., VII: 340. This petition came up again on March 16 (p. 6).

Gov. Tryon says, in a message to the assembly: "The injuries of time and storms have so delayed the fortifications of this city, that they require a thorough repair, as soon as the season will admit."—Assem. Jour. (1772), 4; Jour. Leg. Coun., II, 1801. See March 15.

The committee appointed for carrying into execution the matters recommended on March 20, 1771 (p. 6), makes another report, which is approved. The board resolves "That the proposals . . . from the Town of Harlem to this Corporation Relative to the Settlement of the Boundaries between them & this Corporation, by Commissioners, meet with the approbation of this board . . . they do therefore on their part name William Nicoll . . . and Thomas Hicks . . . as Commissioners for that purpose, and that they be called Commissioners to be Chosen by the Town of Harlem do name a fifth person, which five persons Shall be Commissioners for finally settling the aforesaid Boundaries . . . And it is further ordered & agreed to, that M' Recorder be desired to prepare a Bill to be laid before the General assembly, that the Commissioners be enabled to settle with full and absolute power to settle effectually the controversy aforesaid."—M. C. C., VII: 347-44. See also Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 803-4.

A committee is appointed "to view the place proposed as a Basin, in front of the Ground agreed to be granted to the Proprietors of the houses fronting the East Great Dock & Cause a plan to be made of the same and prefer it to this Board with all Convenient Speed."—M. C. C., VII: 345. The plan was submitted to the board on April 10, and approved. The clerk was ordered to prepare "the Draft of Grant" to the petitioners accordingly they said Petitioners Obliging themselves therein to Complement the said Basin by the first of August 1777."—Ibid., VII: 353.

The assembly resolves, by a vote of 13 to 7, "that no person is capable of being elected a representative to serve for any city, county, town, borough or manor, in this or any future Assembly . . . and that they be an absolute resident, and shall the original petition be filed in such place for which he shall be so elected, and hath resided for at least six months before the test of writ of summons."—Assem. A fire in the house of one John Burns, on the dock near Coen's Market, endangers the city, there being stored in the adjoining building, or near by, a large quantity of gunpowder.—N. Y. Jour., Jan. 23, 1772.

Whitehead Hicks issues the following proclamation "To the Inhabitants of the City of New York:

"Considering the extreme Danger of storing Gunpowder in this City which must be manifest to every thinking Person; and that the Practice is in direct Violation of a Law of the Corporation, ordered to be carried into execution, that any Securities should be given to any Person for their own Safety, as well as that of their Fellow Citizens as to expose both to such imminent Hazard. Did we not see it exemplified in Fact, one would scarcely imagine it possible that the Love of Gain (and a paury Saving it is) should so far extinguish the Sentiments of Human justice, to hazard a Man's Life, and to contempt the sands of his Species, rather than comply with a most salutary Law, and pay for the Storage of his Powder. . . .

"I am desired by some of the principal Firemen of the City to . . . . issue this Hand Bill, in order to acquaint the Inhabitants hereby to meet upon emergency and to have them not to presume, for the future, to store any Powder in the City, but in Magazines prepared for the Purpose: That if they do, they must not expect their Assistance in Times of Fire, as they cannot think of running headlong into Inevitable Destruction, but are determined to resign their Offices. What a deplorable State this City must then be reduced to is easily to be conceived—Should any Persons, not duly impressed with a Sense of the Danger arising from such Practises, have any Powder stored in the City, I must beseech them forthwith to remove it, and thereby prevent the perilous Consequences to which, in the mean Time, he exposes his Few Citizens."—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Gov. Tryon urges the assembly to appropriate money towards the establishment of a hospital, which has been "planned by a society lately incorporated" (see June 13, 1771) "for the reception of the poor, debilitated by age, or oppressed with infirmities."— apply to you to pass a law for collecting a powder duty; and upon inquiring into the state and condition of the ammunition for the defence of this province, I find there are but few barrels remaining for the public service. I am therefore to recommend to you to frame such a law as will correspond with his Majesty's wishes, and be most effectual in furnishing a constant and regular supply of ammunition."—Assemb. Jour. (1772), 27. On March 13, the assembly resolved not to present such a bill.—ibid., 97.

Application having been heretofore made to this Corporation [see Jan. 23] by the Honorable John Watts and Whitehead Hicks Esquire [then Mayor] Two of the Governors of the Hospital appointed a Committee for that purpose for two Acres of Ground between the Paper Mill [see Jan. 23] and Mr Liepenard's House for the use and purpose of Building a Hospital or Infirmary which being taken into Consideration It was unanimously Resolved that this Corporation will lease to the Governors of the said Hosptal Two Acres of Ground on the North side of Keating's Paper Mill for the only use of a Publick Hospital or Infirmary for the Term of Ninety-nine years at the Annual Rent or sum of Fifteen pounds yearly during the Term. (MS.). Such an arrangement was not acceptable to the governors (see Feb. 15). For a different location, see May 20.

House, Church and Parish house and for the use of a burying Ground, being Produced and read And The same being taken into Consideration by this Board It was thereupon Resolved and Ordered that Mr [John Talbot] Kempe, Mr [Edward Light] and Mf [Theophilus] Bache be a Committee to Confer with the Common Council of the City of New York upon the Subject of the said order and to apply for a Plan of the Proposed building and to finally to agree with the said Corporation upon the Terms and Conditions on which this Corporation will accept of the Proposed Trust."—Trin. Min. (MS.), See June 26.

Andrew Eliot was at this time the receiver-general, as appears by a memorial of the Lives of the Deceased Persons for their Necessaries, Life, Charity Service for their Relief will be preached next Sunday Morning at Trinity Church, St. George and St. Paul's Chapels; and the charitable Donations of the respective Congregations will be most thankfully received, and deposited in the Hands of a worthy Gentleman, who will take the trouble of supplying them with Such Necessaries as they are in immediate want of."—N. T. Jour.,

N. T. Metc., Feb. 17, 1772. Later, the buoy was found and set up again.

Tryon sends this message to the assembly: "The present Secretary's office being wholly inadequate to the purpose of preserving the public records, and as the accidents to which they are liable in their present situation, must be justly alarming to every person who is interested in the security of property; I cannot avoid recommending these considerations as highly deserving your attention. To erect a new building I consider as the best expedient. In which, besides the apartments necessary for the transaction of the ordiinary business, there may be one room so constructed as to afford all possible security against fire or other casualties. A plan of such a design accompanies this message, the estimate of the expense of which, in brick work, amounts to eleven hundred pounds, currency. Should the same meet with your approbation, I flatter myself, you will make provision for carrying it into execution."— Assemb. Jour. (1772), 61. For the assembly's action, see March 13.

The treasurer of the colony, Abraham Lott, having used the funds of the colony, paid by the common council on this day, to them lie idle in the treasury, and having been asked by the assembly to account for the money, it is resolved that Lott's action was imprudent but not dishonest. However, as the precedent might become dangerous, the house resolves that in future no money shall be issued out of the treasury except upon lawful authority.—

The legislature passes: "An Act for making a further Provision of two thousand Pounds for furnishing his Majesty's Troops quartered in this Colony with Necessaries for one Year."—Col. Laws Tryon tells Smith that he is "determined to be drawn into no dangerous Measures," that he means "to be independent," and that he intends "to consult the Interest of the Province" and not to "ster the Public popular Voice nor be a Dupe to the Assembly or Council."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

"From this Day I predict that the De Lanceys will begin their Measures to harrass this Governor, but they will proceed slowly theo! Fear of his Temper."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

In response to the governor's message (see Jan. 8), the assembly resolves "that there be allowed a sum not exceeding £500, for making the necessary repairs to the fortifications of this City."—

The committee of the common council appointed “to survey late & 3rd street before the fires and about the Bowling Green” (see Aug. 22, 1771) is now ordered to “raise the said Bowling Green four inches & a half, or so high as to Carry off the Water that usually remains there after every Considerable Rain.”—M. C. G., VII: 355. A payment of $20, ordered on July 23, was for this improvement.—Ibid., VII: 356.

The common council orders “that the Alderman & Common Councilman of the West Ward Do cause that part of the Broadway Street whereon the Late Oswego Market Stood to be Regulated & paved, this board only finding the Stone & Labour.”—M. C. G., VII: 355. See description of the Montrose Plan, 1: 349-61.

A committee is appointed to consider a petition of Edward Nicoll, "praying Leave to Erect a Store house, or Dwelling house on the Water Lot in front of his Dwelling House adjoining the West Great Dock in the South Ward."—M. C. G., VII: 355.

The committee reported, on June 13, that Nicoll had proposed that he be granted “the breadth of his Lot & Seventy feet in Length, in such Manner as not to Incommode the Street nor that Build before his Neighbours, nor to take in Part of his Neighbours Ground.” As the members of the committee found “that the west parts of the Street Diminishes and it appears by the following advertisement, a dwelling and storage were part of the John St. Theatre property: “For sale. The lease of three years to come from next May, of the dwelling house and store house, situated in John Street, being part of the lot where the Play-house stands on.”—N. Y. G. (Weymann), April 15, 1772.

The “Nassau Ferry” is leased to Adolph Waldron on the same terms provided in the lease to Nicholas P. Bogart (see April 10), the latter having “declined taking the same.”—M. C. G., VII: 354.

The common council appoints a committee “to Examine and View what Condition the Counties Market is in and whether any Necessary ought to be made, and how much.”—M. C. G., VII: 354. This appears to be the action taken to respond to an undated petition asking the board to give financial assistance in rebuilding and enlarging County Market for the use of country people.—See the original in metal file No. 14, city clerk’s record-room. The committee reported on May 7 that necessary repairs would cost $20, and recommending that this sum be so expended, or be contributed “towards building a New Addition to that part, of the Market lately Erected there.” The board ordered that it be allowed “towards building the Markets.”—Ibid., VII: 357.

A house occupied by John Owens, late called the White Conduit House—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 981, “in the upper end of the Broadway, opposite the Fresh Water Pond,” is offered for sale; “... a road passing the front of the house and garden [extension of Broadway] will be opened in the spring to Greenpoint Ferry.—N. Y. Jour., April 16, 1772. This seems to prove that, contrary to the statement on p. 558, Vol. III, the extension of Broadway beyond Canal St. was under way in 1772, Apr., and was completely opened as far north as the Sand Hill Road (Greenwich Avenue) in the spring of 1773. See also Nov. 23, 1773.

The “Scheme of a Lottery” is advertised. “For raising the Sum of £720 to build a Fier, or convenient Harbour on the North River, at the Wharf of the Estate of Nicholas Roosevelt, Esq; deceased. As from the 1st of this Month, until such a time as much is hoped, it is that the Owners of Crafts, Boats, Vessels; Boatsmen, Farmers, and Merchants, trading on the North River, will use their utmost Endeavours to facilitate and encourage a Plan, of such general Utility.

That postal service is now extended to include Quebec (see Feb. 16, 1765), is shown by the following: “His Majesty’s [Deputy] Post-Master-General, intending to establish a Weekly Post to Quebec, any Person willing to undertake the riding work, between this City and Albany, (setting out every Wednesday Morning, on the arrival of the Post from Southward, and that can give sufficient Security for his faithfully delivering the Mail at the Post-Office in Albany, every Saturday at 12 o’Clock, to be dispatched from thence on Saturday Evening, and return with the Canada Mail to this Office, on Tuesday Evening, will please to send his Proposals in writing, to the Post-Office as soon as possible. —To Colen, Secry General Post Office, New-York.”—N. Y. Merc., May 7, 1772.

Mrs. Ferrari removes from the old, and opens “the spacious elegant new Coffee-House on the opposite cross corner” (south-east corner Wall and Water Sts.). Her regular customers assemble and are “unexpectedly and gently regaled with arrack, punch, wine, cold ham, tongue &c.” The two insurance officers are likewise moved from the old to the new Coffee House.—N. Y. Merc., May 4, 1772.

Mrs. Elizabeth Wragg succeeded Mrs. Ferrari as proprietor of the old Coffee House.—Ibid., May 18, 1772. In 1773, the old Coffee House was occupied by Nebit Deane, a lawyer.—Rivington’s Gazetteer, April 21, 1773. This building was demolished in 1792, and the Tontine Coffee House erected on its site.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 981. See also Vol. I, p. 453.

“Corlear’s Hook Tavern, In the Outward of this City, Late in the Occupation of James Ackland, deceased, now of John Brandon! It is a pleasant Walk from Town, the House and Grounds fitted up in a neat commodious Manner, for the Reception of all those who may please to Favour him with their Company; the best of Wines, Arrack, Rum, Taunton Ale, Porter and other Liquors are provided. . . .”-N. Y. Merc., April 27, 1772.

As the 26th Regiment is reviewed by Gen. Gage. The officers and soldiers make “an elegant appearance; the Rumour says that the regiment “is to go to Montreal in about a fortnight.”-N. Y. Merc., May 4, 1772. They embarked on May 4 (q. v.).

The provincial council issues an order on application for quarters and transportation for troops marching from Quebec to New York and vice versa.—Col. G. M., 1790.

Between two and three o’clock in the morning, a fire breaks out “in or near the Distillery back of Mr. Benjamin Hildreth’s in St George’s Square. . . . The wind being at about N. W. the Flames soon reached the Wooden Buildings adjoining and carried all before them to the Front of Water Street.” Notwithstanding all the efforts of the inhabitants, seven houses on the north side of Water Street, one house on the south side of Water Street, and two houses “in a narrow Street to the Eastward of where the Fire originated” were burned.—N. Y. Merc., May 4, 1772; N. Y. Jour., May 7, 1772.

The “common council, for lictors &c.; for liquors “delivered out” at this fire.—M. C. G., VII: 359. St. George’s Sq. was the present Franklin Sq.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1009.

John Cox, (Late a Prisoner confined in Gaid in this City upwards of twelve Years, as a Debtor) Bega Leave to inform the Public, by the Assistance and Encouragement of a Number of Friends, he intends to open a White Conduit House, at the House lately occupied by Mr. Henry Bicker, in the Fields, being the Corner House above where Mr. Abraham De La Montague now lives.” He has laid in a “Quantity of the best Madeira Wines, Spirituous Liquors, &c., etc., as, “he is no partisan, nor does he intend to keep a pond, or to give any sufferings to the Public in general.”-N. "Proposed—That seven Guineas be paid to Capt. Isaac T. Winn in Virginia for his assistance in getting William Bache, late Treasurer, for a Seal of this Corporation." — Col. Recs. N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 156. This seal was made in London, and brought out by Capt. Winn, commander of a trading vessel. It bears the date of the royal charter of the chamber, 1770, and is of solid silver about three inches in diameter and about one inch in thickness. It bears the motto, "Non Nobis, Nati Solum" ("Not born for ourselves alone"). — Bishop, Chron. of 150 yrs. Chamber of Commerce of the State of N. Y. (1768–1918), 14. The seal disappeared during the Revolution and was recovered by marvelous chance a few years later. A gentleman interested in the affairs of this country was looking over the collection of a curiosity-shop in London when he came across it; he at once restored it to the custody of the president, who was the designated custodian of the seal by resolution of June 2, 1772. It seems probable that the last colonial president, Mr. Isaac Low, took it with him on his return from the British troops in 1789, and that it afterwards found its way into the shop from whence it was rescued. The seal is in fine preservation, in the custody of the secretary, and is still used in the authentication of documents. — Colonial Records of the N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 160, 252–256.

"Resolved and Ordered that the Street in the Map of the Church Land called Greenwich street he extended in breadth to sixty six feet and to be continued in a Direct Course through the Church Ground from the Corner of the North side of Chambers Street to the Oswego Market." — Ibid. See May 20, 1773.

The common council orders the recorder and the several aldermen to take notice that the State of the British Enquiry into the State of the British Empire and Endeavour to fall upon ways & Means for putting the same upon Some better Regulation." — M. G. C., VII: 356. This committee failed to present any report until April 7, 1775 (q. v.). For the early history of the bridewell, which name was, as yet, only applied to a few rooms set apart in the "New Goal," see Nov. 21, 1763; regarding the keeper's income, see Nov. 20, 1767.

A committee is appointed "to remove two of the fire Engines now under the City hall, & fix one in the West Ward and the other in Montgomery Ward." — M. G. C., VII: 356. A payment of $21 was authorized, on Nov. 13, to be "applied towards Building a fire Engine House in Montgomery Ward." — Ibid., VII: 389. See Dec. 25, 1773.

The manner of raising money to pay for the new market, now completed on Conrads lot (see March 31), is set forth in a "Scheme of a Lottery." For raising the sum of three hundred pounds, towards baking Bread and Entering of country lodging at the corner of Maiden-Lane, near the place where the old Oswegomarket stood, in the Broad-Way. The Lottery consisted of two thousand five hundred tickets, at two dollars each. — N. B. — Not two blanks to a prize; Tickets to be had of Nicholas C. Bogert, Horse-Beer and Whiskey Man in Maiden Lane, and the neighbors about the market." — N. Y. Jour., June 25, 1772. The lot was purchased by a neighborhood subscription, with bonds to secure the full amount. — M. G. C. (1783–1813), I: 465; De Voe, Market Book, 350.

A survey of this date in the Bancker Collection in the N. Y. Public Library bears the title, "Plan of a parcel of Land situate and lying in the West Ward of the City of N.Y. purchased from M'Anthony Rutgers by the Governors of the Hospital to be held in said City." The ground had a frontage of 440 feet on the west side of Broadway, between the present Duane and Worth Sts., and extended 340 ft. west to Church St. The corner-stone of the building was not laid until Sept. 3, 1773 (q.v.).

The last four companies of the 26th Regiment (see April 28) embarked for Albany, "in order to proceed from thence for their Station in Canada; or, if they succeed, to bring the Officers and private Men of this Regiment, we can affirm, that during their Residence in this City, they have behaved with such Order and Decorum, as gave universal Satisfaction to the Inhabitants." — N. This is the date on a survey entitled "Plan of a parcel of Ground together with the Buildings erected thereon lying between Maiden Lane and John Street in the North Ward of the City of New York surveyed at the Request of M'Anthony Rutgers." The places marked include a "Brick Store," the "New Brick Coach House & Barn," the "Kitchin," and the "Brick House," and afterwards found its way into the shop from whence it was rescued. The seal is in fine preservation, in the custody of the secretary, and is still used in the authentication of documents. — Colonial Records of the N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 160, 252–256.

The 21st Regiment (see May 25) is reviewed near the city by Gen. Gage. "The Exercise was continued for several Hours, and exhibited a great Variety of Manoeuvres and Modes of Attack, Defence, Advance and Retreat, 6c, with Firing and Movements suitable to every Occasion in actual Service; all which were performed with surprizing Dexterity and Exactness, to the great Delight of every Spectator, but cannot be described, with Justness and Propriety, by a Person not Master of the Subject." — N. Y. Merc., June 8, 1772. Part of the regiment left on June 4 (q. v.). Three companies of the 60th Regiment (Royal Americans) arrive from Quebec. — N. Y. Merc., June 8, 1772.

The first division, consisting of 3 companies of the 21st Regiment (see June 2), embarks for Albany, "on their Way to Quebec." — N. Y. Merc., June 8, 1772. The last division embarked on June 19 (q. v.).

At midnight, a number of people in boats board the armed schooner "Gaspee" at Providence, Rhode Island, bind the crew, and send them ashore, and then set fire to the vessel. A pistol is "discharged by the Captain of the Schooner, and a musket or Pistol from one of the Boats," by which the captain is wounded. The ship is totally destroyed. — N. Y. Merc., June 22, 1772. This event is considered by Rhode Island writers as the earliest aggressive conduct of the patriots. — Winsor, Nat. Hist. Hist. of Am., VI: 90. "The affair created a great sensation in England, and it was ordered that those engaged in it should be sent to England for trial. For this purpose the home government appointed colonial commissioners [see Dec. 29], who sat at Newport from the 4th to the 12th January, 1773, to try the captives. At the conclusion of their deliberations they required Wanton, the governor of Rhode Island, to arrest the offenders, for trial in England. He appealed for directions to the Assembly, as did Stephen Hopkins, the chief justice of the highest court. That body referred the matter to the discretion of the chief justice, and he acquiesced in the conduct of his successor, or to allow the arrest, of any person for transportation. Nothing came of the order except ill-humor in England and indignation in the colonies, where it was regarded as an invasion of their constitutional right of trial by their peers." — Ibid., VI: 53.

In a horse-race at Fowles Hook, for a purse of £30, "Mr. Bird's Horse Liberty" beat "Mr. Cortell's Horse Tulip, and Capt.
De Lancey's Horse Poppet. On the 10th, a purse of £59 was won by "Mr. Water's Horse Auctioneer," which outran "Mr. Cornell's Horse Richmond, Mr. Elsworth's Horse Quicksilver, and Mr. Baturin's Horse,"—N. Y. Merc., June 15, 1772.

Two companies of the "Royal Regiment of Artillery" march from the city "to encamp on Hempstead Plains for the Summer Season."—N. Y. Merc., June 15, 1772.

Gov. Tryon is informed that he has been elected a member of the Commons for the last of the Lords in the Senate because "The benevolent Sentiments which your Excellency was pleased to express when this Society had the Honour of addressing you, have laid them under an indispensable Obligation to give the most public Testimony in their Power, of the high Sense they entertain of your humane Disposition." On the 18th, the New York Land Company is organized by the Corporation of New York, to lay out a thousand acres on the Island of Manhattan, and is called the Corporation of Royal North River—M. C. C. III., vi., 1770), was similarly honored.—N. Y. Merc., June 22, 1772.

"This Board having heretofore agreed to Grant to the Governors of the Hospital in the City of New York in America, the westernmost half of a Lot of Ground formerly belonging to John Harris, in order to erect a Hospital on [see Sept. 12, 1771], since which the said Governors have purchased a Lot of Ground in Some more convenient place [see May 20], and now request the board do Contribute a Sum of Money in Lieu thereof;Ordered theretofore that this board do Contribute to the said Hospital the Sum of one thousand pounds, viz., in Lieu and in consideration of the aforesaid Ground.—M. C. C., VII., 364. A receipt for the £1,000 was presented to the board on Dec. 17, by the treasurer of the society.—Ibid., VII., 397.

The Trinity Corporation again petitions the common council for the "Land and Soil fronting on the Hudson River, beginning on the North side of Vesey Street" and extent about described in the original petition (see Feb. 26, 1760, and April 7, 1769). This time the request is considered and agreed to. In payment, the corporation of the city is to receive forever the "Yearly Quit Rent of one Shilling p'foot for every foot so to be Granted them fronting Hudson River," from the date of the grant.—M. C. C., VII., 365. The water lots thus granted lay between Vesey and Barclay Sts., between Murray and Warren Sts., and between Warren and Chambers Sts. On June 22, Trinity Corporation received the report of its committee, announcing the favourable action of the common council.—Trin. Min. (MS.).

The last division of the 21st Regiment embarks for Albany.—N. Y. Merc., June 22, 1772. See June 4.

"The Committee that was appointed to apply to the City Corporation [see June 16] for a Grant of the Water Lots fronting the Church Lands reported that the said Corporation had agreed to grant to this Corporation so much of the Water Lots fronting the Church Lands as lay between Vesey Street and Barclay Street also between Murray Street and Warren Street and between Warren Street and Chambers Street at the rate of one Shilling p'foot. Ordered that the said Committee apply for the Grant accordingly.—Ibid., VII., 366.

An advertisement informs the public that "The Stage Coach between New-York and Boston which for the first Time sets out this Day from Mr. Fowler's Tavern... at Fresh-Water, in New-York, will continue to go the Course between Boston and New-York, so as to be at each of those Places once a Fortnight, coming in on Saturday Evening and setting out to Return, by the Way of Hartford, on Monday Morning. The Price to Passengers, will be 4d. New-York, or 3d. lawful Money per Mile, and Baggage at a reasonable Rate. Gentlemen and Ladies who choose to encourage this useful, neat, and expensive Undertaking, may depend upon good Usage, and that the Coach will always put up at Houses on the Road where the best Entertainment is provided. . . ."—N. Y. Jour., June 25, 1772.

A New York penny was worth only 3d. of a Boston penny because in New York eight shillings were reckoned as 10, whereas in Boston they were reckoned. Boston money was called "lawful" because its ratio to English sterling money had been regulated by law.—Wright, Currencies of the Brit. Colonies in Am. (1763), lii; lxxii; Adler, Money & Money Units of the Am. Colonies, 1-3.

The board orders the draft of a grant to the "Rector & Inhabitants of the City of New York in Communion with the Church of England" for "a triangle of ground in the Out Ward of the city at the end of Bowery Lane [see Jan. 31], bounded by the road leading to Kingsbridge, the Bloomingdale Road, and the fence of Benjamin Nicoll, and terminating in the south where the Kingsbridge and Bloomingdale Roads separate.

This is to be used as the site for a church, school, and burying-ground.—M. C. C., VII., 298-99, 366. This triangular plot of ground may be located near Madison Square. It was never actually granted to Trinity, the projected action never having been consummated (see Nov. 1, 1786, March 12 and Aug. 20, 1788, and June 24, 1789). Part of this triangle came into use, towards the latter part of the eighteenth century, for a burying ground for the Church of Our Lady of Victories, but this use of the ground ceased in 1797.—M. C. C. (MS.), XII, 170. Part of the tract was granted, in 1807, to the United States government for an arsenal.—Ibid., XVI, 262-64: XVII, 360. The arsenal later became the first home of the Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents—the House of Refuge. This was in the year 1815.—Ibid., I, 156-59.

The public is assured that the lottery "for raising a sum of 29 money for building a safe and convenient harbor (so necessary for preserving the crafts, vessels and property of traders in general) on the North-River [see April 23]" has met with great encouragement, and will certainly be drawn on the 15th of July next.—N. Y. Merc., June 29, 1772. No evidence appears that the drawing actually took place, or that the improvement contemplated was carried out.

Scotch street, for which one searches in vain on any plan of the city, can be identified on Ann St., near the advertisement in the Mercury: "To be sold at public Sale. . . . A House and Lot of Ground lying in Ann Street, commonly called Scotch-street, two Stories high, with a good Brick Wall all round."—N. Y. Merc., June 29, 1772. For earlier mention of this street, see March 8, 1770.

Cover on the residence on Hudson River, now Avery St. (see June 3) arrives in the city.—N. Y. Merc., July 6, 1772. The regiment was reviewed on Aug. 8 (p. 72).

One of the attractions of Vauxhall Gardens, as announced by Mr. Francis, is "a number of Wax Figures as large as life, drest in the newest and most elegant manner, representing their present Majesties, King George and Queen Charlotte, sitting on the throne, with their usual attendants, several of the nobility, &c, properly disposed in a large apartment genteelly fitted for the purpose, and proper persons to shew the same, from eight in the morning till ten in the evening."—N. Y. Merc., July 6, 1772. Before July 27, Francis had added to his collection of wax figures the "Banquet in Macbeth, with the Appearance of Banquo's Ghost, and a large Gallery filled with Spectators," also "Harlequin and Columbine," finished in "a very pleasing Manner."—Ibid., July 27, 1772.

The common council appoints a committee "to cause a Cover to be made over the fish market at C Counseys Slip."—M. C. C., VII., 366. A payment of £2,001:94 was ordered by the board on Dec. 2 in settlement of an account "for Building a fish Market; and £1,017:14s. 1 year later, for work done there."—Ibid., VII., 397, 462. Cf. April 16 and see De Vos, Market Book, 117. See also, regarding Counseys (or the Great Fish) Market, Landmark Map Ref. Key, III., 938.

The engrossed grants to Augustus and Frederick von Cortlandt John Vredenburgh, Josias and Henry Rensome, Henry Holland, Wal- dron Blau, and William Milliner," for the Water Lots in front of their Respective Dwelling Houses in the Dock Ward "are approved and signed by the mayor.—M. C. C., VII, 366 City Grants, Liber Deeds, I, 213-28. These lots were situated on the south side of Water St., extending south into the East River, between Broad St. and Counseys Slip.—See Jan. 29, 1767.

The common council grants a petition for filling up Peck's Slip (see Aug. 24, 1767)" at the Expense of the Petitioners." This action followed the consideration of two petitions, one for filling up, and the other against it.—M. C. C., VII., 365, 366. To compare the shore line before and after the filling, see Pls. 42 and 64, Vol. 1, the first depiction of Boston as it was in the 17th century. The board voted to contribute £15 "towards making the front wall across Pecks Slip."—M. C. C., VII., 368. The expense necessary "to Extend the drain" was also assumed by the board.—Ibid., 366, 397.

Alderman Gautier lays before the board "an Account of the Cost of two fire Engines, belonging to Thomas Tiller—the largest of which this board agreed to purchase." He is "requested to purchase the Same."—M. C. C., VII., 366. On July 23, the board ordered that William Shipman be paid £1,177:11 for a fire-engine.—Ibid., VII., 368. A committee was empowered, on Sept. 9, to buy an engine from David Hunt.—Ibid., VII, 373. Hunt was paid £50 on Sept.
The provincial council approves the draft of a charter for the Society Library.—Col. Coun. Min., 367.

On this date Gov. Tryon administered oaths to the municipal officers at his house (now tiled) on East Indian Island, and they occupy the same until an order shall issue from this board to the contrary.—M. C. C., VII: 368. See Sept. 6, 1769.

Gen. Gage reviews the first battalion of the Royal Americans (see July 1) in a field near the city.—N. Y. Merc., Aug. 10, 1772. See Sept. 7.

The ship “Grace” (320 tons) is launched from the yard of Messrs. Totten and Crossfield. “This Ship is esteemed one of the most complete Vessels, of her Burthen, that this Port has produced, even by the masterly Hands of these Builders, who seem continually to improve upon their own Construction, and to attain still higher Degrees of Perfection.”—N. Y. Merc., Aug. 24, 1772.

The “Britannia” had been launched from the same yards three years earlier (see Aug. 17, 1769).

A committee is appointed to “Confer with & Receive Proposals from the Proprietors of the Houses and Lots of Ground fronting the West Great Dock in the South Ward of this City relative to the Terms of their Obtaining Grants of said West Great Dock.”—M. C. C., VII: 371. For the board’s action in regard to this, see Sept. 17.

“Since on last 6 Companies of his Majesty’s 60th or Royal American Regiment [see Aug. 8] embarked here for Elizabeth-Town, Amboy, and New-Brunswick, in New-Jersey.”—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 7, 1772. The second battalion embarked on Oct. 31 (p. 6).

“The Parsonage House,” where Mr. Treat, the Presbyterian minister, lives, is in need of repair. “The Roofs of the Dormitory [i.e. the ‘House’] Back Yard; and the Peace Officers’ House added to its Height; and a Post put down.”—Proceedings of the Trustees of the First Presby. Ch. (“Wall Street Church”), Vol. I.

Mayor Hicks communicates to the common council a request received from William Walton and Stephen de Lancey “for the Loan of some of the City Arms. . . . to discipline their Respective Companies.” De Lancey and Walton have promised to “Give Security for the return of the same when required.” The board accedes to the request.—M. C. C., VII: 371.

The council issues order for the erection of a “Stone Stoop” in front of the “New Goal,” provided the expense for the same does not exceed £50. Payment of £30-12s for the same was authorized on Dec. 2.—M. C. C., 373, 393.

Water lots are granted by the common council to “the Proprietors of the Houses & Lots of Ground fronting the West Great Dock” (see June 3, 1768). Five shillings quit-rent yearly they are to pay to the city “for every foot they shall hold upon the River.”—M. C. C., VII: 376.

John Harris Cruger is appointed “Treasurer or Chamberlain to this Corporation” by the common council. The board made three motions: (1) taking into Consideration the Advanced Age and bodily Infirmities of Isaac De Peyster Esq’ their Present Chamberlain; and also considering that greater Activity and Diligence is required for the punctual Discharge of the said Office than can reasonably be excepted [expected] of him.” De Peyster had tendered his resignation to the Board, as to Range with the Corner of the Street, that adjoins the House of John Martin & no farther.”—M. C. C., VII: 379-80. De Peyster, it seems, was disinclined to retire, for though he was ordered, on Oct. 14, to deliver in his accounts and, on Nov. 13, to appear before the board in relation to the accounts of his chamberlains, until Feb. 17, 1773.—M. C. C., VII: 385-86, 390, 402. Cruger’s name is mentioned as associated with the office of chamberlain as late as Feb. 28, 1776 (ibid., VIII: 150), and he was doubtless serving at the time when municipal government was disrupted by the military operations of the Revolution (see May 14, 1776).
The Council:

Dec. 23. The Govt. sent for me to the Hill (formerly Mortiers Country House). In coming Home a Foot with Fanning—I told him that the Govt. had such Dejections at Times, that he was inclined to give up his Government in his opinion. That the Spirit of Party deprived him of confidential & agreeable Friendships, as the Jealousy he was obliged to oppose to the Jealousy of Parties for the Dignity of Government obliged him to be shy.—That he was obliged to act as it were alone.—That he could get no Credit with the Body.—That he had insolent Requests from both Parties.—That there was a painful Vigilance to be maintained & that the Business he had to do was various and immense.—That his Temper would not permit him to neglect any Thing, & that Nothing but a Fear of Expense in England prevented his Return Home.

He concluded to cast his Labour upon the Council, to continue indifferent to both Parties—to live more temperately by keeping less Company, & assured him that his Conduct had not only preserved Peace, but that he stood in high Reputation all along the Continent as a spirited able Gov’t.—That he had nothing to fear, & that the Parties favored his Power as both courted his Smiles—that he could do what he pleased.

"From the whole I begin to apprehend that there is a struggle between his Pride, which is great, & his Fears which are the Effect of ill Health—I wish the latter may not gain strength, & falling in with his Friend to British, induce him to cast him to the Council, who are as yet ... with the De Lanceys."—Wm. Smith’s Diary (MS.), IV.

Dec. 25. Gov. Tryon writes to the lords of the committee of the privy council: "It is not uncommon, My Lords, to find in New or Inflected several distict offices engraven by one person, and it is owing to the low State of their business; but when the increase of the Country makes the necessity of some monopolies, their inexpediency must be very manifest, the public becomes ill served, and the Govern’d weakened ... I think it my duty therefore to ask your Lordships of the employment and variety of the employments exercised here by Mr. George Clarke (Jr.)."

"He is Clerk of the privy council, Clerk of the Legislative Council, and Clerk for the Court for appeals in Error. He is Secretary, and as such, all civil Commissions, Grants, patents, pardons, and every instrument passing the great seal goes thro’ and returns to his bands to be recorded. ... He is also Clerk of the Supreme Court. ... Mr. Clarke alone has the keeping of all the minutes pleadings and Records that belong to this Court with the Custody and all the profits of the seal, for he is sole Clerk of all that immense variety of business which in three of the Great Courts of Westminster is divided among four or five clerks."—Wm. Smith’s Diary (MS.), IV.

"Resolved that the Thanks of this Board and also a piece of Plate of the Value of Thirty-Guineas be presented to the Reverend Doctor Myles Cooper 2d Pres. of King’s College for his services in procuring a Recission of the Quit Rents on the Tract of Land lately granted to the College by different officers."—Trin. Misc. (MS.).

"A list is prepared of the books, etc., in the provincial secretary’s office—N. Y. Col. Miss., Vol. XCIX (Albany), lost in capitol fire.

At about this time (probably shortly before) was drawn the large Atlantic Neptune View of New York from the south-west (the engraved title reads from the north-west). This view, which shows very clearly the fort and the buildings which it contained at this period, as well as Trinity and the other churches, extends as far north as the ferry to Paulus Hook, and is one of the finest, rarest, and most important views of the city. It is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 44.

Pres. Myles Cooper, of King’s College, thus described the college as it was at this time: "The College is situated on a dry gravelly soil, about one hundred and fifty yards from the bank of the Hudson river, which it overlooks; commanding from the eminence on which it stands, a most extensive and beautiful prospect of the opposite shore and country of New Jersey, the City and Island of New-York, Long Island, Staten Island, New-York Bay with its Islands, the Narrows, forming the mouth of the Harhour, etc., etc.; and being totally unencumbered by any Public establishment within admiring the purest circulation of air from the river, and every other quarter, has the benefit of as agreeable and healthy a situation as can possibly be conceived.".—Moore, An Historical Sketch of Columbia College (1845), 56.

In this year, Caleb Hyatt erected his tavern (Liber Deeds, XLIV: 169; Liber Mortgages, XX: 119) at what is now the west

THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND
The following interesting Advice were this Day received here, by two Vessels from Newport, and by an Express by Land.

Sir,

This evening intelligence has been received, that about 1200 of the regular troops, have proceeded from Boston toward Concord; and having fired on the inhabitants, and killed a number of them, at Lexington, are now actually engaged in butchering and destroying our brethren in the most inhuman manner. The inhabitants opposed them with real and courage, and numbers have already fallen on both sides. Reinforcements were on their way, at 10 o'clock from Boston, and the provincials were alarmed, and mustering as fast as possible. It appears necessary therefore, that we immediately make some provision for their subsistence, and his honour, the lieutenant governor, defers your immediate attendance, to advice and order in that behalf; he being very ill, occasions my writing in his behalf. We shall impatiently wait your arrival, as numbers are ready, and wait only for orders to proceed.

The country's friend and yours, signed
STEPHENV HOPKINS.

Providence, Wednesday night (19th) 10 o'clock.

Providence, April 9, 1775.

Having received advice that our brethren in Massachusetts Bay, are attacked by a body of regular troops, and that many of our friends are slain: These are to request your honour, that you will be pleased to call the General Assembly of this colony to meet together as soon as possible, on Monday next, at half past seven, that they may make such necessary provision for the common defence, as shall be thought necessary.

We are your honour's obedient servants,
To Governor Wanton.

Signed by 20 of the principal inhabitants of Providence.

Watertown, Wednesday near 10 o'clock, 15th April, 1775.

To all friends of American Liberty, be it known:—A large body of men, in the break of day a brigand, consisting of about 900 or 1200 men, landed at Ship's farm, at Cambridge, and marched to Lexington, where they found a company of our colony militia in arms, upon whom they fired without any provocation, killed 6 men, and wounded 4 others,—by an express from Boston, we find another brigade, consisting of 200 men, from Boston, supposed to be about 1200. The bearer, Israel Bickal, is charged to alarm the country quite to Connecticut, and all persons are desired to furnish him with fresh horses, as they may be needed,—I have spoken with several who have seen the dead and wounded; pray let the Delegates from this colony to connect fee this, they know Col. Usher of Brookfield one of the Delegates.

J. Palmer, one of the Committee.

Since the above written, we have received the following by second express.

Sir,

Thursday 5 o'clock afternoon.

I am this moment informed by express from Woodstock, taken from the mouth of the express, that arrived there at two o'clock P.M., that the constell between the first brigade, that marched to Concord, was still continuing this morning at the town of Lexington, to which town the said brigade had retired. That another brigade, said to be the second, mentioned in the letter of this morning, had landed with a quantity of military, to the place where the fight did. The provincials were determined to prevent the two brigades from joining their strength, if possible and remain in great need of succour.

N. B. The regulars, when in Concord, burnt the court house, took two pieces of cannon, which they rendered useless, and began to take up Concord bridge, on which Captain ____, (who, with many on both sides were burnt) then made an attack upon the King's troops, on which they retreated to Lexington.

I am, your humble servant. Eb. Williams.

To Col. Obadiah Johnson, a Canterbury.

P. S. Mr. Tarland, of Campfield-merchant, has just returned from Boston, by way of Providence, who conversed with an express from Lexington, who further informs, that about 4000 of our troops had surrounded the first brigade, abovemenioned, who were on a hill in Lexington; that the firing then continued, and there were about 300 of our men killed, and 120 of the regulars, as near as they could determine, when the express came away; it will be expedient for every man to go, who is fit and willing.

The above is a true copy as received per express from New-Haven, and attested in by committees of correspondence, from town to town.

side of Broadway, opposite the opening of Muscoota St. This — well-known road-house remained here at least until 1819, as it is shown on Randall's Map of that year, Pl. 86, Vol. III. Muscoota St. is the modern Broadway St., the former of Manhattan Island near King'sbridge.—See Landmark Map, Pl. 180, Vol. III.

William G. Forbes, admitted as a freeman of New York in this year, was one of the early American silvermiths. Records show that he was a member of the Gold and Silver Smiths' Society in 1796, and of Mechanics' Institute in 1802. Two alms boxes and a bowl made by him are described in Mert. Museum of Art Cat. of Exhibition of Silver used in N. T., N. J. and the South (1911), 24-25.

This being New Year's Day, a royal salute is fired "under the Rafters" at Fort George... with two Brass Field Six Pounders, by the First Royal Artillery Independent Company of Militia and the City of New York." As all the officers and men perform "their Duty with great Expertness and Regularity," they meet with "the general Approbation of all the Spectators."—N. T. Merc., Jan. 4, 1773.

Gov. Tryon presents, "through the Hands of Doctor Auchmuty... a complete Set of rich and elegant Hangings of crimson Damask for the Pulpit, Reading Desk, and Communion Table,—a Folio Bible, and several Folio Prayer Books, with a full Service of Plate, &c. for the Administration of the Lord's Supper and Service of St. George's Chapel. Such a generous Donation must endear his Excellency to every Friend of Religion and Virtue."—N. T. Merc., Jan. 4, 1773.

An extract of a letter from a "Gentleman of Character in London," printed in the Mercury, reads: "I hear your Militia are put on to march and collage marching and counter-Marching: It is well; but I am most desirous you should fortify; as sure as you live if you do not, the Town will be burnt about your Ears in the next War and in a couple of Years, or sooner, such an Event is like to take Place."—N. T. Merc., Jan. 4, 1773.

Smith records in his diary: "Schuyler dined in a Family way with the Govr who expressed his Unanimity about the Rhode Island Affair [see June 8, 1773]—The Spirit of Party in the Province... He is sickly and fearful—I foresee a Storm, and certainly the De Lancaster will lead or drive... He complimented of a Want of Friends."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

In this and several subsequent issues of his paper, Hugh Gaine advertises "Ratper's large and small Plans of the City of New York [see Pls. 41 and 42, Vol. I], to be sold very cheap."—N. T. Merc., Jan. 4, 1773. The plans had been advertised separately earlier (see Aug. 19, 1769, and Oct. 21, 1772).

Gov. Tryon, in a message to the assembly, says: "I have been obliged to order considerable repairs to be made to the mansion house in Fort George to make it habitable; the estatemes of which shall be laid before you." He adds that "The sum of money voted the other day for repairing the battery in Fort George, has been appropriated to such necessary, useful and ornamental purposes, as afford the clearest demonstration of the expediency and propriety of that vote, and cannot fail of giving satisfaction to the public."—Assemb. Jour. (1773), 4. On Feb. 18, the assembly resolved to allow him £1,764.14d. for "sundry repairs in Fort George, and the Mansion house therein, and on the battery."—Ibid., 69. See also Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 814 (Jan. 46).

The trustees of the New York Society Library advertise that they have received a charter of incorporation (see Nov. 9, 1772), and will admit new members upon the payment of $5 each.—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 11, 1773. Cf. Jan. 14.

Smith says that Tryon "has an Assembly who fear him as they will be ruined by a Dissolution, & a Council who will lose their Power if they lose the Assembly."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

The directors of the Union Library Society inform the public that "the Subscription Money which gives a Right in their Society, is fixed at the small Sum of Thirty Shillings; tho' the Library consists of near One Thousand Volumes, and is continually receiving new Works, and more than twice as many as in any other in the society.—N. Y. Jour., Jan. 14, 1773. See April 11, 1774.

"Henry William Stiegel, Proprietor of the first American Flint-glass manufactory, in Pennsylvania, is just arrived in this city, and opened a warehouse near the Exchange, the corner opposite to Mr. Waldron's..." He announces that his "Stay in town will be very short..."—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 14, 1773. Stiegel, a glassworker, who was finer and possessed more beauty and originality than any glass hitherto manufactured in America, is well known to modern collectors. It was manufactured at Manheim, Pennsylvania.

Gov. Tryon sends a message to the assembly regarding the hospital.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 853.

"At Mr. Cox's Long-room near the Liberty pole, to-morrow Evening the 21st inst. will be exhibited, the celebrated Lecture on Heads, with singing..."—Telegraph, Nov. 18, 1773. This was at Hamden Hall, corner of Warren St. and Broadway. On Jan. 28, an "Exhibitor" (probably the same lecturer) announces a lecture on the 29th on the same subject, and gives a long list of his illustrations. This was to be "At Mr. De la Montagne's Long Room, At the King's Arms, near the Liberty Pole."—N. Y. Jour., Jan. 28, 1773. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 979.

In a message to the assembly, Gov. Tryon says: "The increase of inhabitants in this colony, as well as the extent of its settlements since the late war, having necessarily multiplied the business of the courts of law, and rendered the duty of the judges proportionably burdensome and expensive, an addition to their salary is become essential to the advancement of justice, and proper for the due support of the honor of government."—Assemb. Jour. (1773), 48. St. Louis, Feb. 3, 1773.

A committee of the assembly suggests that, to remedy the evil of counterfeiting the paper currency of the colony, some device difficult to imitate be engraved, and copies of it pasted upon the bills. This device, in their opinion, might represent "an eye in a cloud,—a scarlet letter on a gallowa,—a weeping father and mother, with several small children,—a burning pig,—human figures forced into it by heads, and a label with these words, "Let the name of a Money Maker rot."—Assemb. Jour. (1773), 50. See March 3.

The De Lancaster's are certainly uneasy under him [Tryon], & mean either to ennable him for the Introduction of Ld Dunmore or Sir Wm Draper, or to hoist a bloody Flag to intimidate him."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

The legislature passes an act "to increase the Number of Firemen in the City of New York." This provides that 20 men shall be added to the existing number.—Col. Laws N. Y., V, 456-57. See Dec. 31, 1768, and Oct. 19, 1772.

The legislature passes an act "to prevent the Defacing the Statues which are erected in the City of New York." This provides that anyone found damaging the statues of George III and William Pitt (see Aug. 16 and Sept. 7, 1770) shall be fined £500.—Col. Laws N. Y., V, 457.

The act of May 4, 1773 (p. v), empowering the "Mayor Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New York, and their Successors to prevent & remove the particular Nuisances within the Fresh Water Extents of the City and legislature extended to the Out Ward.—Col. Laws N. Y., V, 455-56.

Tryon writes to the Earl of Dartmouth that almost every great seal sent from Great Britain arrives in this country "defaced and reduced to a small Lump of wax." This is due, he says, to "its being cruelly composed of Rosin which is reduced to powder by the friction of the voyages," but if the seals were "formed of a proper mixture of Bees wax and Turpentine without any Rosin, they would arrive uninjured." The validity of instruments, such as commissions, has been doubted when the great seal is defaced.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 349.

What Gov. Tryon, in a letter to the Earl of Dartmouth, says: "The Governors, My Lord, of His Maj's Colonies on this Continent, meet with many Thorns in the Paths of their Administrations, and if they are not allowed on extraordinary emergencies, to put a liberal interpretation on his Maj's Instructions, and the Kings Ministers in general a construction on the Government Conduct of a faithful servant of the Crown in that Station, cannot long keep his ground, or preserve his Government in peace."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 350.

A prospectus in the form of a broadside announces that "James Ridgington, Bookseller, Printer, and Stationer, in New-York, proposes to publish a Weekly News-Paper, every Thursday, differing materially in its Plan from most others now extant; He has been honoured with Encouragement from the first Persons in this Country, and now begs Leave to solicit the public Patronage in behalf of Ridgington's New-York Gazetteer; or The Connecticut, New-Jersey, Hudson’s-River and Quebec Weekly Advertiser. He will communicate the most important Events, Foreign and Domestic. . . . The New Inventions in Arts and Sciences, Mechanics and Agriculture and other Useful Branches of History, together with a regular Journal of the Proceedings in Parliament, and the Speeches ... shall be constantly inserted. ... In short, every Particular that may contribute to the Improvement, Information and Entertainment of the Public, shall be constantly conveyed through the Channel of the New-York Gazzette. ... Subscriptions for this Paper, at Twelve Shillings, New-York, Currency, a Year, are taken at Mr. Nicholas Brooks’s, near the Coffee-House, in Market-Street, where a Book is open for that Purpose."—From the photostat in the N. Y. Pub. Library (Evans, 12982). Under date of March 8, 1773, Riverton published the same announcement in the N. T. Merc. of March 15 and 18. For his first issue of the new sheet, see April 22.

There is advertised: "To be let, (And enter’d upon the first day of March next) The country seat (situated about four miles from this city, at present occupied by his Excellency General Gage; it contains about 20 acres of land, under fine improvement; the garden affording in abundance almost every vegetable, together with a fine collection of fruit, and the meadow produces yearly upwards of thirty loads of clover, besides an improved spot of lucerne. The house, kitchen, stables, and stables in good order; a fine prospect down the East River to Corlears Hook, from the house; an excellent landing which admits a boat that will carry eight or ten cords of wood, to the dock. It is without dispute quite an elegant situation. For particulars, apply to Mrs. Provost, on Golden-Hill, next door to Benjamin Kissam’s, Esq."—N. T.
Merc. Feb. 15, 1773. The lease was still being advertised on April 26.—Ibid., April 26, 1773. Gage departed for England on June 8 (g.e.).

Gov. Tryon sends this message to the assembly: "As there is not among his Majesty’s ordinances belonging to this province any field artillery, and as such may be extremely necessary upon emergencies, I would recommend to you to make provision for obtaining a few short brass field pieces.

"At the same time I must apply to you for a supply of gun powder, as the small quantity remaining in Fort George when I arrived in the province is now expended."—Assem. Jour. (1773).
62. These matters were provided for on March 8 (g.e.).

The new city chamberlain (see Sept. 29, 1772) is authorized by the common council to "eue for as much Debts as now are, & shall hereafter Grow due & belong to this Corporation."—M. G. C., Feb. 7, 1773, 401.

Mr. Walton lays before the assembly "sundry accounts of monies" expended by himself and Mr. Jauncey in repairing the battery in the city of New York, and "making carriages for the guns therein."—Assem. Jour. (1773), 75. See March 8.

Mr. Walton, on March 3, (g.e.), informed the assembly, in a petition to Gov. Tryon, that Benjamin Blagge, an alderman and justice of the peace of the city and county of New York, was commissioned last October, under the great seal of the province, as a coroner,—an office which, under the laws of England and the charter of the city, he could not occupy while holding the other two. They ask that, as his appointment to the office of coroner is void, the governour will appoint another person to fill the office.—
M. G. C., VII, 405-8. The original draft of this petition is preserved in metal file No. 6, city clerk’s record-room. The governour promised, on May 3 (g.e.), that he had nominated Blagge’s son, John, to succeed to the office of coroner, the latter having resigned.—
Ibid., VII, 419.

An advertisement informs the public that "Sharpe Curtenius, and Lyde, Have rebuilt (at a considerable expense) The New-York Air-Furnace [see April 30, 1767] In a more completer manner than before it was Burn’d down [see Nov. 1772], and as they have provided themselves with a sufficient stock of pig metal, &c. they propose to carry on the foundry business in all its Branches with great diligence, and Fatter themselves that the friends of America will encourage them, by preferring goods manufactured in their own works, to those of England, when they are as good, and cheaper than they can be imported from Europe."—N. T. Merc. Feb. 22,

The harbour is so full of ice that many people walk, "over the East River to Long-Island, and back again."—N. T. Merc., March 14, 1773.

The following resolutions are passed at a town-meeting in Mendon, Mass.: "Z Resolved, That all Men have naturally an Mar. equal Right to Life, Liberty and Property, Therefore,
1. Resolved, That all just and lawful Government must necessarily otr here, according to the free Consent of the People.
3. Resolved, That the Good, Safety & Happiness of the People is the great End of Civil Government; and must be conidered as the only rational Object, in all original Compacts & Political Institutions.

4. Resolved, That a Principle of Self-preservation, being deply planted by the God of Nature in every Humane Breast, is necessary, not only to the well-being of Individuals; but also to the Order of the Universe. ... Therefore
5. Resolved, That a voluntary Renunciation of any Powers or Privileges, included in, or necessarily connected with a Principle of Self-preservation, is manifestly acting counter to the Will of the great Author of Nature, the supreme Legislator. ... Therefore 6. Resolved, That a Right to Liberty & Property (which are natural Means of Self-preservation) is absolutely unalienable: and can never lawfully be given up by ourselves, or taken from us by others."—Bryant & Gay, Popular Hist. of U. S., III: 4743; Am.
Antiquarian Soc. Proceedings (April 27, 1870), 13. Winsor thinks these are probably the earliest "chullations" of independence.—
Winsor, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VII, 217. For the "Mecklenburg Resolves," see May 31, 1775.

Last Week his Excellency our Governor ordered 100 Cords of Fire Wood to be distributed amongst the Poor of this City, the greatest Part of which the indigent have already received from his bountiful Hand."—N. T. Merc., March 1, 1773.

"The Tan-Yard, at the East Ferry, belonging to the Estate of Mr. John Robinson, deceased, is offered for Lease.—N. T. Merc., March 1, 1773. See March 23.

Dartmouth writes to Gov. Tryon: "A well regulated Militia is 3 certainly a very constitutional establishment and it will be a satisfaction to me to find that the act passed by the legislature of New York for that purpose has been framed in such a manner as to be liable to no objection; at the same time it does not appear to me that this is in the present moment, so much an object of attention as to require any new or particular managements, that may either induce the necessity of greater bounties upon the people, or divert them from the pursuit of those more useful arts, which ought to be cultivated in times of so great public tranquillity."—N. T. Col.
Doc., VIII: 356.

The assembly resolves that "a sum not exceeding £500 be applied in repairing the barracks in the city of New York."—Assem.
Jour. (1773), 88. Gov. Tryon had requested £500 for that purpose. —Ibid., 83.

"We have had a long Session of the Assembly ever since the 7 Jan? . . . It has bad and will have lasting Effects. I date it from the Abatement if not the Ruin of the Power of the De Lancey Family, and the rise of Mr. Cruizers, they have a more real In fluence in Town, in the Assembly and in the Council, unless by some unforeseen Event they can restore it—Many Causes contributed to it.—I will enumerate such as I recollect—
"I The People have discovered in the 3 Families a Rage for Offices.

II The Detection of a Design to govern the Govt. or drive him away for the Return of Ld Dunmore—Tryon was popular and the High Church particularly attached to him.

III The Merchants turned upon the City Members for cheating them in a Bill to Amend the Flour Act. The Affair appeared at stand still.

"Our Flour had got into Repute in the West Indies, and the Chamber of Commerce had formed a Design to amend the Law, agreeable to that in Pennsylvania, resolving to have but one Inspect-ator—Notes were given to the City Members for the Purpose. ... Cruizer the Bakers [see November 1772], to bring in as Bakers for Inspectors, & the Bill when it came up amounted to nothing else—all the Coffee House was in an Upset & an open Quarter ensued.

IV—Much about the Same Time the Common Spirit appeared in the Re Eli Reformed. The New Commissioner Alderman for Montgomery Ward in spite of all the Interest that could be made for Wm Walton—This taught both the Assembly & People without Doors that the old Despotism was broke, & the Members had hourly Experience of it in losing Bills Motions &c in spite of their Aid" (see Feb. 19).—Wm. Smith’s Diary (M.A.), IV.
CHRONOLOGY: THE REVOLUTIONARY PERIOD: 1763-1776

The sum of £1,000 is granted by the legislature "for furnishing Mar. his Majesty's Troops quartered in this Colony with Necessaries to 1773 the first Day of January next."—Col. Laws N. Y., VI: 493-94.

The legislature acts an pass "to remedy the Evil this Colony is exposed to from the great Quantities of counterfeit Money introduced into it." (see Feb. 5). This provides that a number of commissioners "cause such plate or plates, and Device or Devices to be formed and engraved, as they shall judge to be most difficult to be imitated and counterfeited . . . and forty thousand Copies thereof to be struck off upon thin paper to be pasted, glued &c. and to issue by this light as plated. These plates or devices were to cost not more than £500.—Col. Laws N. Y., VI: 510-13. The expenses for engraving and printing actually amounted to £426.—Assem. Jour. (1775), 32.

A law is passed by the legislature providing that the excise on spirituous liquors be appropriated for 20 years as follows: £200 (part of the £1,000 to be raised by excise in the city and county of New York) is to be paid annually for 20 years to the governors of the hospital (see March 24, 1772) which is to be built; and the remaining sum of £400 is to be paid for the first five years to the corporation of the Chamber of Commerce, "for encouraging a Fishery on the Sea Coast for the better supplying the Public Markets of the City," during the remaining 15 years this sum is appropriated for repairing public roads.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 4531 Col. Laws N. Y., VI: 500-10.

The resolution concerning fishing was worked out by the Chamber of Commerce in a system of bounties to the owners and crews of fishing boats who succeeded in supplying the New York markets with the largest quantities of fish of various kinds.—Rivington's Gazetteer, April 29, 1773; De Veo, Market Book, 117-19.

The legislation passed an act "for the correction and the Punishment of the Poor" in the city of New York. This provides that the justices of any city, upon complaint made by the overseers of the poor, shall have the right to send any people whom they think may become a burden to the city back to the place where such people were last legally settled.—Col. Laws N. Y., VI: 513-22. A similar bill passed in the assembly in 1771, but failed to pass.—Assem. Jour. (1770-1), 21, 26.

Because "great Damages are frequently done on the Eve of the last Day of December, and on the first and second Days of January by Persons going from House to House with Guns and other Fire Arms, and being often intoxicated with Liquor, they not only put the Inhabitants in great Terror, but committed many Mischiefs," the legislature passes an act "to prevent the firing of Guns and other Fire Arms within this Colony."—Col. Laws N. Y., VI: 538-53.

The treasurer of the colony is ordered to pay the following amounts during the year 1773: £500 to Gov. Tryon to purchase Brass Field pieces (see Feb. 16) to carry Ball of six pounds weight, with proper Carriages, and also "such a Sum as will be sufficient to purchase one thousand Weight of Gun Powder for the use of Fort George and the Battery in the City of New York." £500 to Jacob Walton "for a Ballance due to him for providing Carriages for the Cannon on the Battery." £496 to Jacob Walton and James Jauncy (see Feb. 20) "for a Ballance due to them for repairing the Battery." £515 to James and Alexander Stewart "for repairs to the Flag in Fort George." £515 to Daniel Ebbets "for sundry Repairs at Fort George, the Store House, and Fences" from 1768 to Feb. 4, 1773.—Col. Laws N. Y., VI: 498-599.

After postponing the assembly, Gov. Tryon makes a speech of the necessity for the Country to unite. "We have no new Business together for two Sessions, and it is very proper we should know each other for our future Regulation. I wish to promote the Interest of the Province, and find it very disagreeable to me to be crossed by your Parties. I know no good End that Party Spirit can serve either in Difference between the two, nor another—You are equal to me—the People of this Country are all loyal Subjects as far as I know and I will make no Difference—I will take no sides myself, and desire that I may not be dealt with or crossed for Party Purposes—If you will maintain Parties keep the Party Spirit to yourselves—I mean to visit all that visit me, whether of one Party or the other, without exciting any Man's Jealousy—I will act from no Party Views, & nothing that is of a Party Nature will recommend the Man or the Measure to me. If I can't manage the affairs of the Province, I will quit it.—My own Ill Health makes the "Attachment" to my Contemporaries less very light upon me, But yet I will submit to the Duties of my Station, as long as I can serve it, with Honor to myself or advantage to the King or the Province—There have been Schemes to draw me into Parties—Projects to disgrace & degrade your Chief Magistrate —I shall not prevent them. These and several others of the same kind the Council will not stand between the Govt & the People, he can neither be useful nor happy . . . Party there is and I am rendered constantly uneasy by it. It is is this that may perhaps induce me to speak warmly, but I mean the public Good, & when ever I find that my Intentions to serve the Province are generally ill taken, I will take myself away, I will do Business with every Body—I will do the Public Business with those whom your Parties force me to act with if it must be so, but I wish you would put an End to your Parties."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. Smith venturces the opinion that "this Address was doubtless to break the De Lancey Dominon (already tottering) in the Council, as essential to his own Safety, for he could not but have perceived, that they meant to depose him."—Ibid.

The bakers of New York, operating under a law passed 25 years ago, complain in a petition that the citizens are unable to support themselves and families on account of the increased expense of baking, and they ask a new assize for loaf bread. Regarding their expenses, they state that when the law was made "the Bakers bought their Wood for Ten Shillings, but now must give Twenty Shillings or more for a Cord," that the bakers could then "get one Fali of good Yeast for Three Shillings, but now must give Three Shillings for two or three Quarts thereof, and they are very often, in the Summer Season, obliged to throw it away by means of its being made so very bad;" that then "every Body could buy in the Markets &c as much for Two Shillings as now can be bought for Four Shillings," the large expired, the Licen- neymen are now greatly increasing;" that "the Bakers are now obliged to give one Loaf of Bread to the Retailers on every twelve Loaves they sell them, for their encouragement," and that "the Bakers at the Time of the Makling of the said Law could buy Flour from twelve to sixteen shillings per Hundred, but now must give Twenty Shillings and upwards for the same, and therefore must have more money." They must thus be "discouraged from Buying good Flour," and "be obliged to seek their reasonable Profits in buying the cheapest: Which they look upon as not only Losing the Character of having good Bread in the City of New York, and be- ing hurtful to the Citizens thereof, But also as being prejudicial to the Sale of the Flour of this Province at foreign Markets." They ask for an assize which will relieve them, and will give them "a reasonable Increase of Profit."—From the original petition (in mean file No. 6, city clerk's register), dated March the 17th 1772. The petition is referred to a committee for consideration with instructions to prepare a new table for the assise of bread.—M. C. C., VII: 411. See July 3, for their report.

At a consistory of the Dutch Church it is suggested that "Since Mr. Nicholas Welp, our free school master, has died, it is highly necessary to appoint another to instruct thirty poor children, in reading, writing and cyphering, both in English and in Dutch." The members decide to offer the position to Mr. Peter van Steenberg, resolving to allow him, besides a house and garden, £60 for teaching the children, £8 for firewood, £5 for books, paper, etc., and £8 for lighting gas and lighting their candles, at the schoolhouse [see Aug. 15, 1748] and Consistory Chamber is also so decayed that it cannot stand much longer." A proposal is therefore submitted "whether it would not be advisable to take down the old school-house at once, and put up a new one, several feet larger, and several feet higher than that now exist there, and put it one story higher for a Consistory Chamber and Catechising Room. Thus would the dwelling house and the new building be brought under one roof. The building should be a frame building, with a brick front, which can be built before the new school-master can arrive, and be ready for the commencement of the new year. There is an address in this matter.—Eccles. Rec., VI: 4260. On March 20, Mr. Van Steenberg accepted the position of schoolmaster upon the above terms.—Ibid., VI: 4261. The treasurer was ordered, on May 3, to "furnish such sums as may be necessary, from time to time, for the building the said school house, provided the amount does not exceed four hundred pounds."—Ibid., VI: 486. On Aug. 6, the new schoolhouse being ready for the reception of the children, the consistory adopted the following resolution for the education of the scholars and for the support of the school.—Ibid., VI: 486-65.

the "three Lots of Ground belonging to him, in the rear of the City Hall" for £350—M. C. C., VII: 440.

A committee of the common council reports regulations for "Streets in the Vicinity of the College,"—viz., Murray, Robinson, and Warren; the report is approved and orders are issued to "the Rector & Inhabitants of the City of New-York, and all other who are communicants of the Church of England" to "cause the said Streets to be Regulated."—M. C. C., VII: 411-22. Although orders were given by the common council for the regulating of Murray St. as early as June 28, 1768 (q. c.), the regulation of that street is first recorded at this time. The landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1066, gives 1785-6, as the earliest regulation of Murray St., overlooking the record of this date. For a later regulation of the street, see July 25, 1768.

The mayor produces to the common council a list of 396 names of persons who took out "Licenses for Retailing of Strong Liquors within this City from the 25th of March 1772 to the 25th of March last." The amount received from the same totalled £59314; of this amount the mayor is ordered to retain for himself 4£ for each license, plus £145 for his fees as "Clerk of the Markets" for the year ending May 1. He was further ordered to pay to the clerk as much as was warranted by the total receipts of £59314, was paid into the city treasury.—M. C. C., VII: 420-21.

Mrs. Brock, widow of Walter Brock, who for many years had maintained a tavern on Wall St., opposite the First Presbyterian Church (see 1758), announces that she has moved "to that elegant and pleasant situation of Mr. Martin's, at the White-Hall, opposite the Battery, at the Sign of the fry'd Oysters."—N. Y. Jour., May 20, 1775. Elias Pelletreau had formerly been proprietor of this tavern.—N. Y. Merc., May 31, 1772. In less than two years Mrs. Brock moved from Whitehall to the house of David Prevost, nearly opposite the Coffee House, at the White-Hall, May 6, 1775. This was near Wall and Water Sts. Timothy Day, "from the country," was the new proprietor of the Whitehall tavern.—N. Y. Jour., Feb. 6, 1775.

"To he Sold, at private Sale, the convenient and well situated Dwelling House of the Subscribers, being in Crown-Street, formerly called Osweego-Street the House is two stories High, having proper and convenient Rooms, with a good Cellar and Kitchen, three small Tenements Back, and a good Cistern in the Yard: It is very convenient for a Tavern, which has been kept there some Years, and in now as such, being in the Possession of David Gregg, Esq. —N. Y. Jour., May 20, 1775.

Elias Pelletreau, informs the public that he has "set up at 24 House on Golden-Hill, at the Sign of the Dish of fry'd Oysters, a place for cutting of Whale Bone."—N. Y. Merc., May 24, 1773.
The whale bone business seems to have flourished in this neighbour- ing street, and was the last "manufactory" in New-York—in Ann Street—closed its doors in 1920.

Washington arrives in New York from Mt. Vernon to take his son-in-law [error for stepson] Mr. [John Park] Custis, to King's College; he lodges "at a Mr. Farmer's," and passes the evening at Hull's Tavern. The following evening, May 27 (q. c.), he was present at Hull's Tavern "at the entertainment given by the citizens of New-York to Genl. Gage." On the evening of May 29, he was again at Hull's with the "Old Club." He was entertained at dinner during his stay by James de Lancey and Maj. Bayard. He returned to Mt. Vernon on May 31.—Writings of Washington (Ford ed.), VIII: 58-59. Regarding young Custis's short career at King's College, see Hist. of Columbia Univ., 43.

Mayor Hicks reports that Gov. Tryon desires "the Podd opposite the Barracks on the Battery" to be filled up, on the plea that "the same is at present but a nuisance." The common council orders,—M. C. C., VII: 417-19. The expense for this improvement totalled £320.—Ibid., VII: 400, 444, 454, 455: VIII: 65. This pond is clearly shown on Pl. 40, Vol. I.

The common council orders "that Alderman Blagge have permission to Erect a Hay Machine at such place Near the Corpora- tion Wholesale Market at the End of Old Market [the same market] as the Board shall judge most proper by the Alderman & Assistant of the West Ward."—M. C. C., VII: 423. The committee fixed "at the south end of the Oswego Market [the same market], opposite to the Middle Post there."—Ibid., VII: 427. See also De Voe's Market Book, 311.

The council approves unanimously the agreement regarding the boundary line between New York and Massachusetts (see May 18).—N. Y. Cal. Decs., VIII: 371.
The provincial council directs the sheriffs of New York and Albany to send in the census returns—Col. Coun. Min. 496.

Sunderland for burglary is confirmed by the provincial council.—Col. Coun. Min., 496.

An "elegant entertainment" is given by the "merchants and a great number of the inhabitants, at Hull's tavern to his Excellency Governor Gage on occasion of his approaching return to England."—Riviere's Gazetteer, June 2, 1773. Washington was present.—See May 26. See June 4, for the return enten-tainment given by Gen. Gage.

The flow and Harrow, a tavern kept by John Fowler, is advertised.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 98.

Gen. Gage left for Dartmouth: "I returned to this City from Connecticut the 24th inst, and have the pleasure to inform your Lordship that the Commissaries who met at Hartford have amicably and unanimously agreed upon a line of partition between the Governors of New York and Massachusetts Bay, and the Govt. Hutchinson and myself adhered to and approved of the same [see May 18]; one of the originals of this agreement with an actual survey of that part of Hudson's River, which lies opposite, upon a medium course, to the dividing line, I have the honor herewith to transmit to your Lordship. As the earlier the Royal decision is had upon this matter, the happier for both Governments. I am satisfied that a single reflection will be a sufficient motive with your Lordship to press forward this business. It is very probable the parties may not agree to run the line until the Royal confirmation is obtained.
I laid the above agreement before the Council Board the 24th when it was formally referred to and approved."—N. T. Coun. Docs., VIII. 371.

"The Scenery, Decorations, Dresses and Machinery of the Opera of Cymon, to be performed this Evening, are allowed by the most critical Judges of Theatrical Splendor, to be more Magnificent than could be expected at so early a Period, on the American Stage. During its Run at Philadelphia, several Gentlemen from London, attended the Representation, and made Compari-sions much to the Honour of our Infant Western Theatre. We are informed that as it is so very late in the Season, it can only be performed one Night."—N. T. Merc., May 31, 1773.

Gov. Tryon writes to Dartmouth: "The nine independent Companies formed last year in this City, were not em-beddled under any express clause of the Militia Law, except one of the Cadet Companies, but purely in virtue of the delegated prerrogative of the Crown. And as this Town, by its Situation lies extremely open to the insults of an Enemy, I thought, times of public tranquillity were the most leisure (and best) season to form a body that might in time of occasion be of public service."— N. T. Col. Docs., VIII. 372. Tryon sent this justification of his conduct in this matter, because of the criticism contained in Dart-mouth's letter of March 5 (q.v.).

Tracts to Dartmouth: "An Abstract of the State of Militia in the Province of New York, shewing the Number of Regiments Battalions and Companies with the Number of Colonels, L' Colonels, Majors, Captains and Subalterns in each County."
The record shows that New York County has 1 regiment, 1 battalion, 14 companies, 1 ensign, 1 lieutenant-colonel, 1 major, 14 captains, 28 lieutenants, and 14 ensigns, besides a troop of light horse and 9 independent companies.—N. T. Col. Docs., VIII. 377.

Jacob Bates, after a tour of Europe, advertised on May 31 to perform feats of horsemanship on this day, "At the Bull's Head, in Bowery-Lane."—N. T. Merc, May 31, and June 7, 1773.
For portrait, and account of the career of this famous English equestrian, see Greenwood's The Circus (1909), 26, 61. The location chosen for his exhibition was south of the wind-mill, about 200 feet north of Bayard St., on the west side of the Bowery. His last appearance was on Aug. 7, prior to which time the boards forming the "Riding Yard" or "Manage" (menage) were offered for sale.
—Ibid., 65; and N. T. Merc., Aug. 2, 1773.

Special effort is manifest in the brilliant celebration of the king's birthday. The events of the day include a review by the government on the Common, followed by the dinner and a series of toasts to the king at the fort, and an entertainment there in the afternoon. The decorations included many curious devices, and in the evening the "City was illuminated in a more superb and general manner than was ever known before. . . From one of the Bastions at the Fort, and from the Bowling Green, just beyond the Gate, some very curious Fire Works were played off; particularly the Representation of an Engagement between two Ships at Sea, which after a furious alternate Discharge, ended in the Destrucction of one of them give great Entertainment to a vast Multitude of People. The most elegant Part of the Entertainment was the brilliant Appearance of Ladies at the Fort, which must have been delightful to his Majesty himself, had he been present—and would have convinced him, that, as America vies with Great Britain, Itself in Loyalty and Affection to his Person and constitutional Governments—so it rivals in Embarkation for the Charming of Beauty and Female Attractiveness."—N. T. Jour., June 10, 1773.

An interesting bit of evidence as to the extent of the illuminations on this occasion is afforded in the account of Francis Child, the keeper of the jail, dated June 16, 1773. Against the date June 4, he certifies: "To Cash paid for 500 yards of Flannel for His Majesty's Birthday (by order) . . . 11:1:6."—From the original bill preserved in city clerk's record-room. In the evening, Gen. Gage gave a grand entertainment to a number of merchants and military gentlemen at Hull's Tavern "in the Broad-Way.— Riviere's Gazetteer, June 10, 1773; N. T. Jour., June 10, 1773.
Gen. Gage left for England June 8 (q.v.). Hull's was also the meeting-place of the "Sons of St. George," on Apr. 25—-Ibid., May 3, 1773.

Under Aug. 20, 1774 (q.v.), John Adams records his arrival in New York from Philadelphia, and stepping at "Hull's a a tavern the sign the Bunch of Grapes. The City Tavern, or Pleasure Arms, or "Hull's Tavern," as it was generally called under Hull's management, was known during its long existence by many names, but this is the only reference to it as the "Bunch of Grapes"; if, indeed, it ever bore such a sign. Stephens, in an article on "Famous Taverns," in the N. Y. Herald of March 16, 1894, calls this an error.

The common council waits upon Gen. Gage to present him with an address and the freedom of the corporation, "the Seal of the said Corporation being enclosed in a Gold Box and annexed thereto."—N. C. G., VIII. 426. The box had the city arms engraved on it (ibid., VIII. 425), and cost £100 (ibid., VIII. 427). An "elegant entertainment" marked the event, which cost the City £6110:6—-Ibid., VIII. 428; N. T. Gen., June 14, 1773.
The account of Robert Hall of this date for "Corporation Dinner to his Excellency General Gage" is preserved in the comptroller's office;
there were no at the banquet, and the liquors imbibed were "Benedict, Gen. Gage and his family embark for London. The general is attended by the chief military officials "to the Water-Side, at Murray's Wharf, near the Coffee House, where a Company of the Royal Artillery, under Arms waiting his coming. As soon as the ship got under sail, he was saluted by 10 Discharges of a Field Pieces, belonging to the Artillery; and as he passed the Battery, by a like Number from thence."—N. T. Jour., June 10, 1773. On Feb. 15 (q.v.), his country seat (about four miles from New York) had been advertised for rent.

A transport of Royal Welch Fusiliers arrives in the city. Two more came on June 12—N. T. Merc., June 14, 1773. The last transport arrived on June 16—-Ibid, June 21, 1773. The regiment was reviewed on June 30 (q.v.).

"His Excellency General Haldimand [see April 13] we hear has taken the House on Broad-Street, lately occupied by General Gage."—N. T. Merc, June 14, 1773.

"To be Sold at public Vendue, on the Premises, The first day of September next, or at private Sale any Time before, The large commodious and well fitted House and Gardens, in the Out-Ward of this City, wherein Col. James formerly lived, and is known by the name of Vauxhall. The situation is extremly healthy and pleasant, commanding an extensive prospect and down the North-River: The House has four large rooms on a floor, twelve fire-places, most excellent cellars, and adjoining the house is built a commodious barn, 86 feet broad and 36 feet high, with a large convenient kitchen and other offices, with a coach-house and stables, a well of the very finest water, pump, cistern, pigeon-house, &c.

"The gardens are large, and laid out in a next, genteel manner.
The larggest garden on the Common is surrounded by the dieren courses of toasts to the king at the fort, and an entertainment there in the afternoon. The decorations included many curious devices, and in the evening the "City was illuminated in a more superb and general manner than was ever known before. . . From one of the Bastions at the Fort, and from the Bowling Green, just

Head tavern, near the Exchange, in Broad-Street, who will accept June 1773 of half the purchase-money paid down, and security for the remainder.

"Until the premises are sold, there will be the usual genteel accommodations, Tea, Coffee, Hot Rolls, &c. and the elegant Wax-Work Figures to be seen at all hours in the day."

—N. Y. Merc. June 14, 1773. See May 16, 1765. The sale was not effected on Sept. 1, as appears from a later insertion in the Gazetteer, advertising a sale of household furniture for Sept. 5, in the Possession of the said Richard Varian.

Ready for engraving, and to be published by subscription, the following select pieces, consisting of a compleat set of church service, viz. A Te Deum laudamus; Jubilate Deo. Benedicite omnia opera Dominii; Contem Dominum; and Deus misericors; a burial service, and an anthem for any grand funeral; a compleat and well adapted anthem to be sung at any of the common contributions, is a grand chorus, Hosanna to the Son of David, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord, &c. proper to be sung at any meeting, or convention of the clergy, of any denomination; as also a Te Deum laudamus, for Palm Sunday, for May 21. &c.

Subscriptions are taken in by Messieurs Riviogton, Gain and Holt, printers in New-York; Michael Hillegas, Esq.; and J. Dunlap, printer in Philadelphia; Mr. R. Draper, printer in Boston; Mr. Southwick, in Rhode Island; Mess. Purdie & Dixon, printers in Williamsburg, J. Hamilton, Esq; for Baltimore and Charleston, in Maryland, and Mr. Green, printer in Annapolis.

"N. B. There never was any compleat set of church service made public, nor can any be procured but by subscription and a great expense; neither is any burial service of the kind to be purchased, unless it be that in Dr. Croft's anthems, which is sold for Two Guineas."—Rivington's Gazetteer, June 24, 1773.

The 25th Regiment of Welch Fusiliers (see June 9) is reviewed "in the Plain, near the Ship-Yards" by Gen. Halsham and Gov. Tryon. "The Soldiers wore Sprigs of Oak Leaves in their Caps, which we hear distinguished them at the Battle of Monmouth, in which, under Prince Ferdinand, this Regiment greatly distinguished themselves."

—N. Y. Merc., July 5, 1773. The regiment was reviewed again on Oct. 25 (q.v.).

July 21 We hear that Richard Colden, Esq., is appointed Surveyor and Searcher of this Port, in the room of his Father Alexander Colden, Esq; resigned."

—Rivington's Gazetteer, July 1, 1773.

A table for the assise of bread, formulated in response to the baker's petition of March 17 (q.v.) is adopted by the common council. On every 100 pounds of flour, the baker is allowed from seven to eight shillings, besides, to cover cost of wood, yeast, and his profit.—M. C. C., VII: 434.

A street in the "Meadows," leading from Queen Street to "James's, Street," in front of the house of John Woods, is complained of in a petition to the common council. It has become a nuisance by cattle sheltering themselves there, and by water settling there, so that several houses and lots have "become as it were little Islands especially in a showery time."—From the original MS, endorsed "filed July 11 1773," and "no order made hereto, as the 9th Street is already regulated," filed in box No. 6, in city clerk's record-room. The street alluded to as running from Queen Street to St. seems to be Buncows (now Madison St.)—See Fl. 42, Vol. L

Alexander Montrif is appointed by the common council as keeper of the bridewell to succeed Capt. Dobbs on Aug. 1, the latter having "Signified to Several of the members of this board his Intention of giving up said Office." Montrif's salary is to be £20 per year.—M. C. C., VII: 435. Montrif's original petition is preserved in city clerk's office, also many of his itemized bills, most of the latter in the comptroller's office. The one large item which appears repeatedly is for feeding vagrants; £ 20, the account of July 1, 1774, gives a list of such, composed of 735, with a total of 4,242 days care. In another account, of the same date, the charge for "work done" (see Nov. 20, 1767) totals £255: 10, and includes the spinning of cotton, cotton wicks, and the picking of "oakum."—From original MS. in comptroller's office.

The large number of vagrants in the city at this period probably explains an action of the common council of this date whereby constables or marshals were "Allowed the Sum of two Shillings for Every Vagrant that they shall apprehend Wandering in and about this City," provided an order be obtained from a justice of the peace for the removal of the vagrant to the place where such person "hath Gained a Legal Settlement."—M. C. C., VII: 435. This may serve to explain many charges for "ferriage" in the accounts of the bridewell keepers.

An account of Messrs. Burras and Cromer of this date contains the items: "To their time & trouble in going to Newhaven to bring ducasr who stole the Governors Cups [Cups] . . . £8: 16: 0."

—From original bill preserved in comptroller's office.

Anthony Fiva announces that he "Continues teaching grammar especially, at his house in Church Lane; to the Rev. Mr. (?)." He is also Professor of French, Spanish, and Italian Languages, in their greatest purity on moderate terms: He also attends ladies and gentlemen in their own houses at any convenient hour; likewise translates from any one of said languages into the English, or either of the two others, with accurate dispatch and secrecy for attorneys, merchants, &c. and as Mr. Fiva has an academical education, and resided many years in Paris and Madrid, he is therefore able to resolve any question that might puzzle his scholars, and entirely ground them both in the true accent of these polite languages, and all the rules of the syntax.—Rivington's Gazetteer, July 22, 1773. Fiva was still teaching in the city on Dec. 22, 1774—Ibid., Dec. 22, 1774.

The common council orders that the "Long Bridge at the 23 North End of the Exchange be planked, and that the Carriage Way, that is now Arch'd be Continued, to not Exceed fourteen feet."—M. C. C., VII: 417. Paychus for this work are recorded.

Ibid., VII: 440, 442. For a further order, see Sept. 22.

"The American Company" (see Apr. 12) advertises for this evening a benefit performance for "the Hospital to be erected in New-York." The presentation announced is "a Tragedy call'd The London Merchant, or A History of George Barnwell, to which will be added, a Dramatic Tale, call'd Edgar and Emeline." The people are urged to "countenance this Play with their Presence; or otherwise contribute their Mite towards so Good a Work as the providing a Receptacle for the Sick and Needy. It is hoped by the Friends of the Hospital, that the Moral of the Play to be acted will have some Influence with those who are, otherwise, no Friends to the Theatre." —N. Y. Merc., July 26, 1773; Aug. 2, 1773. See Oct. 20, 1774. An advertisement appears also of a forthcoming presentation at the same theatre of "Dr. Goldsmith's new Play, called, She stoops to conquer, or The Mistakes of a Night: An excellent dramatic Piece, lately brought on the Stage under the Patronage of Dr. Samuel Johnson, Author of the Rambler, &c. This Play is intended to recover the expiring Art of writing true English Comedy."—Ibid., July 26, 1773.

In this year and month Gerard Bancrot, city surveyor, made a "Map of the lands belonging to the City of New-York," and Sir Peter Warren, lying at Greenwich in the Outward of the City of New-York." This interesting and finely executed drawing shows the old Warren mansion, later known as the Van Ness house, and also Abingdon Road, Bowery Lane, Fitz Roy Road, Old Greenwich Lane, Great Kill Road, Skinner Road, Greenwich Street, etc. It is reproduced in A. P. I., Vol. III. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, Addenda, Vol. V.

John Simons, tavern-keeper, is paid £209: 6d. by the common council for "Tavern for liquor for the jury who sat to enquire of the Death of Mary Murphy."—M. C. C., VII: 440. Simons' tavern was at Wall and Nassau Sts. See Oct. 8, 1770. For other expenses incurred by the court at this tavern, see ibid., VIII: 19, 79, 98, 103, 115, 134, 139.

Lieut.-Col. John Reid, late of the 42d or Royal Highland Regiment, Henry Erley, and others report to the provincial council new outrages by Seth Warner, Remember Baker, Ethan Allen, and others. The congress hereupon call for the troops be called upon to assist the civil authorities.—Col. Coun. Min., 497. See Sept. 3.

"To be seen, At Mr. Allen's Stables, near the Fly Market; . . . . A remarkable fine young Elk, An animal hardly before seen in this city."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Sept. 2, 1773.

The first stone of the New York Hospital (see June 13, 1771) 1773. is advertised to be laid on this day by Gov. Tryon. The governors of the hospital intend to assist "in laying the Foundation of that truly charitable Asylum of the Distressed, who will have Reason to remember with Gratitude and bless the benevolent Founders, through a long Succession of future Generations."—N. Y. Jour., Sept. 1, 1773. The building thus started occupied a part of the Anthony Rutgers estate, Rancag, and was destroyed by fire on Feb. 28, 1773. (p. 57). For summaries of the hospital's history, see plate description, III: 570-71; Daily Ad., July 21, 1794; Man. Cont., (1845-1863), 257-61; and E. W. Sheldon's Historical Address (Oct. 26, 1847).

"The provincial council takes cognizance of Gen. Haldimand's refusal to send regular troops against the New Hampshire grants rioters, thinking the militia ought to be called out. Opinion of counsel was obtained on the 8th. On Sept. 29, Gen. Haldimand was to send 200 men to Crown Point and Ticonderoga for the suppression of the rioters; but declined as too late in the season.—Cal. Coun. Min., 498. On Dec. 15, Mr. Duane, of counsel for the New York patentees, was granted access to the papers relating to the riots.—Ibid., 499. See Feb. 8, 1774.

A very large and remarkable Sea Torrtoise, of a Species before unknown here," is brought to the city. It weighs about 80 lbs., is 7 ft. long, 3 ft. wide, and 15 in. thick. "The Fish is probably as good as any other Sea Torrtoise, but as it is as unknown Animal, no Body seems inclinable to eat it."—N. T. Merc., Sept. 13, 1773.

13. "Is there anything read: "To Be Seen. At the House of John Rawden, hair-dresser, facing the Post-Office, in Broad-Street: The Wooderful Electrical Fish: It is a native of South-America, has never before, that we know of, been seen in the northern parts of America or Europe."—N. T. Merc., Sept. 13, 1773.

15. "The Committee appointed to Visit in Church Lands and report what part was proper to be appropriated for a Burial Ground for the Negroes belonging to the Church Reported as their Opinion that the Block or piece of Ground bounded by Church Street, Read Street, Chappel Street and the Ground of Anthony Rutgers was proper for that purpose. Ordered that the said report be confirmed and that the same Committee have the said piece of ground (or such part thereof as they shall see fit for the present) fenced in, and also to report to this board what fees they think reasonable to be paid for the ground for a grave and for digging the same."

Trinity vestry approves the draft of a grant from the city of certain water lots fronts the church's land on the Hudson.—Ibid. Cf. June 16, 1772; Nov. 18, 1773.

A beautifully written statement of account of Abraham Mesier for work done, for which the city shows a total of £300 9s.; of which the balance due him is £300 2s. 4d. A new stationery is apparently kinking in America—Within a Fortiught... we have Intelligence that the East India Company resolved to send Tea to America to be sold they paying the Duty on Importation—That the Philadelphia, New York & Boston Captains had refused to ship it—that Mr. Pignon of London had then chartered a ship to carry 500 Chests to Boston 600 to N & as many to Philadelphia—That Wm Kelly had ingaged Abraham Oct. Lott the Treasurer to be their Factor... The Fact is that ever since the Duty of 3d per Pound had been laid, by the [late] Geo III [see June 29, 1767], all Tea had been smuggled from Holland, to the great Injury of the East India Company & the Sons of Liberty & the Dutch Smugglers set up the Cry of Liberty.—At New York it opened Wednesday the 6th with a Paper stiled the Alarm No. 1. Saturday we had No. 2 & yesterday a Paper arrived from Philadelphia, being a Letter to the Commissioners appointed by the Swa India Company for the Sale of Tea in America, holding up the Factors as another Species of Stamp Masters, & pensed to inspire Terror into those Factors, & animate the Population agt them. Virtue and Vice being thus united, I suppose we shall repeat all the Confusions of 1765 & 1766.—Time will show the Events. Our Domestic Parties will probably die & be swallowed up in the general Opposition to the Parliamentary Project of raising the Arm of Government by Revenue Laws."

"We are desir'd by the Magistrates of the city of New-York, to inform the inhabitants, That the act of this colony for the more effectual preventing of fires, and for regulating of buildings in the city of New-York, will be in force on the first Day of January next [see Dec. 31, 1768]; By which law every dwelling-house, and other building whatsoever, whether public or private, theretofore to be erected within the said city, to the southward of Freshwater, is to be made of stone or brick, and roofed with tile or slate, under the penalties mentioned in the said act."—Riv.ington's Gazetteer, Oct. 14, 1773.

A list of titles of the music imported and sold by Rivington indicates the character of the music of the period. The catalogue includes, among others, Handel's voluntary, Garth's sonatas, Bach's sonatas, for the "Harpsichord, Spinnet, Piano Forte & Organ," Bacherini's duets, Bach's symphonies, for the violin; Magherini's trios, Giordani's chamber concertos, Bach's "quartettos," Patoni's sonatas, Dutch minuets for the flute; and various selections for the guitar. He also advertises English operas with all the songs. Musical instruments and equipments are listed, and he offers to furnish tutors or musical instructors. Forte pianos are priced at £27 to £52.—Riv.ington's Gazetteer, Oct. 14, 1773.

Samuel Francis advertises that he has fitted up a "large commodious room in the lower part of his house [Queen's Head Tavern], near the Exchange in Broad St. for the reception and entertainment of such persons, who may choose to regale themselves with fine Ale of this country product, equal to any imported;" etc. At any time "in the day or evening beef steaks, mutton or pork chops, veal sates or cutlets in conexión with Mr. Rivington's house. The elegant Wax-Figures... are removed to the above house from Vaux-Hall [see June 14], and proper attendants to shew the same any hour of the day or evening."—Riv.ington's Gazetteer, Oct. 14, 1773.

In response to a handbill sent through the city, a large number of citizens meet at the Coffee House to signify "their Thanks to the Captains of the London Ships belonging to the Port, and the Merchants to whom they were addressed, for their patriotic Conduct in refusing... a Quantity of Tea, on which a Duty laid by the British Parliament was made payable in America on Importation."

The following address is drawn up, read, and unanimously approved by the citizens: "Gentlemen,

'Tour prudent Conduct in refusing the Freight of the India Company's Tea, justly merit the Thanksgiving and Applause of every Well-Wisher to the Liberties of this or any other Country.

'The invidious Purpose of levying the Duty in America, and taking off a much greater in England, is equally manifest and detestable; being nothing less than to establish the odious Precedent of raising a Revenue in America. But it is a Happiness to the Inhabitants of this Colony, that we trust to that of the extensive Continent, that Stamp Officers and Tea-Commissioners will ever be held in equal Estimation.

'The Tribute, therefore, of our most grateful Thanks is most justly due, and is now hereby most heartily rendered to the truly patriotic Merchants and Masters of the India House—and all who by their virtuous Example contributed so eminently to Discountenace a Measure which ought to be opposed by all good Men, as contrary to every principle of British Liberty, and therefore cannot but incur the just Indigation and Resentment of the much injured

16 The public demonstration against the project of the East India Company for transporting their accumulated stock of tea to America occurs on this date, when a "very considerable Meeting" is held at the state-house in Philadelphia, and these resolutions are adopted:

1. That the disposal of their own property is the inherent right of freemen; that there can be no property in that which another can, of right, take from us without our consent; that the claim of Parliament to tax America is, in other words, a claim of right to levy contributions on us at pleasure.

2. The Resolution passed by Parliament upon Tea landed in America, is a tax on the Americans, or levying contributions on them without their consent.

3. That the express purpose for which the tax is levied on the Americans, namely for the support of government, administration of justice, and defense of his Majesty’s dominions in America, has a direct tendency to render assemblies useless, and to introduce arbitrary government and slavery.

4. That a virtuous and steady opposition to this ministerial plan of governing America, is absolutely necessary to preserve even the shadow of liberty, and is a duty which every freeman in America owes to himself, his country, to himself, & to his posterity.

5. That the resolution lately entered into by the East-India Company to send out their Tea to America, subject to the payment of duties on its being landed here, is an open attempt to enforce this ministerial plan, and a violent attack upon the liberties of America.

6. That it is the duty of every American to oppose this attempt.

7. That whoever shall, directly or indirectly, countenance this attempt, or in any wise aid or abet in unloading, receiving, or vending the Tea sent, or to be sent out by the East-India Company, while it remains subject to the payment of a duty here, is an enemy to his country.

8. That a committee be immediately chosen to wait on those gentlemen, who, it is reported, are appointed by the East-India Company to receive and sell said Tea, and request them, from a regard to their own characters and the peace and good order of the city and province, immediately to resign their appointment.—

Penn. Jour., Oct. 20, 1773; Winsor, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 57, where the date is erroneously given as Oct. 18, 1773.

25 "By Letters from London, and from good Authority, we are assured that the East-India Company have determined upon sending their Vessels with Tea, one of them for Boston, another for Philadelphia, and the third for this Port, and it is most confidently asserted, that no Duty will be paid upon those Teas in America."—

27 A slight earthquake, "preceded by violent rain, and immediately succeeded by very awful lightning, and tremendous peals of thunder," shakes the city. It alarmed the inhabitants but caused only "a motion of china ware, glasses &c. &c."—Rivington’s Gazetteer, Oct. 28, 1773.

29 The "Royal Regiment of Welch Fusiliers [see June 50, and the 4th Battalion of the Royal Regiment of Artillery] are reviewed by the commander-in-chief "in a field on the Right of his Excellency our Governor’s House, on the Road to Greenwich, facing the North-River."—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 1, 1773.

Gov. Tryon writes to Dartmouth: "It is with real regret, I acquaint your Lordship of the ferment the minds of many of His Majesty’s subjects have been in since the late arrival here, of some of the vessels of that Company; it involves a London intelligence of the East India company’s intention to ship Tea on their own account to America [see Oct. 25]; and the refusal of the masters of those Vessels to take it on Board." He adds several publications, "calculated to sow sedition, and to support and make popular the cause of those who are deepest concerned in the illicit trade to Foreign Countries," have been issued.—N. Y. Col. Diet., VIII: 400-1. See Nov. 3.

4 A number of men, "observing the success attending the Societies in England and Scotland (for the purpose of creating a fund to enable them to purchase Bibles, and other useful and religious books, and dispose of them among the poor) and convinced of the probable utility of a similar institution in this part of the world," have formed themselves into an American Society For promoting Religious Knowledge among the Poor, in the British Colonies.—

A broadside, directed to the "Friends of Liberty and Commerce in New-York," and signed, "By Order of the Legion’s Committee," states: "About the City, Mr. W. Kelly, now in London, with sundry Speeches, tending to encourage the sending to America Tea, subject on its Arrival to a Duty imposed by the British Parliament." In the evening, an effigy, "with his Name inscribed in luminous Letters, and suspended on a Gallows, fixed to a Cart, with a Tea Canister before him, inscribed Tea, yd. Sterling Duty, with several other Inscriptions and Devices, expressive of the Peoples Restament," is drawn through the principal streets of the city and at last burned "before the Door of the Coffee-House."—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 15, 1773.

Hugher’s English Grammar and general School, in Kings-street, is now open for business, Dec. 9.

A petition of this date to the common council, endorsed "Read & filed March the 5th 1774," from inhabitants of Montgomery Ward, asks the board’s assistance to extend "Hague Street" through the land of Daniel Bonnett into "Frankford Street," for the purchase of which lot the petitioners have raised the insufficient sum of £118. From the original petition, in metal file No. 6, city clerk’s record-room. See July 21, 1774.

A section of what is "commonly called the Broadway," near the "Governor’s Garden," is spoken of as Great George St.—Rivington’s Gazetteer, Nov. 11, 1773. A use of the name "Great George St." is to be noted, therefore, prior to that given in the Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 905 (q. v.).

John Thurman writes to Rutgers Bleecker of Albany: "No Tea is yet Arrived we have had a Comity from a Select Body of the Inhabitants who waited on the Commissioners appointed by the India Company to know what they Intended to do with the Tea When it Arrived if they were Generously Informed them they Thought it was so much against the Science of the Inhabitants that they would not Execute the Comission & that they Never could do any thing that was Contrary to the Settlement of their fellow Citizens which makes us very Easy on this head & I hope we shall have no disturbance when it arrives seeing the Commissioners are ready to do whatever the City shall Judge Right."—Letter Book of John Thurman, Jr., in Hist. Mag., 2nd ser., IV: 289.

A broadside of this date reads: "Whereas our nation have lately been informed, that the fetters which have been forged for us, (by the parliament of Great-Britain) are hourly expected to arrive, in a certain ship, belonging to, or chartered by, the East India Company. We do therefore declare, that we are determined not to be enslaved, by any power on earth; and that whosoever shall aid, or abet, so infamous a design, or shall presume to let their store, or stores, for the reception of the infernal chains, may depend upon it, that we are prepared, and shall not fail to pay them an unwelcome visit, in which they shall be treated as they deserve by—

A broadside, headed "A Letter from the Country To a Gentleman in Philadelphia," and signed "Rusticus," is issued from Fairview. A cursed India Company may urge the people not to accept the tea.—From the broadside in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. This was reprinted in New York on Dec. 4 (q. v.).

A broadside appears under the caption: "The Association of the Sons of Liberty of New York." The preamble opens with the statement: "It is essential to the freedom and security of a free people, that no taxes be imposed upon them but by their own consent, or their representatives." After reciting the history of the conflict between the inhabitants and the English East India Company, it continues: "Therefore, to prevent a calamity, which of all others, is the most to be dreaded—slavery, and its terrible coconspirators,—We the subscribers, being influenced from a regard to liberty, and disposed to use all lawful endeavors in our power, to defeat the pernicious project, and to transmit to our posterity, those blessings of freedom, which our ancestors have handed down to us; and to contribute to the support of the common liberties of America, which are in danger to be subverted, Do... agree to associate together, under the name and style of the Sons of Liberty of New York, and engage our honour, to and with each other, faithfully to observe and perform the following Resolutions." The resolutions recite in detail that whoever shall aid in introducing into this place dutiable tea, whether the duty be paid in England or America, or aid in carting or storing such tea, or who shall buy or sell the article, shall be considered an enemy to American liberty with whom we will not deal, employ, or have any connections. An advertisement to the public, Dec. 15, says that the preceding "Association is signed by a great number of the principal Gentlemen of the City, Merchants, Landholders, Etc., of all descriptions. And it is now carried about the City, to give an Opportunity to those who, have not yet signed, to unite with their Fellow Citizens to testify their Abhorrence to the diabolical Project of enslaving America."—N. Y. Jour., Dec. 16, 1773. One such broadside was among the Geo. D. Smith MSS. sold at the Anderson Galleries, Mar. 14-15, 1921.

The governor's council decides that the tea shall "be taken into the Care of Governemnt," and that it shall be stored in either the fort or the lower barracks. The inhabitants are to be informed of this decision. Smith says: "This seemed to have a good Effect till Tuesday 7 Dec when an Express arrived with a Letter to the Philip Livingston Livington, Low, T. M'Dougall, and Van Horn called on Smith, and Low, as spokesman, said in substance: "The Inhabitants heard of the Gov'r's Intention to land & store the Tea, & approved it as a good & moderate Measure.—They supposed it was founded upon a Belief that it would prevent its being destroyed.—The Care of the Tea was the Mistake.—The Gov'r's of Boston and Philadelphia & Adm' Mounttage concieve that Gov'r have nothing to do with Merchants Goods, if their Agents will not take Care of it.—We think so too.—The Inhabitants wish Mr. Tryon would not charge himself with it—If he does not it will go Home of Course,—If he does it will not be Safe.—If we land it here they will elsewhere, & immense animosities may arise from it."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. See Dec. 13.

A proclamation of the royal approval of an act "relating to the division between New York City and the town of Harlem" is issued.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 824. The act was passed on March 24, 1772 (p. 4).

The "Ruttlis" letter of Nov. 27 (p. 4) is reprinted in a broadside by the New York "Committee of the Association," and its authorship ascribed to the "celebrated Pennsylvania Farmer" (John Dickinson). On his receipt of "The Association of the Sons of Liberty of New-York."—From the broadside in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. See Nov. 29.

Henry White, Abraham Lott, and Benjamin Booth, of New York City, have been appointed agents for the sale of the tea shipped by the East India Company. On Oct. 5, but as there is a "general Opposition to the Sale of it, as it stands charged with a Duty payable in the Colonies," they have refused to receive it. In consequence of this, it is said that the tea "will be taken into the Protection of Government, and be deposited in the lower Barracks."—N. Y. Merc., Dec. 6, 1773. For a meeting of the inhabitants in regard to this, see Dec. 17.

In a letter to William Cooper of Boston, Alexander McDougall writes: "The worst that can happen here is the landlord sending the Tea in the Fort. All that the zealous Friends of Liberty could as yet affect, is to get the isolated association Enterred into [see Nov. 29], and signed By a Great number of the Principal Merchants, Lawyers & other Inhabitants; And this without secret opposition. The Members of the Association will be called together to appoint a Committee to Correspond with you, on the Interesting subjects you mention. That would have been done some time ago, but we waited for an accession of more reputable members."—From the original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

"It is observed that we have had in our Markets for some Days past, a greater Quantity of Provisions of all Sorts, than has been known for many Years at the same Season, and at pretty reasonable Prices."—N. Y. Merc., Dec. 13, 1773.

Tryon declares in council that he will not "use Military force for the Landing" of the tea. Upon Col. Morris's suggesting that he ought to be prepared to "prevent Insult," the governor answers: "I will use no Arms until they [the citizens] have abused & disgraced their Gov't & themselves. I will run the Risk of Brick Batts & Dirt and I trust that you & others will stand by me."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

The "Boston Tea Party" occurs. Rivington prints an account of it, but editorial comment is entirely lacking. The narration concludes with the statement that "one of the spectators, tempted by the exquisite flavour of the finest hyso, greedily filled his pockets, and the lining of his doublet with tea, which so enraged the people, that after every grain of it was taken from him, and discharged into the water, he underwent a horrid discipline which threatened his life."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Dec. 23, 1773. Winsor says that the Boston Tea Party, "although applauded throughout the colonies, was not imitated by them."—Winsor, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VII: 57. This statement is an erroneous one, for a "Tea Party" took place in New York on April 17, 1774 (see Dec. 6).

"The Members of the Association of the Sons of Liberty, are requested to meet at the City-Hall, at one o'clock To-Morrow, being Friday, on Business of the utmost Importance [see Dec. 17]; And every other Friend, to the Liberties, and Trade of America, is hereby most cordially invited, to meet at the same Time and Place.

The Committee of the Association."—N. Y. Jour., Dec. 16, 1773.

A committee is appointed "to View & Consider of Proper Places for fixing of Colonial Boxes for Watching this City, also to adopt a Plan for Regulating the Watchmen & Lamplighters and to make an Estimate of the Exposre thereof for the ensuing Year."—M. C. C., VII: 485. The recorder was added to the committee on May 4, 1774, at which time several sentinel boxes had been completed and were placed at the same time.—See supra, VIII: 28, 29.

Another council meeting is "occasioned by a printed Summons in the New[j] Papers [see Dec. 16] of the Citizens to the Town Hall at 2 o'Clock this Day." Smith suggests that "if many Met that the Gov't should go & speak to them and I would assure a Vote for the Storing of the Tea—That if they were a contemptible Handful We might trust to their sinking into Despondency of bringing the City to Violence." Some council members object to this proposal, and it is finally decided to send for the mayor and recorder. When these two arrive, the governor thus addresses them: "Tell the People that I shall think it my Duty to protect the Tea so far as to prevent its being destroyed.—That I should be obliged to do this, if it was the Property of Aliens.—That I owe it more especially to the Kings Subjects who have no Persons here, who will take Charge of it.—That I do not mean to use Force for the Purpose That I expect none but Citizens to assist in the Storing of the same.—That it would do me more Justice to use Our Own Cause to behave with Moderation Justice & Decency on this Occasion.—That they may depend upon my Word, that it shall come in by Day Light & go out by Day Light, with out any Secrecy, and that not an Ounce of it shall be delivered to any Person, without the express order of the Gov't, or the consent of the Council. That I can do no more nor less, & that I hope they will neither disgrace their Gov't nor themselves by any imprudent violent & intemperate Behavior."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.
A newspaper account of the meeting states that "a very num-Dec.
crrous and respectable Number of the Citizens" met at the city hall. "Letters received from the Committee of Correspondence of the Town of Boston, and a Letter from Philadelphia relative to the Tea, the East-India Company's Tea," were read and a committee of fifteen was chosen to answer the letters and "to correspond with our Sister Colonies on the Subject of the dutied Tea." After the "Association of the Sons of Liberty," (see Nov.
29) had been communicated to the people, Mayor Hicks delivered his government's message. Upon his asking if it were satisfactory, the answer was a general "No, No, No." John Lamb, a leader of the "Sons of Liberty," next read the parliamentary act imposing a duty on tea imported into America, and a resolution was passed "that no Tea, subject to a Duty by a British Act of Parliament, for the purpose of raising a Revenue in America, should be landed." The meeting then adjourned "till the Arrival of the Tea Ships."— N. Y. Jr., Dec. 23, 1773; Penn. Gaz., Dec. 22, 1773. In his report to the council after the meeting, the mayor said "that there were at the Hall about 800 or 1000 People . . . that the General Temper was agst the Landings [of the tea]; that he & the Recorder both conceived of the East-India Company's Tea, were undecided."—Wm.
Smith's Diary (M.S.), IV. On this same date it is calendared in the Council Minutes, "the people are averse to the landing of the tea."—Cal. Coun. Min., 499. For the arrival of the first tea-ships in New York, see April 19, 1774.
A letter commenting on correspondence, copies of which are sent both to Philadelphia and New York by Paul Revere, says: Yesterday [see Dec. 16] we had a greater meeting of the Body than ever, the Country coming in from twenty miles round, and every step was taken, that was practicable for returning the Tea. In the moment it was known out of doors that Mr.
Rotch could not obtain a pass for his Ship by the Castle, a number of people huZZa'd in the Street, and in a very little time every ounce of the Teas . . . was immered in the Bay, without the least injury to private property. The Spirit of the People on this occasion surprised all parties who view'd the Scene. There is a MS.
copy of this letter in the Library, or see also The True Story of Paul Revere, by Gettyburg (1865), 50-51.
William Smith wrote in his diary on Dec. 21: "An Express from Boston to Phil Livingston Sears Broome & McDougal with an Account of the destroying of the Tea there in 3 ships having each 114 Chests & the Loss of the 4th Ship with 58 Chests on Cape Codd. The Custom House delayed to clear the Vessels, & the Gov'r to give a Pass on Wed: the 16 Ins!—There was a Town meeting of 8000 waiting for this Report On the Report they dissolved, & instantly proceeded to the Mischief—Saml Broome told me that the Govr. was so much distressed & distressed & distressed,
They had a Company for each Ship & a Captain for each Company—and were prepared on learning that the Tea Ships were to be brought that Night to the Castle & that several Doz. of Lanthropes were provided for—Tis said the Duty Act will not permit of Goods laying in port without Pay! beyond 20 Days. Vid

Wm. Smith's Diary (M.S.), IV.
Smith records in his diary: "Some say there were 2 others 3000 People Yesterday [p. n.] at the Hall by Enquiry I learn that the Principal inhabitants who were of the Gov't opinion, did not exert themselves—I suspect
1 That Some were fearful of the Populace
2 Some courting the People agst Elections 3 That the Delaneys rather fell in with the Multitude to save Interest, & out of Fique to the Gov'r who is too Independently spaced to be then and now.
This Evening I saw M' Dougall Sears & Saml Broome at Simmons' Tavern—These were three of the Committee appointed yesterday for Correspondence . . . These Three are confident of opposition to the Landing, and that [an] Ins. of the Inhabitants agree.
Upon Smith's suggesting that they were worried by "Fears of not Major," McDougal, Sears, and Broome "smiled, & expressed only very soft & jocular Negatives," and intimated that if they had known at the meeting "that the Majority was so great, they would have had the Credit of a Division upon the Question, are you for opposing or for storing? & got the Yeas and Noes together, & have the Two Bodies of the Company's Teams of those who are for storing the Tea.—"Wm. Smith's Diary (M.S.), IV.
News that the South Carolina People had resolved to send back the Tea ordered thither, and to import no more themselves while subject to Duty—This greatly inflames the Population here, & certainly it will not be landed, if they do not change their Opinions."—Wm. Smith's Diary (M.S.), IV.
In the same diary for the same date, Wm. Smith wrote: "A Letter from Tom Bowline, to his worthy Messmates, the renowned Sons of Neptune, belonging to the Port of New York," and dated "From my Mooings, in Ratline Lane," is issued. It reads:
"As the Time is approaching, in which the Ship, with the East-India Company's Tea may be expected to arrive, and be moored in our Harbour, to put the finishing Stroke to our Liberties, and ruin the Trade of our Country, by establishing a Monopolly; which will in Time (should it be effected) deprive Numbers of our worthy Merchants of their Sheet Anchor, and oblige them to quit their Mooings and steer into the Country, to take a Trick at the Flough; and will (as sure as the Devil's in London) drive many of us to the cruel Alternative of seeking Employment in a foreign Country, to prevent starving in our own: And, as much depends upon our Steadiness, and Activity, in regard to weathering this Storm; I must therefore, strongly recommend the Necessity of keeping a good Look-Out on the House, and all, hold ourselves in Readiness, and heartily join our Merchants, and our worthy Citizens, in preventing the pestilential Commodity from being parbuckled on Shore."—From original in N. Y. Hist. Soc.
Smith's diary states: "The Boston News [see Dec. 17] astonished the Town—Those who were for storing the Tea now affect to change Sentiments & . . . agree that they are afraid—Now all are of one Mind & those who were for storing it seem most disposed to interest the Gov't to change his Resolutions for Fear of the Multitude—Henry White [see Dec.
6] . . . told me . . . that he was going to the Gov't to inte-mate this News & to signify that it would be best to let the Ship return [see Dec. 23] . . . This Evng I discover by Hints that the Mechanics convene at Beer-Houses, where Sears McDougall & al meet them to concert Measures for the Day of the Ship's arrival."— Wm. Smith's Diary (M.S.), IV.
Smith records in his diary: "Rivington's Paper of this Morn announces that the Tea Ship is to be sent back—The People understood it to be so Resolved in Council—I guessed it to be . . . the Effect of Whites Interview with the Gov't [see Dec. 22].—The Town applaud the Gov't!—But what will the Govern'd at Home do? This Evng I learn that Aycock the Cap'l of the Frigate whose ship is come up from the Hook, said last Night to Saml Broome, that the Gov't told him the India C9 would lose their Tea if landed
"It must mortify Tryon who has spoken Vauntingly, & wrote assuring Govern'd of the Landing here—But he is determined to be popular here, to save himself from the Imputation of a Want of Prudence in Carolina—He can justify himself from the Violence at Boston . . .
The Boston Violence has evidently effected this Measure here . . .
"After all had we stored the Tea between 1 & 7 Decf this Event at Boston would have excited our People, to demand it for Refratransportation or Destruction."—Wm. Smith's Diary (M.S.), IV.
The common council authorizes the payment of £18,161 for a "Fire Engine for the use of the West Ward."—M. C. C., VII:
465. Inasmuch as the cost of a fire-engine was regularly far greater than this amount (see July 10, 1774), it seems more probable that this expenditure was for a fire-engine house. An order of May 7, 1773 (p. n.), called for the removal of the two fire-engines "now under the City hall," one to the West Ward, the other to Montgomery Ward. The sum of £21 was authorized (ibid., VII: 389) for the engine house in the ward last named, an amount which is closely approximated by this expenditure in the West Ward.
Smith learns from White that "it is to be concerted if possible that the Cap'l [of the tea-ship] be prevented from coming up & [that he] be sent off without the Gov't knowledge of his Arrival at the Hook." White also tells Smith "that he said to the Gov't your Council will all Advise, I will send away the ship, & that he replied
I don't want to know anything of the Matter—a plain Hint to White." Besides this, Tryon has told the captain of the man-o-war "that he did not want him to look for the Tea Ship any longer."
Smith writes of the situation: "From all which 'tis plain that White has only to send the ship away if he can, & that Mr. Tryon has drop'd all his Zeal for her Landing and that he wishes all to be secret . . .

"He is afraid of losing Popularity, & yet must be hurt at being obliged to drop his high Tone—If he can make the Agents his Instruments, & get the Ships at his disposal, he must have a good chance of winning over the People of the Water."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

16 John Thurban writes to Amos Herkyn, probably of London: "You will see by the News Papers what Kind of Reception the India Companies' Teas have had in America [:] Boston hath been drove to the necessity of Distractions, Dec. 16. Carolina Philip's & this Place I trust will have it in their Power to Return it [:] our Governour having the affections of the Inhabitants used his best endeavours to get their consent to Land it, but the affair at Boston has determined the Americans to perish Rather than suffer it to be Land'd or to have any Precedent amongst themselves [:] unless Parliament determine to Repeal those acts they had Better declare war against the Colonies at once, & I dare say they will stand forth for their King & Liberty Like sons of Freedom, we all wish for Peace & A Good understanding between Great Britain & her Colonies and as much wish to support our Liberties which never will be tamely Given up you may be assured."—From Extracts from the Letter Books of John Thurban, Jr., in Hist. Mag., 2nd ser. IV. 188.

27 "We have the inexpressible Satisfaction in acquainting our Readers, that it is determined, on the Arrival of the Ship Nancy, for a Visit from the Honourable East-India Company, the Commander will be made acquainted with the Sentiments of the Inhabitants respecting the Shipping that Article [see Dec. 17], which will indubitably occasion his return with it in statu quo, to England, and that he will be provided with every Necessary for the Vessel which, during his absence, both to this Colony and the Honourable Company, will be most happily prevented, and a Succession of that blessed Tranquility, which we enjoy under the present wise and serene Administration, will be secured."—N. 29 Robert Leake, commissary-general of North America, dies at his "Seat in the Bewery."—"His Remains were interred in the Family Vault, in Trinity Church Yard [Sunday] ... attended by a great Concours of the Inhabitants of this Place, and the Military."—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 3, 1774.

"The Government House" in Fort George is destroyed by fire. The governor's daughter jumps from a second story window into a snow-bank and is saved. A maid perishes. All the contents of the building except "a little Furniture out of the Parlour," and the great seal (see Dec. 31), are destroyed, including all public and private papers in the governor's possession. Deep snow on the roofs of the houses, with the help of the fire engines, prevents the spread of the flames. T. C. Deyo's Col. VIII. 407. J. C. A. Reg. (1774), 96. N. Y. Jour., Dec. 29, 1773; W. W. Peter's Jour., IV, under Dec. 30. The lost sustained "in cash, plate, and Jewels is seven thousand pounds."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Jan. 6, 1774. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III, 974.

At a meeting of the governor's council, Jan. 5, 1774, Gov. Tryon reported that "in order to trace if possible the Cause of this Disaster his Servants had by his Directions been examined on Oath before the Mayor of the City, and their Deposits taken, ... by which it appear'd that the Fire was first discovered in the Council Room, and probably originated there but in what manner is unknown."—Jour. Merc. (MS.), XXVII. 387 (Albany). "Col. Fanning has also been a great Sufferer, but has been happy enough to save the Papers belonging to the Surrogate Office."—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 3, 1774. Some "Pieces of Plate belonging to his Excellency our Governor, were found among the Rubbish in Fort-George, as likewise several of Mr. Tryon's Jewels."—Ibid., Jan. 10, 1774. At a meeting of the common council, March 11, 1774, warrants totalling £12,000 were ordered issued to five different persons for liquor delivered at the fort at the time of the late fire; and also a warrant, to Robert Town, for £2,094 for sundry articles delivered at the fort; and warrant for reins which the jury refused to value—N. Y. Jour. (MS.), VIII. 14-15. Manuscript accounts preserved in the comptroller's office contain three later items concerning payments for liquor for the same purpose, one of March 29, 1774, one of April 12, and one of April 23; the three amounting to £811.10s. April 22, 1774, warrants totalling £1,917.13s. 6d. for "Brick laying down A Stack of Chirncs, and some Walls of the house that was burnt in the Fourt; another of the same date is for £478.7s. For Watching Day and Night at Fort George" for 15 days; and on April 27, one for £29.10s. for the same service. Gov. Tryon makes "the house lately occupied by Major Bayard, in Broad Street," his new residence.—Annest. Jour. (1774), 43. He writes to Major Hicks as follows: "Deeply impressed as I am with a grateful sense of the strenuous endeavours of the citizens to extinguish the raging fire which happened at Fort George last night, and greatly threatened the safety of the whole city, I find myself irresistibly compelled to request you to communicate to them the particulars of the fire and the skill and activity with which all ranks exerted themselves on the alarming occasion."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Jan. 6, 1774. The estimated population of the province of New York is 182,247, of whom 161,498 are whites. This is 14,420 more than the total recorded in 1771.—Dec. Hist. N. Y. (404 ed.), I. 474.

A compilation is issued of the Laws of New York from the year 1664, to 1771 (11th edition); every law, which, disregarding the titles, both to this Colony and the Honourable Company, will be most happily prevented, and a Succession of that blessed Tranquility, which we enjoy under the present wise and serene Administration, will be secured."—N. Y. Merc., Dec. 27, 1773.

At about this time, the first "catalogue" of King's College was printed, by Hugh Gaine. It is reproduced at PI. 53-b, Vol. I.

During this year Gerard Baucker drew "A Map of Sandy lots of Ground situate and lying on the N E Side of Wall Street." The lots extend from William St. to Nassau St. The location of the city hall is clearly indicated.—From the original in the Baucker Collection in the N. Y. Pub. Library (box N-W, folder 119). Tryon writes to the Earl of Dartmouth: "From the general Appearance of the united opposition to the principle of the Monop. by the East India Com. in England and in America, I can form no other Opinion than that the landing [at New York], storing, and safe keeping of the Tea, when stored, could be accomplished, but only under the protection of the Point of the Bayonet, and Musle of the Canon."—N. A "select party of little masters and misses" will give part of the tragedy of "King Bassia, with Cymon, and the Padlock." at Hull's long room, the play to be followed by a ball for the ladies and gentlemen.—Rivington's Gazetteer, Jun. 6, 1774. Hull's Tavern was at the present 117 Broadway. It was generally referred to as the "City Tavern." See Apr. 15, 1774.

Dartmouth writes to Gov. Tryon: "When I consider that the alarm which has been spread with a view to excite an opposition to the Landing of Tens sent by the East India Company to New York, is at present, now avowedly founded upon self-interested motives, I cannot but flatter myself that the authors and abettors of such unwarrantable proceedings will meet with Disappointment and Disgrace, and that any new attempt to disturb the peace and tranquillity of a Province so deservedly distinguished for its peaceable and good government, will be defeated.

The inclosed Extracts of my letter... to Major General Haldimand will however inform you, that there has not been wanting a due attention to what may be necessary in case matters should turn out contrary to my hopes & expectations, and the civil power should, in case of any public Disturbance be found inadequate to the preservation of the peace and the protection of the King's subjects."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 498.

Referring to the recent destruction of the governor's house (see Dec. 29, 1773), Tryon writes, in an address to the council and assembly, that he is filled with "the strongest emotions of regret for the demolition of that mansion, particularly after your liberal grant for its repair." He further says: "my warmest gratitude is due to the Almighty, that by the powerful exertions of the citizens and military, this metropolis was preserved from the destructive calamity." Tryon then announces that the king has commanded him to repair to England for a short time, to consider "The contents which have arisen between the New-York, grantees and inhabitants under New-Hampshire, and the outrage committed on the settlers under this government."—Assemb. Jour., (1774), 4:5; Jour. Leg. Coun., 1898. See March 22.

The common council orders that a warrant be issued to Charles McEvers for £100, the amount he agreed to contribute towards the purchase of some ground belonging to Archibald Kennedy for the enlargement of a street or alley leading to the Sloat.—M. G. G., VIII: 1. Another warrant is ordered issued to the treasurer of the city to pay £42,610:01 to Thomas Smith, Jacob Lafile & John Hallock, in full for the "Corporation Money of a Piece of Ground lately purchased by this Corporation of the Presbyterian Church."—ibid., VIII: 2. On Jan. 28, a warrant was issued to pay Thomas Smith £2 for drawing the "Indentures of Lease & Release from the Presbyterian Church to this Corporation for a Lot of Ground Near the City Hall."—ibid., VIII: 29.

A report of the New-York master and wardens, relative to the situation and extent of the harbours in New York, is certified at the port warden's office on this date. It was sent to England, then or later, where it is now of record in the public record office, in Vol. 180, p. 647.—From Stevies's Cat. Index of MSs, 1765-1775, in Library of Congress.

A committee of the assembly consisting of thirteen members is appointed to obtain "the most early and authentic intelligence of all such acts and resolutions of the British parliament, or proceedings of Administration, as do or may relate to affect the liberties and privileges of his Majesty's subjects in the British colonies in America, and to keep up and maintain a correspondence with our sister colonies respecting these important considerations, and the result of their proceedings to lay before the house."—Assemb. Jour., (1774), 16. For a letter to Connecticut, see June 24. The assembly voted the following in a bill to lay a road through the land of Adolph Myer, to a "piece of land adjoining in Hudson's river, in the township of Harlaem, commonly called Meltie [Matie] David's Fly." (see Vol. III, p. 866)—Assemb. Jour., (1774), 16.

For a letter to the governor, to whom this petition was referred, reported in favour of granting it and a bill was accordingly ordered brought in. It was passed by the legislature on March 19 (9 v.). This road was 24 ft. wide, and was laid out from the intersection (modern maps) of Ninth Ave. and 127th St., running thence to the Hudson river at 131st St. A trace of it, east of the Bloomingdale Road, at 128th and 129th Sts., is shown on Randel's map. Pl. 56, Vol. III. West of the road is the enclosed Moorjet (or Matje) David's Fly.—Referred to in Liber Deeds, LXIV: 337 (New York), and ibid., DLXXVIII: 422. It was evidently superseded by the Manhattanville streets laid down before Randel's map was made, about 1819.

The treasurer of the colony is appointed to cause devices to be affixed to the reverse sides of bills of credit pursuant to an act passed on March 8, 1775 (p. v.), not being finished until October 15, and that there is still so much work to do in connection with them that the time limit fixed by the act will have expired before everything can be finished. He asks that the assembly take the matter into consideration and give him further directions, but there is no record of any action upon the petition.—Assemb. Jour., (1774), 21.

The journal of the New York and Massachusetts boundary commission is received by the provincial council, and filed in the secretary's office.—Cal. Coun. Min., 499.

A plan, proposed by Mr. Dean, member of the Connecticut assembly, to shorten the post-road between New York and Hartford, is received by the provincial council of New York and laid before the assembly.—Cal. Coun. Min., 499.

An advertisement informs the public of "A Plan for a Public Fire-Office. For the purpose of raising the sum of £100... applied in keeping in repair, and as occasion may require... increasing the number of engines, buckets, and other serviceable implements used in extinguishing fires. And for providing a Fund for the Public Hospital."

"It is computed that there are at least three thousand houses in this city. In one room of each of which there must necessarily be a fire kept every day. Cleaning the chimneys of these from foot ten times per year... at one shilling for the service would produce fifteen hundred pounds yearly.

In two thousand of these houses it may be supposed that a second fire is kept as well as the first, from the beginning of November, to the last of April, and these being cleansed five times in that term, on the abovementioned plan, would produce five hundred pounds yearly.

Taking the extra fires on an average (meaning in those houses wherein are kept three or four fires, as is the case in many, during the winter months) it is supposed that there would be at least fifteen hundred more, to sweep four times in the cold season, which would bring in three hundred pounds yearly further."

With this data the advertiser suggests that a public office for the cleaning of chimneys might be established with a superintendent at an annual salary of £300, one hundred sweepers with a salary of £100, 15 sweepers each with a salary of £40, and £50 set aside for tools. The total cost of this office would be £1,050 and when this was subtracted from the estimated earnings of £2,100, there would be a balance of ££1,050 "to be appropriated to the purposes of the plan, of which two hundred and fifty pounds would annually suffice for fire service; so that there would be one thousand pounds per annum for the Hospital."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Jan. 17, 1774; Man. Coun. Com. (1862), 670-71.

There is published a "Scheme of a Lottery For raising the sum of £6000, For erecting a Bridewell in this City... As the intention is of the most laudable kind, and the erection of a proper commodious building, as a reception for the correction of vagrants, of the disolute and idle, has long wished for, and is now become absolutely necessary, from the great number of vagabonds daily scuffling about this city from every part of the continent [see Feb. 18]... the gentlemen who have set the project on foot, humbly hope that the generous, the benevolent, and the religious of all denominations, will heartily and cheerfully concur in promoting the same, for the laudable and very necessary a purpose."—*N. “The House is remarkable for its healthy Situation commanding one of the finest Prospects in the Government,—and the Tutor’s Character and Capacity are well known, he having lived with Credit in the City of New York for upwards of fifteen Years: So that, Gentlemen who will entrust him with the Education of their Children, may depend on their Expectations being answered.”—N. Y. Jour., Feb. 10, 1774. It was not unusual, at this time, for ministers to give instruction in French. For some earlier examples, see Aug. 6, 1750, and July 8, 1762.

The assembly agrees that $705 be paid to Gov. Tryon “for repairs in Fort George, and for four additional rooms at the battery, as a half year’s account.”—Assem. Jour. (1774), 51-52; Cal. Laws N. Y. I; V: 681.

The common council makes the following decisions regarding changes in the Fly Market ferry from New York to Nassau Island: There shall be three separate ferries. The three landing-places on the New York side shall be at Counties Slip, at Fly Slip, and at Peck’s Slip. The two landing-places on Nassau Island shall be in the present wharf, belonging to the ferry house,” and at Philip Livingston’s wharf.

In Rivington’s Gazette, Feb. 24, 1774, the routes were announced as follows: “A ferry from Counties market to the landing place of Philip Livingston, Esq; and Mr. Henry Renssen on Nassau Island; another from the Fly Market to the present ferry house at Brooklyn; and a third from Peck’s Slip to land at the place last mentioned.”

The common council further orders that the ferry shall be sold in three separate interests for two years from the first of May; each lessee shall receive the hireage for his several boats on each side of the water.—M. C. G., VIII: 6, 7. See Pl. 64, Vol. I. See March 6, 1774, for sale of ferry.

The action of the council is in response to various petitions which seek relief from the crowded surroundings of the Fly Slip (Main Lead Lane) terminus of the single ferry from New York to Brooklyn. One petition states “That by Reason of the vast conourse of people who necessarily are drawn together at the Fly Market and especially nigh about the Ferry Stairs for a great part of every Day during the Course of the Year, Travellers frequently find it impossible to get to the Ferry Boats with their Horses and Carriages and even when they are so successful as to press thro’ the Crowd to the Boats yet for the Most Part they are delay’d for Hours.” The many small craft used by butchers and farmers in bringing their wares to market so occupy the Slip and extend even beyond the dock that it is almost impossible for the ferry boats from Brooklyn to be “brought to the Stairs to discharge even the Foot Passengers much less Horses and Carriages.”

—From original MS. in box No. 6, in city clerk’s record-room. Valentine, in noting suggestions for improving the single ferry line service, indicates some of the difficulties encountered in transit, provided one really succeeds in boarding the ferry-boat. When only two men were employed on each boat, it sometimes happened that, on account of the wind and the tide, they were unable to bring the boat across the river, so that passengers had either to “labor at the oar, or otherwise endure a tedious passage, and suffer great loss of time.” When three men on a boat were planned for, it was estimated that, even under greater disadvantages, they could make the crossing in an hour and twelve minutes.—Man. Com. Conn. (1862), 544. In another petition, the advantages of competition are pointed out, and more than one line is urged. It mentions “those Beneficial Effects from a Division of Interests in the Ferries...of the Town of Boston, and City of Philadelphia, where Passengers are treated with an obliging Attention and wait but a few Minutes for their Transportation.”—From the original in file No. 6, city clerk’s record-room. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945.

The common council gives permission to Lewis Morris and others to build a bridge over Harlem River, “for the use of the Publick only and not for his Private Emolument.” This bridge is necessary in order to render “really beneficial” a road proposed to be laid out from New York “through Harlem, Morrisania and the Borough of Westchester,” to Eastchester. Lewis Morris and his fellow petitioners were to “lay upon the Publick, the Land [adjoining the Harlem River] which shall be Necessary for Laying out the same.”—M. C. G., VIII: 7-8. On Feb. 18, Johannes Sickles and Lewis Morris asked for similar permission from the general assembly, and a bill was ordered to be brought in for that purpose.—Assem. Jour. (1774), 56; N. Y. Jour. Feb. 24, 1774. As a result of this, the legislature, on March 19, passed an act “to enable Lewis Morris and John Sickles to erect and build a Bridge across Harlem River.” The bridge was to have “three or more Apertures of at least twenty five Feet each, for the Convenience of navigation being sufficient to pass small Boats: And so when built...to be a free and public Highway for the Use, Benefit and Behoof of all his Majesty’s Subjects whatsoever.”—Cal. Laws N. Y. I; V: 708-9. See also Man. Com. Conn. (1862), 548.

The common council orders that a warrant for £5379:8 be issued to the treasurer to pay Samuel Verplanck and others for ground in the rear of the city hall deeded by them to the corporation.—M. C. G., VIII: 7.

A newspaper advertisement reads: “To be Let, and entered on at May day, The Garden at Strawberry-Hill, Adjoining to the House of Henry Van Dunham.—Rivington’s Gazetteer, Feb. 17, 1774. Strawberry Hill lay between 10th and 108th Sts., West End Ave. and the Hudson River.—See Mott’s The N. Y. Of Yesterday, 47. Cf. Claremont in Old Buildings of N. Y. City (1907), 139. Jacob Dyckman’s skull is fractured by a fall from his horse “at the bottom of the hill below Mrs. MacGowin’s.”—Rivington’s Gazetteer, Feb. 24, 1774.

A thieft is caught attempting to break into the house of Isaac Heron. After an account of this incident, the editor of the Mercury adds: “From so many recent Attempts of this Sort, in different Parts of this City we must conclude, there are amongst us a Number of Gentry who have no other Employment, which evinces the Necessity and Eligibility of a Bride-well” (see Feb. 7)—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 21, 1774. For the progress of the bridewell lottery, see Feb. 28.

An estimate is made of the expense of supplies for the New York bakery for the first year.—Cal. Hist. Soc., May 19, 1774. Gov. Tryon gives “110 Loads of Wood, to be delivered out of the Yard at the Battery; 100 Loads to be distributed among the Poor, and to Loads for the Prisoners in Gaol.”—N. Y. Jour., Feb. 24, 1774.

Gov. Tryon is waited upon by the common council and presented with an address and a gold box enclosing, as the address recites, “an Exemplification of that Instrument destroyed in the late fire [see Dec. 29], by which we formerly Gave you a Title to the City’s freedom and privileges, and which you once did us the honour to Receive.” The governor returns an appreciative answer. The gold box was made by Otto Patzian at a cost of £2310:6d.—M. C. G., VIII: 9-11.

Permission is granted by the assembly for the introduction of a 26 foot to raise by lottery the sum of £6,000 towards building a provin- cial house for the residence of the Governor, or Commander in Chief, for the third and a security for the repayment of the public debts of the province of this colony.”—Assem. Jour. (1774), 71. See March 1. After being amended so that the sum to be raised was fixed at £12,000 instead of £6,000, the bill was passed by the assembly on March 15—Ibid. (1774), 73, 78, 95, 96. In the council it is to be noted that, when the bill was considered, there was no further reference to the bill in 1774.—Jour. Leg. Coun., II: 1911, 1912.

A letter from the Sons of Liberty in New York to the committee of correspondence of Boston proposes an agreement among the colonies “not to purchase any English Tea till so much of the Act passed by the last Session of Parliament be repealed.”—See Jacobus Ruef and Samuel W. Moore for the Publick East India to Ship their Tea to America be repealed.” Boston is asked to “feel the Pulse of the Committee of Rhode Island and those of the Sea Port Towns to the Eastward of you. We shall do it to the Feb. 18 Southward, & request you to second us in this to the Committee of Charleston South Carolina." Boston is also asked to brush the mail and return the prints and to write to the Philadelphia committee regarding it.

A post-office, not under the control of the British Government, is also proposed. "Mr Godard the bearer of this says He has been ... ill treated by the Post Office, inasmuch that he has been obliged to purchase a coach to establish a Rider between Baltimore & Philadelphia, to carry his papers; and this Rider is now supported by Subscription ... a Post for Carrying Letters &c.

... He has had free conversation with a Number of the Friends of Liberty in the City, on the expediency of opposing the Post Office, and bringing the fight to a constitutional decision. This is a matter of great importance to this Country; & by its raising an internal Tax upon us, our Secrets are in the hands of Government & at its pleasure our News Papers in a Time of Public danger may be Stopt. This is a State too dangerous for Americans to rest in, without a Struggle."—From the original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

A news item reads: "The Demand was so great for Bridewell Lottery Tickets [see Feb. 7] last week, that several Thousaneds were sold off; Therefore it behoves those that incline to encourage that laudable Undertaking, to be speedy in their Application." An advertisement gives this information to the public: "Bridewell Lottery will depart at the rate of £10 to £50 to £20 to £15 to £10 to draw £50 next money, free from deduction. The Insurers will underwrite 20 or 30 lots."—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 28, 1774. See April 18.

Gov. Tryon applies to the assembly for "a suitable provision for the rebuilding of a government house."—Assemb. Jour. (1774), 73. A bill concerning this subject had already been introduced in the house (see Feb. 26). For the assembly's action in regard to the governor's message, see March 11.

This being St. David's Day, the officers of the "Royal Welch Fusiliers," in honour of "their tutelar Saint," give an entertainment to the governor, the general, and "the Gentlemen of the military establishment."—N. Y. Merc., Mar. 6, 1774. See July 21.

The auction sale of ferries results as follows: The Poulous Hook ferry is let to Abram Mesier for three years from May 1, for a yearly rent of £410. The ferry from Fly Slip to Nassau Island (see Feb. 17), with dwelling-house, barn, and pens, is struck off to Adolph Waldron for two years from May 1, at a yearly rent of £230. The Peck Slip ferry to Nassau Island is leased by Samuel Bailing from May 1, at a yearly sum of £130. The ferry from Coenties Slip to Philip Livingston's landing on Navesink was lately let by Elias de Gruchya for two years from May 1, at an annual rent of £20.—M. C. C., VIII: 12. The leases were signed on April 12.—Ibid. VIII: 25. See, further, April 7.

In an advertisement, de Gruchya announced that on May 1 next suitable boats would "land or set off, as convenience suits, on the New-York side, from the stairs in Coenties slip, or from a stairs built by the Board on the Broadway, & on the Long-Bridge, and on Long-Island at a stairs built at the dock of Mr. Remsen. This ferry will be called Saint George's Ferry ... Passengers on the New-York side, will find the ferry-men, if not at the stairs, attending either at the house of Mr. John Lee, the corner below Coenties Market, or of Mr. James Cobham." A postscript adds that a ferry-house is building.—Rivington's Gazetteer, Supplement, May 12, 1774.

"Ordered ... a Committee to meet and Conferr with a Committee of the City and College Corporations with respect to the Regulation of the Broad Street."—Trin. (M.S.), Robinson St. (now Park Place) was ceded to the city Sept. 18, 1761 (p. 6). See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1008.

A street called "Elbow Lane," on Golden Hill, is mentioned in the advertisement of Johannes Duryce, who occupies a house at the corner of this lane, facing Burling's Slip.—Rivington's Gazetteer, March 8, 1774. For the origin of the Bay's side of the Society Hill, the Elbow Lane, or Street, is the old designation for Cliff Street.

Another "Boston tea-party" occurs.—See summary, April 25, 1774.

A bill is now passing through the House of Assembly for building a province house for the residence of his Excellency the Governor, and a Secretary's office for the reception of the archives of the province."—N. Y. Merc., March 7, 1774.

Gov. Tryon signs a bill, which has been passed by both houses, allowing him £5,000 "as a compensation in part, for the damage he sustained by the late dreadful fire" (see Dec. 29, 1773).—Assemb. Jour. (1774), 88; N. Y. Jour., March 3, 1774.

He also signs "An Act to prevent the blazoning or defacing the Mile Stones now or hereafter to be erected in this Colony."—Jour. Leg. Coun., 1727.

The legislature passes the following acts: one "for making a further Provision of two thousand Pounds for furnishing his Maj: y's Troops quartered in this Colony with Necessaries for one Year;" An act "for the better preventing of excessive and deceitful Gaming;" An act "to prevent the deprecating the Paper Currency of this Colony;" and An act "to lay a Tax on Dogs in the Cities of New York and Albany, and Counties of Queens and Suffolk."—Col. Laws N. Y., V: 613, 641-24, 658-39, 659-61.

A performance by the "Celebrated Mr. Johnston" on the black-wire is announced to be held on this day at "Hamden-Hall, Near the Upper-Barracks."—Rivington's Gazetteer, March 3, 1774. The tavern known as Hamden Hall stood on the corner of Warren St. and Broadway. See March 19, 1779.

The governor appoints James Jauncy, jr., to be "master of the rolls," and the provincial council orders that the attorney-general shall prepare his commission; this was approved on March 23.—Col. Coun. Min., 500.

The committee which has been entrusted with the consideration of Gov. Tryon's message of March 1 (q. v.), recommends that "a committee be appointed to sit on a suitable place for building a government house, and to prepare a plan and an estimate of the expense." By a vote of 13 to 12, the assembly decides that a report on this matter be made during the present session.—Assemb. Jour. (1774) 91. In connection with this work, Gerard Bancker was employed to make a plan of the fort (see April 12). The committee did not report to the house until March 7, 1775 (q.v.).

The "Sons of Liberty," under the leadership of T. White, hold a night at the tavern of Jasper Drake, until the tea-ship arrives and departs.—N. Y. Jour., March 14, 1774. Drake's tavern was conveniently situated for this purpose, being near Beckman Slip.—Ibid. Feb. 2, 1775. In May, 1775, a company of foot was organized here.—Ibid, May 4, 1775. See July 7, 1779.

At a meeting of the common council, 16 persons agree to watch every night at the rate of £12 a year and 8 agree to watch every other night at £16 a year. The hours decided upon are from nine p.m. to four a.m. between March 10 and Sept. 10, and from ten p.m. to six a.m. during the other six months.—M. C. C., VIII: 1574.

The price of our new Wines is not yet broke, but will in all Probability be very high, the Demand being exceedingly brisk, and no less than 7 English Indians and one Danish, expected here to take in Wines for the East-Indies."—N. Y. Merc., March 7, 1774.

Under the caption "To the Public:," the Journal contains the following notice:

"In all probability the Tea-Ship, which has been long expected, is near at hand, and it is the noble and impatient desire of every son of American freedom hear, to see the day, when they shall have the inexpressible satisfaction of gloriously assisting their sister colonies, in establishing the freedom of their country. For, to their immortal honour be it said, that no monopolizing company upon the face of the earth, with all their subtility and iniquitous designs; with all their own sophistry, or the craft and cunning of their meanest Agents, shall ever be able to put their enslaving schemes into execution.—Schemes which the very children of America can see through, because self-evidently destructive of the happiness and growing prosperity of this country. And when such base designs, become obvious to the understanding of all, they must, and ever will be opposed by all; a few vilen Parasites only excepted. Our sister colonies, have gloriously defended the common cause of this country. A few persons have suspected, that as this is a central province, ministerial manoeuvres might probably be exerted here with more success. But superior opportunities must never be thrown away, for they ought to be proportionately improved by us, as we have had more time to think of the machinations that have been formed against our general constitutional liberty; But we trust," with God's blessing, to stand our ground, and as the day of trial is now come, that we shall convince the is certainly unconstitutional, and we never meant to countenance it or submit to its regulations as any way binding upon us, but viewing it, only as a convenient Appointment. . . We therefore do most heartily counsel with you in thinking it expedient to appoint Post Riders through the Country, and this as soon as may agreeable to any of the laws and regulations; and so have a copy of this letter in the N. Y. Pub. Library. See May 5.

As Gov. Tryon intends to depart for Great Britain (see April 7), "the greatest and most respectable number of inhabitants of this city, ever known to be assembled on such an occasion" hold an entertainment in his honour at the exchange. "True harmony and convivial mirth filled the heart of every one present, and the day and evening passed with the most uninterrupted concord and unanimity. When his Excellency took leave of the Company, they thanked them for this genteel compliment; and added, That he was a happy man who could return home under a persuasion that he had the good wishes of all those who have the pleasure of his acquaintance, and that he was expected soon to return, and hoped to find them in the same happy union which he left them."—N. Y. Merc., March 28, 1774.

Among original accounts in the comptroller’s office is that of work done by Anthony Dodane and William Valentine for "Reparations of the Statue of the Right Honorable William Pitt Earl of Chatham." The bill amounts to £1570, of which £168 is still due. Interesting items of the bill are as follows:

"To making new fingers and part of the Hand fixing on and writing the inscription on the front Pannel anew;" £100.00.
"To the reparation of the Face and rest of the Statue, polishing and making the whole figure complete as at first;" £100.00.
"To painting the Pedestal and Pedisides twice over;" £160.00.
"To Gilding the writing on the fassade of the papers in his Hand;" £20.00.—From original vouchers (M.S.) in comptroller’s office, box 1.

Instructions for the Enlisting of Men.

FIRST. You are not to enlist any man who is not able-bodied, healthy, and a good marksman; and as men of a good appearance may have injuries, and ventricle complaints, which render them incapable of Soldier's duty, you must give attention, that you be not imposed upon, and take the Opinion of a Surgeon, where there is room for suspicion.

SECOND. You will have great regard to moral character, sobriety, in particular, let our manners distinguish us from our enemies, as much as the case we are engaged in.

THIRD. Those who engage in defence of their Country's Liberty, shall be enlisted till the last day of December, of the present year, unless sooner discharged by the Continental Congress.

FOURTH. You shall appoint such men Serjeants and Corporals, as recommended themselves by their sobriety, industry, and diligence.

FIFTH. You will use all diligence in completing your company, and report to the President of the Provincial Congress, to the end that you may receive orders to join your regiment.

SIXTH. During the time you are filling up your company, you shall engage at the cheapest rate, for the provisions of such men as are already enlisted, if there be no public announcement of provisions, from whence you may be supplied, according to the last.

VII. You will look no notice in discharging your men, to fix as your discretion will admit.

VIII. You will take notice, that proper persons will be appointed to inspect your men, and reject such as do not answer to your instructions.

IX. You will furnish the Subscribers with a copy of your instructions, who are hereby ordered to put themselves under your command.

X. You will observe, that the men taken by this Colony will be placed precisely upon the same footing as to pay, clothing, &c. with other the Continental Troops now in service, as herein before mentioned.

In Provincial Congress at New-York, June 27, 1775.

To: Annual Committee.

Gentlemen, Greeting.

K NOW, That this Grand Continental Congress, of the several Colonies, have Resolved and Ordered, that a certain Number of Troops should be embodied in this Colony, to give Protection in the Inhabitants, and to be employed as Part of the American Continental Army. WE THEREFORE, reserving special confidence in your Prudence, Courage, and Affection to the Liberties of this Country, DO require and authorize you, to inlist and direct a Company of seventy-five able-bodied, able-bodied Men, of good Reparations, (including three officers, three Corporals, a Drummer, and one Fifer,) to be enrolled as Part of the said Troops, and that from Time to Time, you report your Progress in the Preliminary, mth the Congress, for which this shall be your Warrant. And we hereby give you Assurance, that you shall be appointed a Just Enrolment in the said Troops, when raised and embodied, if the Number of Men enrolled by you, and (the said Enrolment Avatar) is to be the other Officers, if one Company, and received into the said Troops, by such proper Officer or Master-Master, as shall be appointed for that Purpose, shall amount to the Number above-mentioned.

of the Year; than at present; and we hear many are wanted for Freight and to purchase."—N. Y. Merc. April 4, 1774.

We are informed that Mr. Lawrence Reade, who died lately in England, was a descendant of several other Reades. Donations were made of One Hundred Pounds to the New-York Hospital. A truly laudable Example of Benevolence and Humanity, which it is hoped will be followed by all those whom Providence has bleft with the Means of promoting an Institution, calculated to relieve the Distresses arising from Pain and Poverty, two of the greatest Evils of this World.

"Last week his Excellency our worthy Governor, was pleased to make a Present of 10,000 Acres of Land, in the Township of Norbury, in Gloucester County, about 20 Miles from Connecticut River, in this Province, to King’s College, in this City."—N. Y.
Merc., April 4, 1774. This grant was intended to support professors at the City College in this City. It is the second Professorship of the Kind, that ever was established in the British Dominions, the Vinerian at Oxford being the first."—N. Y. Jour., April 14, 1774. It does not appear, however, that any such professor was ever appointed.—Hist. of Columbia Univ., 35-36.

Since the Act regulating the Size of Bricks has taken Place in this Province, the hard Sort have risen from $28 to $40. per Thousand, and the soft from 16 to 30s. per ditto."—N. Y.
Merc., April 4, 1774.

Gov. Tryon, who is about to depart for England, is presented with an address by the Mayor Aldermen & Commonalty of the city. He returns an answer expressing the "most Lively Emotions of Gratitude."—M. C. G., VIII: 20-21.

In a letter to Gov. Tryon, Sec. Pownall says: "I am directed by the Earl of Dartmouth to transmit to you the inclosed Act of Parliament passed the present session, and to desire you will Cause the same to be made public for the information of those who may lie Carrying on Commerce with the province of Massachusetts Bay."—From the original letter in N.
Y. Hist. Soc. See March 31.

Smith gives an account of the last council meeting held before Tryon’s departure. He describes the governor’s leave taking thus: "At the Close he thank’d us for our Support and said he has no Differences with us but upon one Point, & that was our suffering Bills to come to him which we should afterwards advise him not to pass. That he thought we ought to stand between him & the Assembly, & that we were as much bound by Instructions as he is. That he thought the Crown so understood the Matter, & he would get the Governor to Point when he went Home."—Wm. Smith’s Diary (M.S.), IV. The governor sail-oned on April 7 (p. v.).

Gov. Tryon, intending to go to England, delivers papers to

The News (April 12) from New York for England, after delivering the government over to Lieut-assembled to take Leave of him at L’stirlings House . . . An immense Crowd came down afterwards with the Gov’t who was deadly affected at the Salutations from the Windows, as we proceeded up Broadstreet & down Wallstreet to the End of Murrays Wharf . . . When the Hold fast was cast off the Crowd gave three Cheers . . . I told him in going down that this was the first public Parting with a Gov’t in this Colony. Every Mark of Respect was shown to him—from the Grenadiers on the Dock and then A 20 Gun ship in the Harbour saluted the Packet—Then the Militia Artillery on shore Then a few Small Guns on the Long Island side at Philip Livingston’s Land—Then the Battery—
And at the Point of Nutten Island the Packet returned the Fire, & the Grenadiers fired a Salute, a gun was fired in the Harbour—The Man of War . . . led on her Way to Bosto—The Packet followed—and then a Sloop with a Number of Gent, who took Leave of the Gov’t at the Hook.

The De Luceys distinguished themselves in their Coolness towards the Rebels, and in the continual imprisonment of De Lucey.
He did not come to Town from Greenhill till he was gone below the Battery."—Wm. Smith’s Diary (M.S.), IV.

After taking the usual oaths, Lieut-Gov. Colten preludes over the provincial council, which orders the issuing of a proclamation confirming all officers in their places.—Cal. Coun. Min., 501.

The common council agrees to the committee’s recommendation that the west side of the corporation pier on the west side of Decks Slip be the landing-place for the ferries to Nassau Island, where the landing-place shall he at the wharf of Jacob Brewerton.
It is ordered that a proper bridge be built at each landing-place.
In New York the landing-place for the Counties Slip ferry to Nassau Island is fixed between the west side of the slip and the east side of the Long bridge and it is ordered that two landing-places be built between said limits.—M. C. G., VIII: 22; For the purchase of the ferries, see March 1.

The recorder proposes to the board for its consideration
"whether it would not be more for the Interest of this Corporation to Allow their Chamberlain a Certain Sallary than a Commission, that as their Revenues were daily Encroaching the Commission therein in time would be Immense."—M. C. G., VIII: 23.

Robert R. Livingston, the recorder, resigns and the common council orders that he be presented with the freedom of the city.—
M. C. G., VIII: 23. See April 13, for his successor.

A petition of this date to the common council from the "directors of the Union Library Society in the City of New York," signed by Walter Franklin, president, and endorsed "Granted ye 12th of April 1774," states that this society "consists of upwards of One Hundred and Thirty Members, who have already a convenient Library," (see Jan. 4, 1773) and is "in a situation greatly tending to the Dissemination of useful knowledge," and they ask the boards permission to deposit it in the eastern part of "the Room in the City Hall where the New York Society Library is deposited, and that "a Partition be erected between them and a New Door opened." They express their willingness to erect the partition at their own expense, and also to "take Order that their Librarian should Act as Librarian to the Corporation Library . . . without any Expenditure to this Honourable Board, provided the Corporation shall have the Books of their Library numbered and properly Catalogued, in metal or in leaves,"—From a copy or a patent of April 11, in city clerk’s record-room. The petition was granted the next day (p. v.).—M. C.
G., VIII: 24-25. For the removal to these new quarters, see July 25.

John Watts, Jr., takes his seat as recorder, succeeding Robert R. Livingston who resigned on April 7 (p. v.).—M. C. G., VIII: 241; N. Y. Merc., April 11, 1774.

The common council appoints a committee to cause Golden Hill to be "dug down & Regulated."—M. C. G., VIII: 24. Certain inhabitants of the locality petitioned at the next board meeting that the regulation thereof might be so directed as to prevent the utter decimation of many of their houses.—ibid., VIII: 25. These petitioners, "having to go to General Court," petitioned to have their names on the list of jurors, and the council were notified to attend the common council for a hearing.—ibid., VIII: 28. Golden Hill was the high ground between William, John,
Fulton and Cliff Sts. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 966.

The common council grants to the members of the Union Library Society in the use of the Hall in the room in which the books of the New York Society Library are Contained . . . they being at the Expense of a door and making the Partitions required."—M. C. G., VIII: 24-25.

Committee appointed to fix on a Suitable plan to build a Gov’t House" (see March 11), which shows the fort as it was at this date, is reproduced and described as Pl. 46-a, vol. I.

A "purse of fifty pounds, will be run for over Newmarket, on Long-island; and two fifty pounds purses will be also run for over the old course at Haerlem [see Feb. 22, 1762].—The revival of the sport at this last place, affords much satisfaction to the Brothers of the Bridle, and occasional cheerful contributions to the purses.
The particulars of the plates will be very soon advertised."—Richington’s Gazetteer, April 14, 1774.

The provincial council swears in Samuel Bayard as deputy-secretary; he is afterwards sworn in as attorney of power of attorney from Sec. George

Aside from the expected tea-ship (see March 17), word comes by way of Philadelphia that "Captain Chambers of the ship London, of this port [New York], had taken on board, at the port of London, 17 boxes of tea, and 15 boxes of teas, which were regularly cleared; and the mark and numbers were taken from the cockpit by Captain All, of Philadelphia. As Captain Chambers was one of the first who refused to take the India Company’s tea on freight the last summer, for which he received the thanks of the citizens, they could not be determined to have been shipped by some ministerial tool, under another denomination, in order to injure the owners, or the reputation of the master, or to make an experiment of this mode of introducing the tea to America.—The Committee therefore determined that the inhabitants therefore determined to examine into the matter with great vigilance."—Rivington's Gazetteer, April 28, 1774. See April 24, for arrival of Capt. Chambers.

"Notice is hereby given that the tickets of the Bridewell lottery are now rolling up, and every person interested in the public are therefore informed that the drawing will certainly commence on Monday the 25th of this instant April [9-v]. All such persons therefore who choose to become adventurers in so advantageous a scheme, and encourage so useful an institution, are desired to apply without delay, but they may be precluded in their design."—N. T. Merc, April 18, 1774. The corporation of the city evinced its approval of the project by taking some of the tickets (see April 23).

"Peter Stuyvesant, who for some years past drove a stage from Fowles-Hook to Brown's Ferry, proposes to revive the same. and will set out the last hand-bill. Mr. Josiah Crane, who carries them to the house in Newark lately occupied by Mr. Bank's.—N. T. Merc, April 18, 1774.

A New York broadside, addressed "To the Public," states that "The long expected Tea Ship arrived last night at Sandy-Hook, but the pilot would not bring up the Captain till the sense of the city was known." Such liberty is allowed, but "care will be taken that he does not enter at the custom-houses, and that no time be lost in depriving him."—From broadside in N. Y. Hist. Soc., reproduced as Pl. 41, Vol IV.

Rivington's account of the episode is as follows: "In the night, the long expected tea-ship [see March 17], Nancy, Capt. Lockyer, arrived at Sandy-Hook . . . Letters being delivered to him by the pilot, he was driven from the ship by the crew, and the captain of the determined resolutions of the citizens not to suffer the tea on board of his ship to be landed; he requested the pilot to bring him up to procure necessities and make a protest; but he would not do it till leave was obtained. Early the next morning this was communicated to the committee; and it appearing to him to be the sense of the city, that such leave should be granted to him, the ship to remain at the Hook: the pilot was immediately dispatched to bring him up. This intelligence we immediately communicated to the public by a hand-bill.

At 3 P. M. the pilot-boat returned with Capt. Lockyer on board; and although the people had but a very short notice of it, the crowd was with the citizens, to see the man whose arrival they long and impatiently wished, to give them an opportunity to co-operate with the other colonies. The committee conducted him to the home of the Hon. Henry White, Esq.; one of the consignees, and there informed Capt. Lockyer, that it was the sense of the citizens, that he should not presume to go near the Custom-house, and to make the utmost dispatch in procuring the necessary articles he wanted for his voyage. To this he answered, "That as the consignees would not receive his cargo, he would not go to the Custom-house, and would make all the dispatch he could to leave the city." A committee of observation was appointed to go down in a sloop to the Hook, to remain near the tea-ship, till she departs for London . . . Wednesday night arrived Capt.
Lawrence, from London, who confirmed the account received from Philadelphia, of Capt. Chambers having on board 18 casks of fine tea, but could not tell who was the shipper, or to whom it was addressed. Thursday the committee interrogated Capt.
Lawrence relative to what he knew of the tea's being on board of Capt. Chambers, when he shewed them a memorandum in his pocket-book, which he took from the cockpit in the middle of Captain Chamber's file of papers in the Searcher's office at Gravesend, corresponding with the advice transmitted from Philadelphia, except some variation in the mark. This morning the following hand bill was distributed:

"To the Public. The sense of the city, relative to the landing the East India Company's tea, being signified to Captain Lockyer, by the committee, nevertheless, it is the desire of a number of the citizens, that at his departure from hence, he should set out, with his "own eyes, their detestation of the measures pursued by the Ministry and the India Company, to enslave this country. This will be declared by the convention, & the people at his departure from this city which will be on next Saturday morning, at 9 o'clock, when no doubt every friend to this country will attend. The bells will give the notice about this: and he embarks from Murray's Wharf.

"New-York, April 21, 1774.
"By Order of the Committee."—Rivington's Gazetteer, April 28, 1774. This report of Rivington is the one used by Lieut.-Gov.
Collen to accompany his own report to the Earl of Dartmouth regarding New York's resolution of the 17th April: 19.
In the following quaint account, the N. T. Jour. describes the stormy passage of the "Nancy" to New York: "Last Monday Night arrived at Sandy-Hook, the long expected Tea Ship Nancy, Captain Lockyer from Antigua, whither she had been driven from this coast. In her passage back she met with bad weather, lost an anchor from her bows, had her mizen mast carried away, sprung her topmast, and was thrown on her beam ends. Ever since her departure from England she has met with a continued succession of misfortunes, having on Board somewhat worse than a Jonah, which, alter long long tossed in the tempestuous Ocean, it is hoped, like him, will be thrown back upon the place from whence it came—May it teach a lesson there, as useful as the preaching of Jonah was to the Ninevites."—N. T. Jour. Apr. 21, 1774.

In supporting a motion for the repeal of the tax on tea, Edmund Burke delivers in the house of commons his well-known oration on American taxation. He argued that this was a small duty when the larger taxes imposed by the Townshend Act (see June 29, 1767) have been repealed (see April 12, 1770). The retention of the duty also means a great loss to England, for America is the largest market for tea and the colonists will not receive it as long as it is taxed. Burke next attacks the British colonial policy in general. Before 1764, England was satisfied with having a commercial monopoly of America, and there was no great protest from the colonies against taxes imposed solely to regulate trade. But since 1764, Great Britain has been trying to raise a revenue in the New World, and confirming British monopoly. Burke pictures the peaceful state of the provinces during the 177th and the first half of the 18th centuries, the disturbances caused by the Sugar Act and the Stamp Act, the calm following the repeal of the latter, and the renewed upheaval brought about by the Townshend Act. He makes this appeal: "Be content to bind America by laws of trade; you have always done it. Let this be your reason for binding their trade. Do not burthen them by taxes; you were not used to do so from the beginning. Let this be your reason for not taxing . . . if, intemperately, unwarily, fatally, you sophisticate and poison the very source of government, by urging subtle devices, and consecrate oaths to those you govern, from the unlimited and inimitable nature of supreme sovereignty, you will teach them by these means to call that sovereignty itself in question. When you drive him hard, the boar will surely turn upon the hunters. If that sovereignty and their freedom cannot be reconciled, which will they take? They will cast your sovereignty in your face. No body will be argued into slavery." Burke finishes his address in these words: "I trust I have shown . . . that in time of peace you flourished in commerce, and when war required it, had sufficient aid from the Colonies, while you pursued your ancient policy; that you threw every thing into confusion when you made the stamp act; and that you restored everything to peace and order when you repealed it.
I have shewn that the revival of the system of taxation has produced the very worst effects; and that the partial repeal has produced, not paid good, but destruction, and consequent oaths to the system of 1766, for no other reason, than that I think it laid deep in your truest interests . . . Until you come back to that system, there will be no peace for England."—Speech of Edmund

At noon, "the number occurs [see April 24] in a boat to the Hook; 2 the pilot asked him if he had any tea on board? He declared he had none.
Two of the committee of observation went board of Capt. Chambers, and informed him of the advice received of his having tea on board, and demanded a sight of all his coffrets, which was accordingly given them; but the coffret for the tea was not found among them; nor was the mark manifest.

"About 4 P. M. the ship came to the wharf, when she was boarded by a number of the citizens. Capt. Chambers was interrogated relative to his having the tea on board, but he still denied it. He was then told that it was in vain to deny it, for as there was good proof of its being on board, it would be found, as he had occasion to go into court. He was assured that he had better be open and candid about it; and demanded the cocker for the tea; upon which he confessed it was on board, and delivered the cocker. The owners and the committee immediately met at Mr. Francis's, where Captain Chambers was ordered to attend. Upon examining him who was the shipper and owner of the tea, he declared that he was sole owner of it. After the most mature deliberation, it was determined to communicate to the whole state of the matter to the people, who were convened near the ship; which was accordingly done. The Mohawks were prepared to do their duty at a proper hour; but the body of the people was so impatient, that before it arrived, a number of them entered the ship, about 8 P. M. took out the tea, which was at hand, broke the cases, and started their contents into the river, without doing any damage to the ship or cargo. Several persons of reputation were placed below to keep tally, and about the companion to prevent ill-disposed persons from going below the deck.

"At the people all dispersed in good order, but in great wrath against the Captain; and it was not without some risk of his life that he escaped."—Rivington's Gazetteer, April 28, 1774. See April 27.

The Annual Register (London, 1774), 132, reports that "a number of persons habited as Mohawks, entered the ship, took out the tea that was at hand, broke the cases, and started the contents into the river, without doing any damage to the ship or cargo."

An interesting similarity exists between the treatment of the tea-ship in New York and that in Boston, not only on Dec. 16, 1773 (p. 5), but also on March 6, 1774, when a vessel arrived in Boston having on board 25 chests of East India tea together with other goods. At the custom-house a permit was granted for landing all merchandise but the tea, but the officers steadfastly refused to furnish papers which allowed even for the return of the tea. "This determination was met by a large crowd of men having the appearance of Indians entered the vessel, took out the tea, emptied every chest overboard, and effectually destroyed the whole; after which they peaceably retired, without doing any further damage."—N. Y. Jour., March 17, 1774.

Christopher Colles proposes to the common council "to Erect a Reservoir, and to Convey Water thro' the Several Streets of this City." The consideration thereof is "deferred to Some future Time."—M. G. C., VIII: 26-27. See June 14. This is the first recorded proposal that the city government create a water supply. Before 1774, the city's supply of water from drinking wells was confined almost entirely to the famous "Tea Water Pump," at Chatham and Pearl Sts. (see Pls. 40 and 58-b, Vol I; A. Pl. 14-b, Vol. III, and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 976), and was peddled about the city from carts. Water from wells was also used, but this water was generally so bad that, as one early traveler observed, "even the hogs refused it."—N. Y. Jour., March 17, 1774.

This morning "the shipping in the harbour displayed their colours, and a large flag was hoisted on the 'Liberty Pole,' and at 8 A. M. all the bells of the city (except those of the city hall and college, as indicated in a letter signed "Brutus" in Rivington's Gazetteer, May 12, 1774) rang. . . . About nine, the greatest number of people were collected at that near the Coffee-House, that was ever known in this city. At a quarter past nine the committee came out of the Coffee-House with Captain Lockyer, upon which, the band of music attending, played God save the King. Immediately there was a call for Capt. Chambers,—Where is he? Where is he? Capt. Lockyer must not go till we find Capt. Chambers to send him with the tea ship. This produced marks of fear in Capt. Lockyer, who imagined some mischief was intended; but upon assurances being given him to the contrary, he appeared comparatively calm. . . ."—N. Y. Jour., March 17, 1774.

On Sunday night at 8 P. M., the Committee of Observation returned from the Hook. They informed us that the sailors of the Tea Ship, being unwilling to proceed with her to London, made a raft of spars and boards, in order to quit the ship with the tide of flood, but were observed by the Captain, and being aided by the Committees, who offered their assistance to him, they desisted from their project. They subsequently proposed to open every cell and every sloop, with the Committees, weighed their anchors and stood to sea; and at 2 P. M. the pilot boat and the Committee's sloop left her at the distance of three leagues from the Hook.

"With Capt. Lockyer, in the ship Nancey, went passenger, Capt. James Chambers.

"Many persons still suspecting that Captain James Chambers continues privately in this city, they may be assured that he sailed out of the Hook, for London, on Sunday last, on board the Nancey, Captain Lockyer, who afforded him a very hospital and gentlemanly reception. And whose whole behaviour, during his stay in this city, proved him to be a sensible, discreet, and a very well-behaved man."—Rivington's Gazetteer, April 28, 1774.

For a discussion of the slight attention given by historians in general to the New York "Tea Party" as compared to that of Boston, see Dawson's, Westminster County during the Am. Rev., 7.

The treasurer of the city is ordered to "take 1000 tickets of the Bridewell Lottery on & for the Risque of this Corporation."—M. G. C., VIII: 27. The lottery was drawn on April 25 (q. v.).

A gentleman in London writes to his friend in New York: "The present great Topic and universal Inquiry is, what will the Americans do now?—The generally answered. They must submit, they can't possibly do other Ways—The Boston Port Bill will speedily and effectually execute itself—Taking away The Trade, ruins every Man of Property in The Place.—This Idea will strike such a Panic, as must render it easy for Mr. Gage to obtain not only ample Indemnification for the East India Company; but Submission on the part of the Bostanians, and acknowledgment of the Parliament's Right to Tax them: And should the Port Bill fail in effecting all this, a Corps de Reserve is at Hand; A Bill ready for the Royal Assent, new modeling their Constitution and Government, which will put such a Rein in the Minister's Hand, as may enable him to pull them by which Way he likes it, a number of men I say they must submit, and the same Measure will produce the same Effect, in every refractory Colony."—N. Y. Jour., July 7, 1774.

"On Thursday the 8th Instant, Joseph Bryan, who was employed as the Constitutional Port Rider from Philadelphia to Baltimore, and was intrusted with 578 Dollars in a Bag directed to Mr. Williams Lux, at Baltimore, rode off with the Cash and has never been heard of since."—N. Y. Merc., Apr. 25, 1774. Such occurrences must have brought home to the people of the country the hazard and inconvenience of payment in currency instead of bank's certificates. It was not until 1784 (p. 4) that a bank was established in New York.

Solomon Griffiths establishes what is evidently the first employment agency for servants, at his house in Queen St., near Farn Water. He calls it a "General Register Office," and announces that it is patterned after one in England and that "domestic desiring servants, by paying two shillings, may have their names entered in a book; and servants desiring places, by paying two shillings each, will be registered."—N. Y. Merc., Apr. 25, 1774.

"Notice is hereby given, That the Bridewell Lottery is now in such readiness for drawing, and that the same will certainly commence This Day, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, at the Long Room in the Exchange, in presence of the managers, who are now sworn to the due execution of their trust. Those therefore who wish to become adventurers in a scheme whereby they may advance both their private fortune and the interests of society, are desired to make immediate application for tickets."—N. Y. Merc., April 25, 1774.

The common council orders that the committee appointed to cause the Battery Pond to be filled up be a committee to "Compleat the filling up of the White Hall Ship" (see Nov. 11, 1772), which has become a very good conveyance. The list of the officers is:—M. G. C., VIII: 27-28. Among accounts preserved in the comptroller's office is Brandon and Farley's bill of July 14, 1774, for 50 day's work at "the Whitehall," with four carts at ten shillings a day for each cart. The amount of the bill is £100, of which £50 was still due. On July 14, this balance was ordered paid by the common council.—M. G. C., VIII: 19.

"Slot Alley" is mentioned in an advertisement as the former place of business of one John Klein, whose successor is one Jacob Poser, "in Bridge-street, (commonly called Wynkoop-street)."—

A petition signed by about 1,600 inhabitants is presented to Lt.-Gov. Colden, protesting against the fire prevention act, which regulates the kind of materials to be used in building. This petition represents the obstruction to city development which complacency with the act involves, as well as the hardship to workers in the building trades, caused not only by the scarcity of required building materials but by their excessive cost. The act became effective Jan. 1 (see Oct. 14, 1773), and met with protest immediately. On Jan. 27, a petition urging the amendment or suspension of the act was referred by the assembly to a committee of the whole house (see Assem. Jour., 1774, 24). No further action was taken, and in March the assembly was protracted to May 17. In this petition of May 2, the signers urge Colden to take special measures to convince the assembly, that relief may be sought. No action is recorded.—Cal. Hist. Miss., Eng., 836. A copy of the petition of May 2, with a list of the signers, appears in Man. Com. Coun. (1830), 427-42. See April 1, 1775, for a later amendment.

Continuing the discussion regarding the post-office (see March 24), the Boston committee of correspondence addresses the following letter to New York, Philadelphia, Newport, and Providence: "On the first application to us by the Committee of Correspondence for New York for the establishment of a Post Office on the footing of a voluntary subscription, we communicated the proposal to several of the principal Merchants in this Town, and had the satisfaction to learn, that in case our Brethren to the Eastward discovered a forwardness to Join us in so important an undertaking, they were ready to give it every encouragement in their power." Boston reports success as regards the "Eastward Brethren," and adds: "We have already obtained a handsome subscription here, and have no reason to doubt . . . that we shall be ready to receive the Mails when they shall be extended from the Southern Colonies to the Borders of this Province."—From a copy of the letter in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

11 "Preparative Meeting" of the Society of Friends reports to the Flushing "Monthly Meeting" (now N. Y.) the purchase of a piece of ground in Queen St. for about £4,500. The second New York Quaker meeting-house (for the first, see 1696) was built here, and completed in 1776. During the war, the new house was occupied by the British (see Nov. 12, 1775). It was taken down in 1824.—Onderdonk, Annals of Hempstead, 102. A plan of the ground for the second meeting-house was made on Oct. 12, 1774 (q.v.). See also 1755 and 1794.

Lt.-Gov. Colden, intending to go to the country, adjourns the council to the "Brookland" ferry, on Long Island. Its meetings were held there from May 16 to Sept. 1.—Cal. Coun. Min., 504-1.

"Resolved and Ordered that a Lease be made out from this Corporation to Messrs. Edward Light, Theophilus Backe and Charles Hase, for the Vacant Ground or House upon the Island of New York for the Term of Three years at the Annual Rent of one shilling with a Covenant in the said Lease that the Lessees shall from time to time Surrender up such part of the said Grounds as shall be requested by this Corporation and at the Expiration of the said Term shall deliver up the Possession of the whole, . . ."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

"A Proposal was made last Week by some Merchants of this City, to raise a Sum of Money to be employed in the Whale Fishery, and in a few Days £7,000 was subscribed for that Purpuse, and 'tis not doubted but double that Sum will be added this Week when 'tis expected several Vessels will be immediately dispatched on the Whaling Account."—N. Y. Merc., May 9, 1774.

Louis XV of France dies and is succeeded by his grandson, who becomes Louis XVI.

The ship "Samson" arrives "in 26 days from London."—Rivington's Gazetteer, May 19, 1774. The "Sparrow" sighted the Boston Port Bill (see May 15).

Gen. Gage arrives in Boston to succeed Hutchinson as governor of the province of Massachusetts Bay. He lands "at Castle William under a discharge of the cannon of that Fortress."—N. Y. Merc., May 24, 1774.

A letter from the committee of correspondence in Boston, in concurrence with the committees of the towns of Charlestown, Cambridge, Brookline, Newton, Roxbury, Dorchester, Lexington, and Lynn, is sent to the committee of correspondence of New May York. It is also intended for New Jersey, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and Portsmouth. The letter is as follows: "We have just received the Copy of an Act of the British Parliament whereby the Town of Boston is treated in a Manner the most ignominious cruel and unjust. The Parliament have taken upon them . . . to try, condemn and by an Act to punish them, unheard; which would have been in Violation of natural Justice even if they had an acknowledged Jurisdiction. They have ordered our port to be entirely shut up, leaving us barely so much of the Means of Subsistence as to keep us from perishing with Cold and Hunger; and it is said, that . . . British Ship of War is to block up our Harbour, until we shall make Restitution to the East India Company, for the Loss of their Tea, . . . obedience is paid to the Law and Authority of Great Britain, and the Revenue is duly collected. This Act fills the Inhabitants with Indignation. . . . This Attack though made immediately upon us, is doubtless designed for every other Colony, who will not surrender their rights and Liberties into the Hands of an infamous Ministry. Now therefore is the Time, when all should be united in opposition to this Violation of the Liberties of all. Their Grand Object is to divide the Colonies. . . . The single Question then is, whether you consider Boston as now suffering in the Common Cause, & sensibly feel and rejoin the Injury and Afront offered to her? If you do (and we cannot believe otherwise) May we not from your Approbation of our former Conduct, in Defence of American Liberty, rejoice on suspending your Trade with Great Britain at least, which it is acknowledged, will be a great, but necessary Sacrifice, to the Cause of Liberty, and will effectually defeat the Design of this Act of Revenge. If this should be done, you will please to consider it will be, through a voluntary Suffering, greatly short of what we are called to endure under the immediate hand of Tyranny. . . . "We desire your Answer by the Bearer; and after assuring you, that, not in the least intimidated by this inhuman Treatment we are still determined to maintain to the utmost of our Abilities the Rights of America."—From MS. in the N. Y. Pub. Library, endorsed "Copy of Letter sent to New York."

Capt. Jenkins, bearing the act of parliament for shutting up the port of Boston, arrived there, May 10. The following day summonses were sent to eight towns near Boston for their committees of correspondence to meet at Fanueil Hall on Thursday, May 12.—N. Y. Jour., May 19, 1774. The preceding letter, of May 13, was evidently the outcome of this meeting. For New York's answer, see May 21.

On Friday, May 13, the town of Boston had a legal meeting, at which it was voted "That it is the opinion of this town, that if the said Colonies are to be governed by a Court of Justice, who should all apply to him of their truth.—Rivington's Gazetteer, May 19, 1774. The act appears to have been printed twice; once alone, and again with the letters on the back.—Becker, The Hist. of Political Parties in the Province of N. T., 112, footnote.

Copies of the Boston Port Act (see March 31), having on the back extracts from letters from London, dated April 7 and 8, are distributed about town. The authenticity of the letters being later questioned, Holt, of the New York Journal, advertised in Rivington's paper that he had discovered a reat that fraud, power, and the most odious oppression, will rise triumphant over right, justice, social happiness, and freedom.

"And, Ordered, That this vote be forthwith transmitted by the Moderator to all our sister Colonies, in the name and behalf of this town,"—d.m. Arch., I, 331.

Edward Bardin, according to previous announcement, opens"the noted tavern the corner house in the fields, formerly kept by John Jones, a few doors above Mr. Abraham De La Montagne's . . ."—N. Y. Merc., May 9, 1774. Later he announced the "Pantry open'd every evening precisely at 7 o'clock, and a cloth laid with the following dishes, viz. Gammon, Roast Beef, Roast Veal, Roast Mutton, Roast Lamb, Roast Turkey, Pickled Oysters, Custards, Tarts of different kinds, and Chicken Pies for ready Suppers every night."—Ibid., Aug. 8, 1774.

Isaac Sears and Alexander McDougall write to the committee
The shocking and detestable Act of Parliament, that shuts up your Port the first of June. We want Language to express our detestation of this additional Act, and our determination to stop the Exportation of all Hoops, Staves, Heeling and Lumber to the English Islands; and to suffer no more of the first Articles to be exported to the foreign Islands than will be sufficient to bring home the Sugar, Rum and Molasses for the return of American Cargoes. We can with great Truth assure you, that many timid and sensible People in this City, who have interested themselves but very little in the Controversy with Great Britain, express the greatest Indignation and Resentment at the Conduct of the Ministry to your Town, and consider the Treatment to it, as if done immediately to this City. And this is the General Sense of our Inhabitants, which we judged necessary should be communicated to you; even in this hasty inclement Manner. We have no Time to send this to the other Members of the Committee, for Reasons, which the Express, Mr. Cornelius Bradford, will inform you. He is a true Friend to this Colony, and will wait your Directions for his Return. From copy of the letter preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library. Parts of the letter, with the erroneous date, May 14, appeared in the Boston Gaz. of May 23. The suggestion regarding a general congress is omitted in the printed report, as is the statement: "we have stimulated the Merchants" to apppoint a meeting.

Gen. Haldimand writes from New York to the Earl of Dartmouth: "The accounts received before the arrival of the packet... had made known the plan of operation intended to bring Boston to a sense of order and decency, so that on the arrival of Lieutenant-Governor Bolton, they would be in a state to receive the Governor. The means adopted by the insurgents to prevent his landing, and to stop the vessels, will be at a loss what they are to expect if they will prove refractory. It is the opinion of many people here, that they will acknowledge their fault, pay for it, and endeavour to reimage themselves into his Majesty's favour by a proper submission."

The following broadside describes the nomination of New York's committee of correspondence: "At a meeting of the Exchange, 16th May, 1774, Isaac Low chosen Chairman: 1st Question put. Whether it is necessary, for the present, to appoint a committee to correspond with the neighboring Colonies on the present important crisis? Carried in the affirmative by a majority. 2d. Whether a committee be nominated this evening for the approbation of the public? Carried in the affirmative by a majority. 3d. Whether of fifty be appointed, or twenty-five? Carried for fifty by a great majority."

The names of the fifty men nominated follow, and this sentence is appended: "The names of Francis Lewis was afterward added, making the number fifty-one."

Wednesday, about noon, he set out for Philadelphia.

The last public commencement of King's College is held in Trinity Church.—Hist. of Columbia Univ. (1904), 59-62. The celebrity [celebration] was honored by his Excellency General

Haldimand, the principal Officers of the Army, the Clergy, and a very brilliant Assembly. . . . The Discourses de-ivered upon this Occasion did great Honour to the Orators, who justly merited and received universal Approbation."—N. Y. Jour.,

May 19, 1774. After the war, the college was reorganized under legislation which named it Columbia College. See May 1, 1784; April 15, 1787.

Smith writes in his diary: "A general Consternation and Disgust works among the People—The Letters & printed Papers call us Rebels, & increase our Dissatisfaction & excite a Contempt of Government—I fear we shall lose all that Attacka... we once had in so great a Degree for the Parent Country . . . A Company of Artillery—Cannon & Ammunition went this Day to Boston from this Place."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), 19.

John Thurman writes from New York to John Stark of London:
"We are very uneasy, & dont know but Parliament mean to drive us to measures which may prove destructive to Great Britain & her colonies, every good friend to both will wish for a lasting union & I am sure it is the desire of every good American to wish Great Britain may forever Remain our Head & Ruler to the never to impeach her power. From Extracts from the Letter Books of John Thurman, Jr.," in Hist. Mag., 2nd ser., IV: 288. On the same day, he sends a letter to Messrs. Low, Griffin, & Clay, in which he says: "Surely Great Britain can never mean to drive us into measures that may Lay the foundation to an eternal separation. It is not possible you can mean to Ruin the Town of Boston by one single act of opposition & what is done to one may be done to all, & should this act be carried into execution then fairwell American Freedom & Happiness & I may say Englands glory.

"United in Love & friendship to Great Britain we are a Happy people, but if a Civil War is carried on by an act of a Congress, & distress Hurry the People into acts of violence, God only knows what will be the end. This is the most alarming affair I ever knew, we have had a meeting of the Inhabitants of this City, we have chosen a very respectable company of fifty of the Principal Citizens [see May 16] & every measure will be taken to keep Peace and good order. I should wish to see an end put to our Troubles & Peace and Harmony Restored. America never will submit to Internal Taxation—never can be happy but under Great Britain. I am in hopes General Gage will set all matters Right.
So to be a good gentleman is so much esteemed in this Country, he arrived at Boston last Friday [see May 13]. Expresses are sent to the different Provinces & you may depend they will all unite in one Cause & endeavour by all possible means to maintain Peace & Good order."—Ibid., and ser., IV: 288.

In respect to the letter Mr. Duane has transmitted to John Metcalfe, 17 (p.5), Mr. Hay writes: "I am a great concourse of the inhabitants "meets at the coffee house to confirm or alter the nomination of a Committee to correspond with our sister colonies." Mr. Low addresses the meeting, urging the exercise of "calm reason" in its acts. "Zeal in a good cause is most laudable, but when it transports beyond the bounds of reason it often leaves room for bitter reflection.

"We ought, therefore, gentlemen, to blush from our hearts all little party distinctions, feuds and animosities, for to our unanimity and virtue we must at last recur for safety; and that man will approve himself the best friend to his country whose highest emulsion is to inculcate those principles and examples we shall feed by."

The meeting then confirms the nomination of the 50 men made at the "Exchange" on May 16, and the name of Mr. Francis Lewis is added to the list by unanimous consent.—4 Am. Arch., I: 294-95.

The public warning of the meeting, given in Rivington's Gazettes, of May 19, the editor urges that "All partial attachments and private animosities . . . be laid aside . . . And the choice be confirmed without any sinister opposition from narrow and ungenerous sentiments."

The following account is from a New Yorker's letter to a correspondent in London: "The self-constituted Committee of the Sons of Liberty for the city of New York . . . had taken upon them to write letters to Boston to their brethren there [see May 15], assuring them, 'that the city of New-York would heartily join them against May the cruel and arbitrary proceedings of the British Parliament' &c.

which as soon as the gentlemen of property in this city knew, they were very justly alarmed, and a meeting of the inhabitants was desired at the Coffee House, where, in spite of all that could be done by the old Committee, which consisted of eight or ten flaming patriots without property, or any thing else but impudence, a new Committee was chosen, consisting of fifty members, most of them men of sense, coolness, and property."—5 Am. Arch., I: 300 footnote.

Gouverneur Morris, in a letter to Mr. Penn, dated May 20, described the meeting: "I stood [yesterday] in the balcony, and on my right hand were ranged all the people of property, with some few poor dependants, and on the other all the traders, &c. who thought it worth their while to leave daily labor for the good of the country. . . . The mob begin to think and to reason. . . . The gentry begin to fear this. Their committee will be appointed, they will deceive the people, and again forfeit a share of their confidence. And if these instances of what with one side is policy, with the other perfidy, shall continue to increase, and become more frequent, farewell aristocracy. I see, and I see it with fear and trembling, that if the disputes with Britain continue, we shall be under the worst of all possible dominions. We shall be under the domination of a riotous mob.

"It is the interest of all men, therefore, to seek for reunion with the parent country. A safe and sure method to be now tendered. Internal taxation to be left with ourselves.
The right of regulating trade to be vested in Britain, where alone is found the power of protecting it."—Jones, Hist. of N. Y. during

"The British Merchants themselves, have already begun 21 to anticipate our Non Importation Agreement, which will be thoroughly confirmed by a Brig which sailed yesterday for London, with Countermands and Letters enough, expressive of the general Sense of the Colonies, as far as we have been able to Collect it."—Extract from a letter from Boston, dated May 21, to sundry gentlemen in New York, in N. Y. Jour., June 2, 1774.

The committee of correspondence meets at the Coffee House, 23 "pursuant to notice for that purpose given." After choosing Isaac Low chairman, and John Aslop deputy chairman, the receipt of a letter from "the body of Mechanick," informing them
"of their concurrence with the other inhabitants of this city, in their nomination," was reported.

"Ordered, that Mr. Duane, Mr. Jay, and Mr. Van Schaaeck be a Committee to draw up a set of Rules for the regulation of the Committee . . . a letter from the Committee of Correspondence of Boston, with the Vote of the town of Bosom [Boston], of the 15th instant [p. 49], and a Letter from the Committee of Philadelphia were read.

"Ordered, that Mr. McDougall, Mr. Low, Mr. Duane, and Mr. Hay, be a Committee of the Grand Committee, to give an Answer to the Boston Committee, at eight o'clock, P. M., to which hour the Grand Committee were then adjourned."—4

At 8 P. M. the Grand Committee met . . . and the Committee appointed to draw the Answer to the Boston Letters, reported a Draught, which was unanimously agreed to . . .

On Tuesday it was delivered to Mr. Paul Revere, the Express from Boston, who immediately set out on his Return. A Copy of it was ordered to be transmitted by the Chairman to the Committee of Correspondence for the City of Philadelphia.

"We are informed this Letter proposes to the People of Boston, that a Congress of the Colonies should be convened, without Delay, to determine and direct the Measures to be pursued for Relief of the Town of Boston, and the Redress of all the American Grievances."—N. Y. Jour., May 26, 1774.

By the letter itself was not made public till June 13, 1774. It was withheld so long that, on June 13, the following request appeared, in the Gazette, asking that the proceedings of the committee of correspondence should be published: "It is hoped the proceedings will be published for the use of the constituents; The Times are critical, and big with interesting Events which has occasioned the Committee of Correspondence at Philadelphia to promulgate their Letter to Boston, and such other Proceedings as were judged necessary for the Satisfaction of the Public."—N. Y. Merc,

The letter begins with: "Notwithstanding the boasted resolutions of many of the principal people of this Colony to stand forth in defence of their rights and liberties, we are well assured that most of them are sorry for embarking in the cause so far, and that they only want an opportunity to withdraw the mask, to join with the friends of govern-ment. If the Minister was wicked enough to load us with the heaviest impositions, I doubt not but he would be able to carry his designs into execution, by means of a few men-of-war; for the spirit of the inhabitants here died away as soon as it was known that General Gage, with a fleet of ships, arrived at Boston, to shut up the ports and remove the courts of judiciature. I heartily wish that an end were put to all disputes between us and our mother country, that trade and commerce might flourish again, for whilst these contentions last, the merchants of your city must feel the effect of it as well as we." —Am. Arch., I 299 (footnote).

Hunter and Walsh "beg leave to inform the public, that they have erected (and [are] now carrying on) A Soap and Candle Manufactory, in Broad-Street, a few doors above the post-office, where they intend carrying on those branches very extensively." —N. Y. Merc., May 30, 1774.

The committee of correspondence meets at the exchange to consider the circular letter prepared by the committee appointed to draft such letter (see May 30). It is approved and orders are given that copies shall be printed and forwarded to the treasurer of each county, to be transmitted by him to the supervisors in his district. This was done —Am. Arch., I 300.

The committee also took action regarding a letter from Phila-delphia, addressed to their chairman, which stated: "That a General Meeting of all Denominations of Christians in that City, it was agreed to keep the first Day of June as a public Fast; being the Day when the Boston Port Bill commenced." The committee could not pass on the proposed resolution, as the resolution was not ready for them, and ordered that copies of the letter be delivered to the clergy of the different denominations in the city that they might conduct themselves as they saw fit." —N. T. Gaz., June 6, 1774; N. Y. Jour., June 2, 1774. The committee states that there were no means a general meeting of all denominations of Christians on the above occasions. Nearly all of the meetings of the committee are held in the evening, beginning usually as early as six o'clock.

The Boston Port Bill passed by the English parliament on June 13th effective. It provided for the transit of all goods from Boston to Salem, but gives power to the king to reverse it, upon the return of order and the payment of compensation to the owners for the destroyed tea. This order aroused much sympathy for Boston among the other colonies, who manifested it by relief contributions when distress followed the loss of business. The Boston Port Bill, designed as a just punishment for the destruction of the tea brought ruin to the commerce of Boston, and distress to all whose subsistence depended upon it; but its political effect was to draw the colonies together, and that was so effectually promoted by the vigorous action of the committee of correspondence that the idea of a continental congress soon became general." —Winsor, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 68. Gen. Gage landed in Boston, May 17, to be ready to put the bill in force June 1—Ibid., VI: 95.

"Many of the Citizens of this Place conceiving that the general Sentiments of the Inhabitants are very erroneously ex-pressed in a Letter published in the Boston Gazette [see May 15], ... think it necessary to inform the Public, That the said Letter is by no means to be considered as a Letter from the Committee of Correspondence, as the first Day of their acting was on Monday the 23d of May." —N. T. Gaz., June 2; Register, June 2; Gazzet, June 2; N. Y. Gaz., June 6, 1774; Ibid. June 16.

"Last Week was paid into the Hands of the Church Wardens of Trinity Church, by the Executors of the last Will and Testa ment of Mrs. Ann Chambers, a Legacy of $500, the Interest thereof, by her Will, is annually to be distributed as a Premium for the Encouragement of piety among the Poor or Orphan Pupils at the Charity School under the Care of the Rector and Vestry of Trinity Church: Which laudable Example it is to be hoped will be fol lowed by others." —N. T. Merc., June 6, 1774.
Erasmas Williams announces that he has purchased "the large commodious House and Gardens, coach house, stables, &c., in the out-ward of this city, heretofore known by the name of Vaux-Hall, but changed, with great propriety, to that of Mount Pleasant." Besides the beauty of the view and the healthfulness of the situation, the new owner has the advantage of being "near the College and Hospital now erected, and so contiguous to the city that a moderate walker may, in 15 or 20 minutes, be in any part thereof." Williams offers board and lodging to "single gentlemen, or gentle- men with their families," especially travellers, and states that "some apartments are already fitted."—N. T. Merc., June 6, 1774.

This was the old pleasure garden on the North River, in earlier years known as the Old Bowling Green, for a history of which see March 29, 1778.

John Campbell, a potter, at the "upper end of the Broadway, opposite the Negroes Burying Ground," offers earthenware for sale, which he warrants "to be better than any imported from England or Holland."—N. T. Merc., June 6, 1774. For the location of this burying-ground, see "Potteryfield" in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 927.

In conformity with orders adopted at a meeting of the committee of correspondence, June 6, a letter under date of June 7 is sent to the committee of correspondence in Boston. This letter is in response to Boston's communication of May 30 (q.v.). Extracts from the letter follow: You said, 'that a speedy, united and vigorous exertion is the only all that can be used upon to yield us any effectual Relief, and that this Effort is on all hands acknowl- edged to be the edge of Trade in such wise defined by us.' To the first we entirely concur with you in Sentiment; but in the last we apprehend you have made a mistake [see June 16,—for on revising our Letter to you, so far from finding a word mentioned of a 'Suspension of Trade' the idea is not even conceived.—That, and every other Resolution we have thought it most prudent to leave for the Discussion of the proposed general Congress." The letter continues by expressing readiness to join in such congress, and suggests that sufficient time be allowed the delegates from colonies to the southward, letters to which "we will forward with great Pleasure."

A request is made for the names of the men constituting the Boston committee, and "We beg also for the future that your Letters be sealed and directed to our Chairman."—From the original letter preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library. See also 4 Am. Arch., I: 101-4.

John Hutty, "Engraver in general, from London, At Mr. Hew-itt's directly opposite the Merchants Coffee-House, in Dock-Street, New-York," advertises that he engraves coats-of-arms, crests, seals, medallions, portraits, engraving on exchange, letter heads, door plates, dog collars, etc.—Rivett's Gazetteer, June 9, 1774. On Sept. 5, he gave notice that he had recently erected a press for copper-plate printing, "by which Means he will be enabled to execute every Piece of Engraving he is favour'd with in a nearer, more easier, and reasonable Manner than heretofore could be done."—N. T. Merc., Sept. 5, 1774. See also Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 137-38.

At a meeting of the committee of correspondence, it is ordered, "That a Committee be appointed to answer the Letter received from the Committee at Hartford, and enclose them a copy of a Letter wrote the 23d ultimo, by this Committee, to Boston; and also to answer a Letter received from Mr. Bernard Lentot, of Bran- ford, and that they write a letter to the Committee of Correspond- ence of South Carolina, enclosing a copy of this Committee's first letter to Boston, and to acquaint them that this Committee have, in a subsequent letter to the Committee at Boston, desired them to appoint a time and place for a Congress, an answer to which they expect daily."—4 Am. Arch., I: 305.

The common council agrees upon certain fines to be imposed upon the members for tardiness at or absence from the meetings.—M. G. C., VIII: 35. Self-imposed being "I am early origin"—see June 9, 1697.

On this day, Gov. Tryon sends to the Earl of Dartmouth a report on the province of New York. In speaking of the port of New York, he adds: "The Map in the Appendix marked number 3, presents a full View of the Harbor, the Situation of Sandy Hook, and shews the Depth of Water from thence up to the Port." Tryon then goes on to give an account of the various kinds of courts and the extent of their jurisdiction; the trade of the province, its exports and imports; the strength of the neighbouring Indians and their attitude towards the English; and the salaries and mode of appointment of the civil officials. "Military Establishments," he concludes, "have only taken place in Time of War. The Prov- ince during the late War, raised, clothed and paid a large Body of Forces, which was disbanded at the Peace, and there is at present no Provincial Military Establishment unless the Militia may be regarded as such; The Officers of this Corps are . . . appointed by the Governor, and having no pay their offices must be rather expensive than lucrative." No census of the population has been taken since 1771 (q.v.), but, by using the figures then calculated and adding his estimate of the increase, the governor reports that there are about 182,551 inhabitants in the province. To a question concerning fortifications, Tryon answers: "The City of New York the Metropolis is protected by a Fort and a Range of Batteries at the Entrance of the East River or Harbour, in good order and capa- ble of mounting about one Hundred pieces of Ordnance."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 434-57.

In a report to the Earl of Dartmouth on the "present state of the Government of New York," Gov. Tryon writes: A Third Branch of the Revenue is the Excise on Spirituous Liquors. . . . This Fund is appropriated as follows—The Sum of $300 . . . is to be paid annually for Twenty years [see March 24, 1772] to the Governors of the Hospital now erecting in the City of New York [see Sept. 3, 1773] for the support of that Institution . . . .—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 325-31.

The committee of correspondence having answered the dis- patches from Boston (see June 7), "This Day they will assemble again, after which it is hoped, their Proceedings will be published, for the Information of their Constituents; The Times are critical, and with interesting Events which has occasioned the Commit- tee of Correspondence at Philadelphia to promulgate their Letter to Boston, and such other Proceedings as were judged necessary for the Satisfaction of the Public."—N. Y. Merc., June 13, 1774. Smith notes that "It appears manifest that Colles fears nothing and expects, but what he does, and that Watts De Lancey & Cramer are determined to go with him . . . These Men are Knaves or Fools—or both . . . the Liberty Boys here in the Committee of 51 drive those who came in to repress their Zeal before them, they having lately written Letters to all the supervisors intended to prepare the Way for a Non Importing and non exportation agreement; and tho' the Delanceys were at the first Committee with Design to abate the Liberty Interests, yet now swimming with the Current & taking the advantage of the Weakness of Colten, they venture to speak loud the Measures of Adm, even at Dinner in his Presence."—Wm. Smith's Diary (M.D.), IV.

Gerard Bancker, "Copper Plate Printer," announces "that the length of all the streets in the City of New York thro which Mr. Colles pro- posed to lead the Water from his Works" (see April 22) as about 14 miles. The original report, undated, is among the miscellaneous papers in the city clerk's record-room and is reproduced as Pl. 79, Col. IV. Gerard Bancker preserved, in the comptroller's office in Box 1, 1750-1815. The computation was made on the order of Recorder Watts, and Bancker's charge was for it one pound. His bill for this and other corporation work from Aug. 28, 1774, to May 15, 1775, was ordered paid May 24, 1776 (q.v.).—M. G. C., VIII: 139. See, further, July 21.

This being the day on which the harbour of Boston was "finally 15 and most unjustly deprived of its principal and rightful advan- tages" by act of parliament, a gallows, "with the Figures of 3 Men suspended, delinquent, I was inclined to believe to represent Lord North, Governor Hutchinson, and Solicitor Wedderburn, with another Figure representing the Devil, were conveyed thro' the principal Streets of the City, attended by several Thousand People, and at last burnt before the Coffee House Door." In Hutchinson's right hand were "the Boston and Plymouth Address- es, &c. Signed Names,—In Lord North's left hand the Dis- lating Bill, and the Bill for the better administering of Justice in the Province of Massachusetts's Bay,—And in Mr. Wedderburn's, the Letter of Hutchinson and Oliver to Mr. Whately—Near his inferior Majesty, on the Gallows, were these Words—Devil, do thy Office—With tarrying Population has excellent kind."—N. T. Jour., June 16 and 21, 1774; 56. Postscript to Penn. Jour., July 6, 1774.

A contributor, signing himself "N. T.," sends this letter to the printer of the Journal: "Every one acquainted with this city must applaud the Corporation for the many new and useful improvements and regulations they have made, and are continually making. Its streets are now more commodious, clean, wholesome and beautiful. Among these improvements that of affixing the names of the streets at every corner, gave the people in general as well as myself, great satisfaction . . . But the good effect of their design is in a great measure defeated, or at least delayed, by the neglect and breach of agreement of the painters who undertook to paint the letter boards. Some few of them have indeed fulfilled their agreements, or parts of them for I find, that in the street where Alderman Gautier lives, and in several of the streets adjacent, towards White-Hall and the east river, directions are put up, but the rest of the city, as far as I have seen, is hitherto wholly neglected. The reason of this delay I cannot account for, unless it be that the undertakers, think they can take greater liberty with the Corporation and the public, than with private persons, in not complying with their agreements. If this be the case, they may perhaps soon find their mistake, and that it is safer to offend one person than many."—N. T. Jour., June 16, 1774.

On Sept. 29, the common council ordered the payment of $515 for making and painting 67 street signs.—From the original voucher in comptroller's office.

In a Boston letter to the New York committee of correspondence, June 7 (g.s.), is explained as follows: "the Claimant, in giving the name of the street in which you apprehend we made a mistake we must explain by observing that the Idea of suspension of Trade we took from a Letter we wrote by your former Committee of Correspondence" (see May 15). The letter continues: "We note you are of opinion that it is most prudent to leave every resolution for the discussion of the general Congress and are pleased with your readiness to meet by your deputies either of the general Assembly (or other Deputies) in a general Congress at any time or place we shall think fit—we have to inform you that our General Assembly are now sitting at Salem, from which dates from this town we appointed a committee to report on that Subject. From the wisdom spirit & resolution of our Assembly we cannot have the least doubt they will do everything that will shew the world that they regard a union of the Colonies as of the utmost importance to the salvation of our Rights, we are in hopes to forward you their resolutions by next opp."

"P S. The Yeomanry of this Province have . . . a solemn Agreement to purchase & consume on Goods imported from Great Britailo after the first of Oct next which People eagerly subscribe a Copy of which was sent you yst last Week." A list of the names of the committee of correspondence for the tow of Boston is appended.—From a MS. copy of the letter in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

A letter from Boston to Daniel Duncombe says: "We should sooner have answered your esteemed favor had we not waited to hear the latest of our march upon our Correspondent in this and the neighbouring Colonies. This we have the pleasure to advise you is now in great forwardness throughout the New England Governments even much beyond the most sanguine of our expectations. We bear that a similar agreement is coming into the northern part of your Province. Much has been done to defeat its operation here, but it has gained greatly by opposition. This effecual Plan has originated and been thus far carried thro by the two venerable orders of men stiled mechanics and husbandmen, the strength of every community. Go on brethren, and convince the world that neither mercantile avarice nor court policy can defeat the united efforts of the good and faithful among you. We are satisfied you have your share of difficulties in the present struggle but we greatly depend upon your good sense and perseverance to ensure a favorablr issue to our present unhappy disputes with a corrupt ministry in Great Britain."

"We expect correspondence with us upon every matter of importance, which may turn up with you will greatly bene fit the common cause . . ."

"P S. It is industriously propagated here that New York will not appoint members for the ensuing Congress. We can by no means, whereas the State has not many arguments but esteemed it our duty to give you the earliest notice of it.—From a MS. copy of the letter in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Issac Sears and Alexander McDougall write thus to Samuel Adams: "Inclosed is a letter from our mutual friend Charles June Thompson of Philad. The sentiments it contains are so Salutary 20 that we cannot but Cordially approve of them. You will by the caution in it see the propriety of not Publishing it. The sentiments may be improved for the public advantage. As the time of the Meeting of the Congress we are happy to find it agrees with what we wrote you via of Rhodesland. If you have appointed any other place than that mentioned in this Letter it may easily be altered. Considering the extent of Country to be consulted on your case of the Committee of Correspondence, the most Sanguine friends to the Liberties of America could not hope for greater Unanimity nor Sympathy for you than has been expressed by every Colony who has given their Sentiments on your distressed Condition. Lord North will find to his great Mortification that the Americans are not what he said they were 'a Rope of Sand.' Be firm & prudent & a little time will effect your Salvation & a glorious deliverance to America. The burden of your People deprived of Labour by the Port-Act will be taken off by the Contributions of the other Colonies which we are confident will he abundant."—From the original letter in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Two broadsides are issued, printed on the same sheet of paper. One, addressed "To the Public" and signed "A Freemason," reads: "The late Destestation shewn by the Friends of Liberty in this City, to the vocal and arbitrary Conduct of Lord North, Governor Hutchinson and Solicitor Weddbern . . . by hanging them in Effigy [see June 15], has given me occasion to look up to Government for Places of Profit and Honour. In order to apologize to the Minister for being unable to prevent the Execution of those Effigies and to court his Favour, these Mal-Contents are beating up for Volunteers to sign a Paper, under the specious Pretence of maintaining the Peace of the City, and dismissing the Odium put on this detestable Triumvirate . . .

"As it is well known the Peace of the City has not been broken by effigying the Enemies of our Country, and some Persons who wish well to its Liberties, may incuriously be deluded to sign that Paper: This is far from being the fact. . . ."—From the "Association Paper, you countenance, if not approve the tyrannical Conduct towards America, of Lord North and his Servants—You endanger a Division . . . and encourage a Swarm of Informers to ruin our Trade with Impunity . . ."

The other broadside, addressed "To the People of New-York" and signed "A Citizen," says: "Though the Association lately set on Foot, was on Pretence of keeping the Peace of the City, yet it is evident that it has a direct Tendency to disturb that Peace and that it has to discover a direct and immediate Connection with all the Friends of Freedom, so as not to be the Made of those who are endeavouring to destroy, and ready to share the Plunder of our Country. Consider, that by signing the Association Paper, you countenance, if not approve the tyrannical Conduct towards America, of Lord North and his Servant—You endanger a Division . . . and encourage a Swarm of Informers to ruin our Trade with Impunity . . ."

THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

Wednesday; and from thence to set off every Thursday morning at 6 o'clock, from John Tuttle's, at the North River Ferry, and lodge at Capt. Dickenson's, in Morris Town, that night, and set out from thence for Black River next morning, and take the same route back as before described.—"N. Y. Merc., June 20, 1774.

It is ordered that the dock belonging to this Corporation at the North River [see April 10, 1773] be repaired as soon as conveniently he can."—M. C. C., VIII: 37.

Entries in the Minutes which follow seem to show that an enlargement or extension of the dock accompanied the repairs. A total expenditure of £1,500 was allowed during the last quarter of about eight months ending May 2, 1775, "for the Corporation's Dock and wharf at the North River."—Ibid., VIII: 50, 51, 58, 62, 67, 91.

"It was not until just before the Revolution that a landing known as the 'Corporation Dock' was completed. Excepting the Great Dock, the Albany Pier, and the Corporation Dock, all other wharves owned by the city were not worthy of the name, as they were nothing more than mere landings, used mainly by the small boats which brought food supplies to the municipal markets. In the Montgomery Ward the corporation possessed two slips, Beekman's and Burling's. In front of the Fly and the Counties market it had built two other landings; and it owned a fifth known as the 'Old Slip.'"—Peterson & Edward, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 535-54.

Gerard Bancker surveys the "Ground contiguous to the Poor House Barn's plan of this ground (in box A-B, folder 45, in Rockefeller Pub. Library) shows the exact location of the liberty pole erected on Feb. 6, 1776 (q.v. for all available information regarding location of this pole). It is reproduced on Pl. 40, Vol. IV. See also July 14, 1770.

John Holt discards the king's arms as the head-piece of his paper, and substitutes therefor the device of a snake cut in pieces. Each part is marked with the initials of one of the colonies, and underneath the serpent is the motto "Unite or Die." This new design is intended to represent the disjointed state of the colonies. Holt continued to use it until Dec. 15 (q.v.).—N. Y. Journ., June 23 through Dec. 8, 1774, Wilson, Misc. Hist. City of N. Y., IV: 137.

It was used also in the Penn. Journ. from July 27, 1774, to Oct. 18, 1775.

The following letter is written by the committee of correspondence appointed by the assembly of New York (see Jan 20) to the committee of correspondence of Connecticut: "We have your letter of the 4th before us, enclosing the resolves of your Assembly, . . . and we agree with you, that at this alarming juncture, a general Congress of Deputies from the several Colonies would be a very expedient and salutary measure; such a Congress, consisting of the most wise, discreet, prudent, and useful members, would, we conceive, be the best means under Providence, of restoring that peace and harmony between Great Britain and her Colonies, which is the surest foundation of happiness to both. . . . We are sorry therefore, that we are not sufficiently empowered to take any steps in relation to this salutary a measure; for we are a Committee of Correspondence only, and cannot consistently with good order and propriety interfere in a matter of such importance, without the appointment and concurrence of our whole House of Representatives [Connecticut's lower house had passed resolutions "relative to their rights and privileges"]. After what has been said, it would be needless to mention anything about the places of meeting, only this, that if the other Colonies, who may have authority for so doing, should meet in Congress, in, or near this city, we shall most gladly and willingly assist with our advice, &c., if necessary, which, circumstanced as we are at present, is all we are enabled to do.

"We should be glad however to know before we come to any final determination on this matter, what steps will be taken by the other Colonies, who are in the same situation with us, by not having as an opportunity of knowing the sentiments of their Houses of Representatives; when the question of a Congress is brought to be adopted by them, shall be communicated to us, we shall be better able to judge what plan will be most likely to procure a redress of our present grievances, and promote the union and prosperity of the mother country and the Colonies."—Am. Arch., I: 306.

At a meeting of the committee of correspondence, on motion of Alexander McDougall, the question of appointing delegates to the Philadelphia congress was referred to the committee of correspondence. The motion was laid on the table; but a motion to appoint five persons as delegates to be submitted to the public for their
The meeting in the Fields on July 6 (p. v.) preceded over by McDougall, seems to have forestalled the regularly called meeting at the city hall for July 7 (see July 4). The newspapers fail to report such a meeting, but the minutes of the committee of 51 record that a number of citizens attended and it was unanimously agreed that this Committee appoint a Committee of their body to attend with the Committee from the Mechanics at Mr. Francis's... in order to appoint two or more persons in each Ward... to take with them a list of the five persons nominated by this Committee [see July 4], and also a list of the five persons nominated by the Committee of Mechanics [see July 5] as Delegates to the proposed Congress; and exhibit to the freeholders, freemen and such of the inhabitants who pay taxes, both lists, leaving it to their election to sign either. In the evening, the committee of 51 complied with this decision of the inhabitants, and then, having heard of the handbills of July 5 (p. v.), and of the meeting on July 6 (p. v.), resolved, on the motion of John Thurman, "that this Committee disavow all such proceedings evidently calculated to throw an odium on this Committee, and to create groundless jealousies and suspicions of their conduct as well as disunion among our fellow-citizens." A committee is thereupon appointed "to draw and report... a set of Resolutions to be proposed to the city, expressing their sense of the Boston Port Act, and our concurrence with such of the neighbouring Colonies as have declared what may be proper to be done for the relief of the town of Boston, and the redress of American grievances."—Am. Arch., I: 318-43.

"Politics is the Only Business we mind at present & that is as Crooked as Dicks Hatband & we seem but too much Divided in Parties."—From "Extracts from the Letter Books of John Thurman, Jr., in Hist. Mag.," July 14, 1774. To Mrs. Judge: "Ordered that the Street leading from the Broad way between Trinity Church and the Parsonage House be for the future called by the name of Auchmury Street."—Trin. Min. (M.S.). For the cession of this and other streets to the city, see Sept. 18, 1761. Auchmury St. came to be called by its present name, Rector St., as early as 1791.—M. G. C. (1782-1851). I: 650. See Vol. III, p. 1008.

Frederick Bradieos offers a reward for the return of an apprentice to him "at Spring Gardens New-York."—N. Y. Jour., July 7, 1774. See Massachus. "A Moderate Man" addresses the "Freeborn Citizens of New York" on the subject of the resolutions entered into on July 6 (p. v.). He approves of these, but admits that "the manner in which they were introduced to public view... had a tendency to cast an odium upon the Committee of Correspondence, to cause groundless jealousies and suspicions of their conduct and to create a disunion among the citizens in general." The members who left the committee of 51 (see July 7) are urged to resume their seats. The situation is described thus: "one party Radical has ushered forth a set of spirited Resolves [see July 6]; the other [conservative] do not object to them, considered in themselves, but have appointed a Committee to draw up another set of Resolves [see July 7], which I doubt not they intend shall be introduced in such a manner as shall be unexceptionable; and if these Resolves should happen to be set on as high a key as the others, I believe Lord North will find it unanswerable to a party who is not afraid to bear his bawser."—From a broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

"Agricola" issues an answer to the broadside of July 11 (p. v.). "It must be a lame cause," he says, "that will admit of such lame advocates. When the blind lead the blind, no wonder they both fall into the ditch."—Empire July 16, 1774, I: 115. "These persons are for a way in which those who left the committee of 51 [see July 7] can return to take their election, but even then "there must be an humiliation, an acknowledgment of their errors, and a promise to do so no more." He hopes the "Moderate Man" will consider his next subject a little more carefully, and "not slopber it over in such a slovenly way as you have done the last."—Ibid.

The members of the committee of correspondence who were appointed to draw up a set of resolutions (see July 7) present their 1774 July

The "resolves" are ordered to be printed and distributed in time for the consideration of the inhabitants, who are requested to meet at the Coffee House, on July 19, to decide upon them. At the same time the people are to vote upon the nominees for delegates.—4 Am. Arch., I: 315; N. T. Merc., July 18, 1774.
See Pl. 41, Vol. IV.

The differences and contentions among the local commitee of correspondence caused considerable uneasiness in Boston is evidenced by the following letter from there, endorsed as "passed unanimously:"

"The continued Silence of the respectable Committee of New York from June 7 [p. 9] at this important time proves no less to us than those which are experienced by a Man in Distress who perhaps too jealously" thinks himself deserted by his Friend—these have been heightened by frequent whispering of some Paragraphs of Letters received from particular Gentlemen of your Committee nay some Letters as such have been publish'd in our Papers containing Sentiments which have not appeared in y' former Letters to us. Copies of some of our Letters have been said to be sent this Way b. c. but not to enumerate these Matters Gentlemen be assured this Committee would at all times gratefully have received any Advice from your Committee or from any private Gentleman of it.

"But to turn your Views to a larger Sphere, We congratulate you Gentlemen on that General Unio which spreads its beneficent Influence thro' North America, May Heaven bless the intended Congress, may their Wise & righteous Determination persuade the King that North Americans are yet his loyal worthy & from Sacred motives. Many times repeat to them, thron when honest Industry shall enjoy the Bounty of Heaven unmolested."—From a copy of the letter in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

An "Inhabitant" writes to the printer of the Mercury: "The Difficulty in obtaining small Change in this City at present, is most sensibly felt by all Persons in Trade; and what every Inhabitant would wish to see removed. To effect which, a number of small Bills issued by the Corporation, might answer all the salutary Purposes required. Our Friends in Pennsylvania have adopted this Measure with Success, and many good Consequences have resulted from it."—N. T. Merc., July 18, 1774.

A meeting of citizens is held at the Coffee House, "for the pur-purpose of auditing the resolves which had been prepared by the Committee of Correspondence [see July 15]; and also respecting the nomination of Delegates to the Grand Congress."—Rivington's Gazette, July 21, 1774. Smith says of this meeting: "The Town met at the Call of the Committee of 51 to choose Delegates for the Congress, & approve certain pnsilaneous Resolves. Scott made a Speech & to the Confusion of the Committee, their proposed Resolves were rejected—a new Committee appointed for the Purpose and composed to consist of 77. This Committee was composed of five conservative and ten radicals.—N. T. Merc., July 25, 1774; cf. A. Am. Arch., I: 317 (footnote). They were to draw up and report "a set of constitutional Resolves, declarative of the rights of the British subjects in America, and expressive of th' that the differences of this city and county of the late parliamentary measures respecting these Colonies."—Penn. Jour., July 27, 1774.

No decisive action in the matter of delegates to the general congress was taken at this meeting. At the meeting of the committee of correspondence in the evening, it was stated that, "as only a small proportion of the citizens attended the meeting at the Coffee House to signify their sense of same, and the sentiments of the majority still remaining uncertain:

"Therefore, to remove all doubts and uneasiness on that head, it is ordered, that certain amendments be made to the said resolves [see resolutions 25, 35, and 71], and that two or more persons be appointed to take the said to take the sense of the freethinkers, men, and such others who pay taxes, respecting the said resolves so amended; as also the Delegates nominated by this Committee to attend the Congress." It is also ordered that the resolutions be published. On motion of John Jay, a committee is appointed to make a Parley of the people of the town of Boston, and ways and means for their relief into consideration; and also a committee to apply to the committee of mechanics, and "request them to appoint certain persons of their body to go round the Wards to take the sense of the inhabitants on the matters above mentioned."

The committee appointed at the meeting at the Coffee House (see July 10) meets to draw up a set of resolutions. The conservative members, Isaac Low, Henry Remsen, John Moore, and John Jay, decline to serve on the committee, as they consider their election "too irregular to assume any authority in consequence of it to draw up Resolves for the town; especially as the nomination of this Committee seems to cast an invisible reflection on the Commitee of Correspondence, and manifestly tending to divide the citizens into factions and parties." However, the remaining members agree upon resolutions declaring, in general, (1) their allegiance to the king (4) their right to exemption from all taxes not imposed by themselves or their representatives; (5) the successive depositions of the party of the old leaders"; (6) the increasent inas express actions of power; (7) the Boston Port Bill, "unversal of every idea of Freedom;" (8) the proposed congress, "highly expedient," and (9) their approbation of the attempts to re-clude the distress of the people of Boston. In addition to agreeing upon these resolutions, the committee calls for a meeting of the inhabitants on July 25 (p. v.).—N. T. Merc., July 25, 1774. A broadsides in the N. Y. Pub. Library gives an account of this meeting.

In a letter to the Earl of Dartmouth, Gen. Gage says: "The "secesn party at New York is rooted."—Am. Arch., I: 615.

A public vendee is advertised for this day, at the Merchants' Coffee House, of the "House and lot of ground, lying near the old City-Hall in Wall-Street, late the property of George Gissing, deceased, formerly known by the name of Brock's tavern, and at the time in possession of Mr. Gushing, Hair-Dresser. The house it 3 stories high has 7 fire places, and may be had for 200£."—N. T. Jour., June 30, 1774. Later, it was announced that the house would be sold at private sale on Aug. 9.—N. T. Y., Aug. 8, 1774. For a history of Brock's Tavern, which had existed since 1758, and probably earlier, see 1758. In January, 1777, Alexander Dove seems to have been temporarily in occupation of this old tavern where he offered "Fine Canteens" for sale (N. T. Merc., Jan. 6, 1777), but, by Oct. 17 (p. 53), as "Burrus's Tavern," it was being used as a meeting-place of loyalists. In February, 1778, the house was again offered for sale. The newspaper advertisement described it as "a large corner house at the upper end of Wall-street, opposite the Oldest Presbyterian Meeting, for many years past a noted tavern."—Ibid., Feb. 16, 1778.

"The Proposal of Christopher Colles heretofore referred to this Board [see Apr. 21], respecting the Building of a Reservoir and the Conveyance of Fresh Water thro' the several Streets, Lanes and Alleys of this City and the Ex pense that will attend the said Undertaking, being this Day taken into Consideration, it was moved that the same be Carried into Execution." After some debate, the motion was carried by a vote of eight to two. The Board "then proceeded to order Mr. Colles and Mr. K. Savage to take a View of this city and county of the late parliamentary measures respecting these Colonies."—Penn. Jour., July 27, 1774.

As this price was considered "reasonable," it was ordered "that the same be purchased for the Purposes above mentioned" (see Aug. 8)—M. C. C., VIII: 49-41. Commenting on this action, the Mercury said the freethinkers of Wall-street would be "thronged through every Street and Lane in this City, with a perpendicular Conduit Pipe at every Hundred yards, at which Water may be drawn at any Time of the Day or Night, and in case of Fire, each Conduit pipe will be so contrived as to communicate with the corresponding each of the houses, and the Supply of Water may be had in that calamitous Situation."—N. T. Y., Aug. 1, 1774. See also N. T. Jour., July 28, 1774. The reservoir was erected on the east side of Broadway, between Franklin and White Sts.—See Landmark Map Red. Key, III: 28. The transports arrive in New York from Boston and take on "Ordnance, and a Provision of Military Stores, among which are 500 Barrels of Gun-Powder." It is rumoured that "the Royal Welch Fusiliers [see March 1] now here, are to embark this week on board the said Transports [see July 2], with a Detachment of the Trinidad Artillery [see July 16], and to sail directly for Bosto, N. E. Mar. 21, 1774.

The common council orders that a grant be made to Henry, John, Mary, and Rachel, Cruger for the water lot "situate in the East Ward of this City, opposite to their Lot of Ground fronting Countess Key Slip, they paying three Shillings per Foot extending the Piers, and making a good and sufficient Stairs at the Extreme thereof to be maintained and repaired by them their Heirs & Assigns for ever."—M. C. V., VIII: 42.

The common council contributes $40 "towards purchasing a Lot for enlarging & continuing Hague Street" [see Nov. 9, 1773.—M. C. V., VIII: 42.

An advertisement reads: "A French Boarding-School. Mrs. Cosani, (Lately from London,) Purposes to open a Boarding-School, to educate, or to complete the education of young Ladies; who will be taught the English, French, and Italian languages, grammar, reading, writing, and speaking, also one language to the other.—Geography, with a knowledge of history,—to draw and paint upon silks, embroidery, tambour, Dresden, plain work, blond lace, and several other genteel and fashionable works.—A particular attention will be paid to the morals and conduct of the ladies in every particular which may prove beneficial to themselves, and satisfactory to their parents [Ladies]. Ladies will be boarded and educated at forty pounds a year.

"Day scholars will be taken.—There will be masters for music, dancing and writing.

Wall-Street, New-York.—[Rivington's Gazette, July 21, 1774. A similar school has been opened in New York the year before (see April 21, 1773).

"Democritus" criticises and ridicules, in a broadside, the resolutions drawn up by the new committee (see July 20). He is "determined to plant himself at a Corner, and laugh at every one that appears at the City-Hall on Monday next" (July 25).—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

A Citizen" writes a caustic letter to "John M. S. ————" (Scott), assailing his character, denouncing him as an enemy to the cause of liberty, and criticising in the most adverse manner his speech at the City-Hall on July 19 (p. n.). The letter says in part, "To keep alive the Fire of Party Spirit (the Darling Object of your constant Pursuit) which was nearly being extinguished, you attempted to lessen the Importance of the City Committee, by endeavouring to cast an Odium on their Conduct. And how was it attempted? By asserting, that their Power extended not to the formation of Committees?—or, by insinuating that they had determined to palm them on the Town..."

"Conviction must here stare you in the Face, and was [sic] you not Callous to the keen Sting of Remorse, you would fly from a City, where every Inhabitant will tell you, that it was the united Voice of each of them, which called on the Committee for Resolves; and where every Citizen will declare... that when the Committee had formed Resolves, they were dispersed abroad, and a Week allowed to the People in order to consider of their Propriety, or to make such Alterations, as in their Wisdom might seem meet."

This letter is followed by an address to "The Inhabitants of the City and County of New-York," insinuating, as delegates to the congress, Isaac Low, John Alsop, John Jay, Philip Livingston, and James Duane, and urging their support at the meeting on Monday (see July 25). It is signed by "A Son of Liberty."—From the broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

At the meeting of the inhabitants at the city hall (see July 20) no action is taken.—N. Y. Merc., Aug. 1, 1774. This evening, on motion of Henry Remsen, the committee of 51 orders "that a poll be opened... in each Ward in this city, on... the 28th instant (p. n.)... to elect five Deputies [for nominees, see June 21, 1774] by the City and County of New-York, to meet in Congress, at Philadelphia."—Am. Arch., I: 318.

"An Extract of a Letter from London, by Way of Philadelphia, to a Gentleman in this City" is issued in a broadside. This states: "The unhappy Disputes which at present subsist between Great Britain and America, fill our Minds with melancholy Reflections, July as the Ministry here have adopted very severe Measures with respect..."—Am. Arch., I: 318.

We are credibly informed that General Gage told Lord North, that he knew many Persons of Consequence in New York, who could easily be brought over to sell their Privileges for a Pension from the Crown...

"We are informed here, that it is the Purpose of Lord North, to offer one of your Printers, Five Hundred Pounds Inducement to undertake and promote Ministerial Measures." In consequence of this letter, the friends of liberty are asked "vigilantly to observe who are those Persons spoken of in the foregoing Extract, and what Printer appears to promote Ministerial Measures, and endeavours to suppress Exertions in Favour of the Liberties of this Country."—From a broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

"An honest American" issues a broadside addressed "To the respectable Public." It urges the immediate election of delegates to the congress and suggests two methods (subscription and poll ing) of choosing them by popular vote. In the writer's opinion, "The Resolves are not material; whether we approve of the one Set or the other, is of no Consequence; but "a Reconciliation of Parties... is really essential, in order to procure a proper Delegation, and convince the Enemies of America we are not to be cajoled either by their Arguments, Promises or Threats."—From a broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

The Union Library Society (see April 11) removes to the city hall.—N. Y. Jour., July 28, 1774. The library was formerly "at the House of Captain John Berrien at Burling's Slip" (see June 7, 1772.)

The committee of mechanics (radicals) writes to the delegates nominated by the committee of 51: "As you are upon the opinion as Delegates to represent this city and county... at the proposed Congress, in order to avoid the inconveniences which may arise from contested elections, we are requested as a Committee from a number of citizens to ask you, whether on your part you will engage to use your utmost endeavours at the proposed Congress, that an agreement not to import goods from Great Britain until the American grievances be redressed, be entered into by the Colonies there to be represented. If you will so engage, the body by whom we are nominated will support you, if not, that body have a set of candidates who will comply with the proposed engagement." On July 25, Philip Livingston, Isaac Low, John Alsop, and John Jay sent this answer to the radical leaders: "Should we become your Delegates, we beg leave to assure you that we will use our utmost endeavours to carry every measure into execution..."—Am. Arch., I: 318.

In consequence of this agreement, a resolution to the effect that a general non-importation agreement, faithfully observed, would prove the most efficacious means to procure a redress of our grievances..." Satisfied with this reply, the radical party inored all the nominees of the conservatives (see July 4)—Am. Arch., I: 318. The agreement, involving only the opinion that a general non-importation agreement, faithfully observed, would prove the most efficacious means to procure a redress of our grievances..." Satisfied with this reply, the radical party inored all the nominees of the conservatives (see July 4)—Am. Arch., I: 318.

The Royal Artillery (see July 21) embarks on the "Brigantine Transport," which is carrying "a Quantity of Ordnance, Stores, &c." to Boston. On this and the following days several detachments of "his Majesty's 47th Regiment" arrive in New York from their quarters at Amboy, Brunswick, and Elizabeth-Town.—N. Y. Merc., Aug. 1, 1774.

"Ehrenzer Snuffie" issues fifteen resolutions purporting to have been drawn up at a meeting of the "True Sons of Liberty." These ridicule the calling of a general congress, the non-importation agreements, and the proceedings of the committee of correspondence in general.—From a broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

The "Royal Regiment of Welch Fusiliers" embarks on board the three transports which arrived here on July 21 (p. n.). "The Harmony which, ever since their Arrival in New York, has subsisted betwixt the Citizens and this very respectable Corps of his Majesty's Troops, cannot be exceeded in the Chronicles of any Other Garrison."—N. Y. Merc., Aug. 1, 1774.

Philip Livingston, Isaac Low, John Jay, John Alsop, and James Duane are unanimously elected delegates to the congress at Phila- delphia.—Am. Arch., I: 318. They had been nominated by the committee of 51 on July 4 (p. n.).

Visiting New York at this time while on a tour through the northern colonies, Patrick M'Robert writes: "On both sides of... the harbour, the woods, country houses, orchards, and fields of..."
Indian corn, form at this season of the year a beautiful prospect. There is very good water up to New York, the harbour is spacious and large, with many convenient docks or quays, with storehouses upon them for vessels of any burden to lie always aloft along side the city. Here are at present about 300 sail in shipping. They carry on an extensive trade from this port to Britain, Ireland, Holland, France, Spain, Portugal, up the Mediterranean, the West Indies, Spanish Main, as well as to the other colonies. Their exports are chiefly wheat, flour, Indian corn, indigo, flaxseed, pork and pearl ashes, fish, oil, pork, iron, timber, lumber, wax, and live cattle to the West Indies. Their imports are from Britain all kinds of cloth, linen and woven, wrought iron, shoes, stockings, &c. From Holland, they have European and East India goods; from France, Spain and Portugal, wines, spirits, fruits, silk, and other articles of luxury; from the Spanish Main, they have homogen, mahogany, some indigo and dollars; from the West Indies, they have sugar, rum and molasses. Another considerable article of their export is built vessels, a good many of which are now on the stocks at this port, which they generally load with their own produce, and carry to some market where they sell both ship and cargo. They have great choice of wood in their ship-yards. Their upper timbers they make all of cedar, which they prefer to oak. They are very nice in the workmanship of ship-building here, and use a great deal of ornament and painting about the vessel.

... The city is large, and contains a great many neat buildings. The publick buildings, and places of worship, are generally very neat, and well finished, if not elegant. The college, tho' only one third of the plan is compleat, makes a fine appearance, on one of the finest situations perhaps of any college in the world. Here are taught divinity, mathematics, the practice and theory of medicine, chemistry, surgery, and materia medica. One circumstance I think is a little unlucky, the entrance to this college is thro' one of the streets where the most noted prostitutes live. This is certainly a temptation to the youth that have occasion to pass so often the publick.

... The new hospital (this building was burnt in February 1774, [error for Feb. 28, 1775, p. 9.], when almost finished; however, the inhabitants set about repairing it again directly;) tho' not quite finished is another fine building upon the same plan as the Royal Infirmary at Edinburgh.

... They have three English churches, three Presbyterians, two Dutch Lutherians, two Dutch Calvinists, all neat and well finished buildings, besides a French church, an Anabaptist, a Metliodist, a Quaker meeting, a Moravian church, and a Jews synagogue. There are many other fine buildings belonging to private gentlemen and merchants; but the streets are in general ill paved, irregular, and too narrow. There are four market places, all well supplied.

... They are pretty well supplied with fresh water from pumps sunk at convenient distances in the streets. Their tea water they obtained in carriages brought in carriages from the suburbs of the city; but they are now erecting a fire engine for raising the spring into a reservoir, from whence, by pipes, they can convey it to any part of the city. They are pretty well guarded against accidents from fire, by obliging every citizen to register their house, and for one shilling a year yearly, to have them swept once a month. They have also a number of engines kept at convenient distances: to each of these is appointed a captain, and a certain number of men. And when a fire happens, a premium is always allowed to the captain and his men who can first make their engines on fire. By this provision, and by the proper disposition of the engines, when it does happen, it is seldom allowed to spread farther than the house it breaks out in.

... Near the fort is an equestrian statue of king George the III. upon an elegant pedestal in the middle of a fine green rail’d in with iron. At the crossing of two public streets are erected a marble statue of lord Chatham erected by the citizens in gratitude for his strenuous opposition to the stamp act in 1766. They have several large roperies, distilleries, breweries, and a large iron work carried on here. They have plenty of mechanical works, of all kinds, by which their people are employed. They have the best of husbandry, and by the proper disposition of the engines, when it does happen, it is seldom allowed to spread farther than the house it breaks out in.

... In another letter, dated Aug. 18, he says, in part: "Labourers have their three and four shillings a day for New York; but at present they seem rather overstocked, owing to the arrival of so many adventurers from Britain and Ireland; they tell me that no less than twenty two vessels have arrived at New York within a week, all passengers from streets from the different parts of the United States. They have not yet had time to give due attention to the workmen or room and employ for them in the back countries, where many of them are gone. "All necessaries of life are plenty, and reasonable; For example, beef at four and five pence the pound; good mutton the same; a good hen at a shilling, and pork and veal in proportion; butter sixteen pence the pound; the best flower, seventeen shillings the hundred weight; West India rum from three shillings and six pence, and three and nine pence the gallon. Rum distilled here, at two and six pence the gallon; beer, and all sorts of wines, about the same prices at ports; and fire seldom happens; the only dear drink is London porter, which is two shillings the bottle. Observe, that in all the above rates and prices, I speak of the currency of the country, which is in proportion as seven pence sterling to a shilling. "The most rare coins here in gold are the Johannes, half and quarter; the moidore, with some guineas; in silver, the Spanish dollar, the half, quarter, and eighth of a dollar, which last is their shilling. They have also some British shillings circulating. Their market of meat and butter must this season of the year be overstocked; you may, for nothing, have for nothing, that is made with you in Britain is made to as great perfection here. The inhabitants are in general brisk and lively, kind to strangers, dress very gay; the fair sex are in general handsome, and said to be very obsequious. Above 500 ladies of pleasure keep lodgings contiguous within the consecrated liberties of St. Paul’s. This part of the city belongs to the church, and has thence obtained the name of the Holy Ground. Here all the prostitutes reside, among whom are many fine well dressed women, and it is remarkable that they live in much greater cordiality one with another than any neses of that kind do in Britain or Ireland. I am told by eye to be buried of 300 sailors who died here in shipping. They carry on an extensive trade from this port to Britain, Ireland, Holland, France, Spain, Portugal, up the Mediterranian, the West Indies, Spanish Main, as well as to the other colonies. Their exports are chiefly wheat, flour, Indian corn, indigo, flaxseed, pork and pearl ashes, fish, oil, pork, iron, timber, lumber, wax, and live cattle to the West Indies. At the crossing of two public streets are erected a marble statue of lord Chatham erected by the citizens in gratitude for his strenuous opposition to the stamp act in 1766. They have several large roperies, distilleries, breweries, and a large iron work carried on here. They have plenty of mechanical works, of all kinds, by which their people are employed. They have the best of husbandry, and by the proper disposition of the engines, when it does happen, it is seldom allowed to spread farther than the house it breaks out in.
A letter of this date to the "Committee of Correspondence in Boston," which is "Signed by Order and in Behalf of the Committee of Mechanics. Daniel Dunsmoor Chairman," is as follows:

"We received your Favours of the 18th ultimo [June 18 (v.)], and take the Information which you give us, of the invidious Proceedings of the High-order, towards our City, without our consent; very kindly; and also think ourselves happy in your Determination not to credit such Reports, without better Proof than the Declaration of our mutual Enemies, who are endeavouring to raise Jealousies, and sow Discord between the neighbouring Colonies.

We have now to inform you, that the Committee of Correspondence, for this City, have nominated, sometime since, five Gentlemen, out of their Body, for the Purpose of meeting the Congress [see July 4]; these were held up to the City for their Approbation, two of whom were objected to by the Committee of Mechanics, and two others nominated in their Room [see July 5]. The Matter remain'd in Suspense for some time; at length the twenty seventh of last Month was appointed to decide the Dispute by an Election; but, on the Morning of the same Day, a Conference being had with the Gentlemen nominated by the aforesaid Committee, and their political Principles being understood to be such as were adverse to the Colony, the Committee of this City, after full Disputes immediately subsided; and the People assembled in the different Wards, to give their united Voices for the five Gentlemen first nominated, viz. Messrs. Philip Livingston, Isaac Low, James Duane, John Jay, and John Aisop Esquires, who were accordingly appointed for the City and County, without any Manner of Opposition [see July 28].

... The Committee of Correspondence here, have taken the Poor of Your Town under Consideration, and nominated several Members of their Body, to make Report of Ways and Means for their Relief; and, as the Gentlemen of New York have never been wanting in the Principles of Humanity and Benevolence we doubt not, but such Contributions will be raised, from all Ranks and Orders of Men among us; as will, when join'd with the generous Donations of the neighbouring Colonies, greatly alleviate the Distresses of the Families of every worthy Mechanick, honest Tar, and industrious Labourer, among you, who are now, like Messrs. sacrificing their all to the common Cause of American Liberty.

We are pleased to hear of the Firmness of the Mechanicks and Husbandmen among you; but notwithstanding this, we are sorry to find that their Characters should in any Degree be raised by the Backwardness and Avarice of your Merchants. Happy for us, that is not the Case in New York, we have indeed had Divisions and Disputes; but these have not arisen from a Supposition that our Liberties were not worth contending for, or that you should be left to fall Victims to the merciless Hand of arbitrary Power—no, by no Means; but rather that those who should lead a worthy, honorable and laudable Enterprise. However, we now seem to be convinced of the honest Intentions of each others Hearts, our Divisions have subsided, and we are cemented, in one firm Body, and expect that the Province of New York will be second to none, in this noble, generous and manly Struggle for American Liberty."—From original in N. A prospectus of the forthcoming publication of important state papers appears in the Journal: "When the conduct of individuals in a community is such, as to attract public attention, others are very naturally led to many inquiries about them; so when civil states rise into importance, even their earliest history becomes the object of speculation ... many who have but little or no connection with the British colonies in America, are now prying into the story of their rise and progress, while others wish for a farther acquaintance with them. The common council agrees to purchase the northerly part of the ground belonging to Augustus and Frederick van Cortlandt at the rate of £500 per acre for the purpose of building a reservoir (see July 21), "provided that upon Sinking a Well there, the Water shall be found of a good Quality, otherwise this Board to fill up the same at their own Expence."—M. C. C., VIII: 43. See Aug. 25.

The managers of the bridewell lottery are directed to meet the board on August 13, "at the House of Abraham De la Montañia's And to bring with them a true State of their Accounts respecting the said Lottery."—M. C. C., VIII: 43. Plans for the building were advertised for on Nov. 15 (v. w.). Montagné's tavern was at the present 257-259 Broadway.

The common council directs that the law for better regulating the public markets, which has been proved at this period to be defective, and copies "stuck up at the Fly-Market, as a Notification to the Butchers, Country Folks and others."—M. C. C., VIII: 45.

The law prohibits butchers from selling meat in the "Market at Counsels-Slip" because this market is "for the better accommodating of the Country People who come to this City with Provision for Sale, and those who buy in the Market, and may purchase and sell there, that, as the practice of slaughtering and dressing sheep, lambs, and calves in the public markets "occasions Filth, and is offensive to the People in the Neighborhood," a fine of 10 shillings be imposed for every such offence committed after Aug. 15.—From an original broadside (dated Aug. 11, 1777). The water of the well sunk in the Van Cortlandts' land (Aug. 1774), having been tested and found "to be of a very good Qualit[], the common council decides to adhere to "their former Reso-

†n of carrying the Proposal of Christopher Colles into Execution [see July 21] and also of Issuing Notes to the Value of £250."

The form of the notes and their denominations are next agreed upon, and they are opened, set (see July 15, 1774), and Christopher Colles is directed "to enlarge the said Well & prosecute the under-

Peter Curtenius, a member of the committee appointed on July 19 (q.v.), to take into consideration ways and means of helping the poor, reported to the Congress of the following: "Inclosed is a letter Directed to your Committee which please to let such members read as you can trust." The enclosure is as follows:

By a paragraph in Rivington's paper which you have ineluded, it appears that you intend to have your streets with the money arising from the cargo of Rice rece'd from S. Carolina. If so it does not answer the Intention for which it was given, & if not publicly contradicted it will put an entire stop to the subscription here as well as elsewhere. . . . It behoves you therefore publicly to disavow it & let your disapproval be so authenticated that it may prosecute all others, for your well known (q.v.), a year since has many Enemies in this City who Improve on every report that is spread to your disadvantage—

"If your Streets are to be paved, & it is resolved on by your Committee to pay the whole expence out of the charity or out of such a fund which may arise by the sinking for instance, & I have put to stop it at all events, for the reasons mention'd above, & in order to set things right I would beg leave to suggest a few hints to you which if put into execution I dare say would be of service & Encourage many to subscribe freely—as to paving streets, I suppose these matters are regulated in your town much in the same way they are here, which is that every man by law is obliged to pave the breadth of his house or Lott as far as the gutter or middle of the street, supposing this to be the case I would have you employ a number of men at the usual daily wages, & contract with every owner of a house at a certain price the square yard, & it should be 1 or 2 or 3 yards under the common price, & whatever the loss is let it come out of the charity, If you think this would be too great a sinking fund employ your ship Carpenters to build ships & sell them, & with that money go on Again, If your house car-

Carpenters & masons are out of Employment, & you have any public or private buildings going on contract for them 5 or 6 £20 under price, & employ as many hands as you can to keep them in a good humour If your blacksmitius want work purchase Rod Iron, & set them at work to make nails, this is an article which will be much wanting if we should come into a nonimportation agreement, & will sell to a profit, If you the home of Mr. Mead, a smith & very good one but not very polite. Scott had an "elegant seat there, with Hudson's River just behind his house, and a rural prospect all around him." This seat, later known as "The Hermitage," is well shown on Pi. 41, Vol. I. It stood in (modern) West 43d St., between Eighth and Ninth Aves. Adams seems to have been impressed by the furnishings of the house. He says: "We sat in a fine airy entry till called into a front room to breakfast: A more elegant breakfast I never saw—rich plate, a very large silver coffee-pot, a very large silver tea-pot, napkins of the very finest materials, toast and bread and butter in great perfection."

During the following days, they dined and conferred with all the well-known men, and saw more of the city. They went upon the new Dutch church steeple, visited Trinity Church and St. Paul's ("A new building, which cost eighteen thousand pounds, York money"), were shown through the college, and dined "in the Exchange Chamber, at the invitation of the Committee of Correspondence." On Aug. 26, the delegates went to see "the city hall, the chamber where the Supreme Court sits, and that where the Mayor and Recorder sit." Afterwards they inspected the North River, which, in Adam's opinion, "was a much more elegant building than Saint Paul's." At noon o'clock, they had breakfast at Paulus Hook Ferry to New Jersey, then Hackensack Ferry, then Newark Ferry, and dined at Elizabeth-town. After dinner they rode 20 miles, crossed the Brunswick ferry into the city of Brus-wick, and lodged there for the night. Thence they travelled by carriage and ferry to Princeton, took the turnpike of the New River, and then by carriage and ferry to Bristol, Frankfort, and Philadelphia.—Works of John Adams, II: 345-57.

Extract of a Letter From Philadelphia,
To a Gentleman in this City, dated the 6th inst.

YESTERDAY evening Dr. FRANKLIN arrived here from London in six weeks, which he left the 20th of March; which has given great joy to this town, for we have not seen him in ten years. But the Ministry, nothing but submission will satisfy them, they expect little or no opposition will be made to their troops, those that are now coming are for New York, where it is expected they will be received with cordiality. As near as we can learn there are about four thousand troops coming in this fleet, the men of war and transports are in a great measure loaded with dry goods, to supply New York, and the country round it, agents are coming over with them. Dr. Franklin is highly pleased to find us arming and preparing for the worst events, he thinks nothing else can save us from the most abject slavery and destruction, at the same time encourages us to believe a spirited opposition will be the means of our salvation. The Ministry are alarmed at every opposition, and lifted up again at every thing which appears the least in their favour, every letter and every paper from hence are read by them.

James Duane, Philip Livingston, and John Alop are conducted, in 1774, in like manner, from the Coffee House to the "Royal Exchange," where James Duane, "in a very affronting manner," thanked the worthy Inhabitants for the Honour they had conferred upon them, declaring for his own Part, and he had it in command from the whole of his Brother Delegates to acquaint them, that Nothing in their Power should be wanting to relieve this once happy, but now aggrieved Country. The provincial council at New York orders that military aid be called against the Bennington mob, on complaint of Benjamin Hough and others.—Cal. Coun. Min., 502. See Sept. 29.

Gen. Gage, writing from Boston to the Earl of Dartmouth about conditions in New York, says: "By all accounts, everything there is quiet; the people in general moderate and well affected to all measures but taxation."—Am. Arch., I: 768.

A letter from London to New York states: "Your Committee disputes have been published in all the papers, over and over, and have been disadvantageous to your cause. Lord Chatham, and all your friends, are anxious to promote your interests, but your unanimity, and the spirit and propriety of your resolutions, rejoiced the heart of every friend to constitutional freedom, and has done the highest honour to America. Maintain your firmness and unanimity and depend upon Heaven for success; hope nothing from the people here, no matter how numerous you may be. I do not count the thousands; more and more daily espouse your cause, and, I believe it will shortly be as much ours as yours."—Am. Arch., I: 772.

At first, New York City was represented in the congress by only James Duane, John Jay, Philip Livingston, and Isaac Low; John Alop did not appear until Sept. 14.—Ibid., I: 14, 371. To the proposal, on Sept. 6, that congress be opened with prayer, Jay objected because they were "so divided in religious sentiments," but this was overruled.—Works of John Adams, II: 568-69; Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), I: 28.

John Jay and James Duane were on the committee appointed to prepare a declaration of rights and grievances. During the debates in the committee, Jay said, on Sept. 8: "It is necessary to recur to the law of nature, and the British constitution, to ascertain our rights. The constitution of Great Britain will not apply to some of the charter rights. A mother country surcharged with inhuman laws, they have at liberty to choose any form of government they please, and they have as large a liberty to make emigrants as may be said, if we leave our country, we cannot leave our allegiance. But there is no allegiance without protection, and emigrants have a right to erect any government they please. . . . I can't think the British constitution inseparably attached to the person of every subject. Whence did the constitution derive its authority? from compact; might not that authority be given up by compact?" Duane, on the contrary, was for "guarding our rights on the laws and constitution of the country from whence we sprung, and charters, without recurring to the law of nature; because this will be a feasible support. Charters are compacts between the Crown and the people, and I think on this foundation the charter governments stand firm."—Works of John Adams, II: 370, 371.

Galloway's "plan of a proposed union between Great Britain and the Colonies," presented on Sept. 25, was seconded by Duane and supported by Jay, but was finally defeated by the close vote of six colonies to five.—Ibid., II: 387-91; Bancroft, Hist. of U. S., 3: 69-70.

Isaac Low, in the committee to draw up the association, declared (probably on Oct. 6): "Gentlemen have been transported, by their zeal, into reflections upon an order of men, who deserve it the least of any men in the continent, or in the world, for the just rights of our mother country. We have too much reason, in this Congress, to suspect that independency is aimed at. I am for a resolution against any tea, Dutch as well as English. We ought to consider the consequences, possible as well as probable, of every resolution we take, and provide ourselves with a retreat or a resource." He raised the question whether the people will tolerate a total interruption of the West India trade. "Can they live without rum, sugar, and molasses? Will not this impatience and vexation defeat the measure. This would cut up the revenue by the roots, if wine, fruit, molasses, and sugar were discarded as well. But a proper offer to the West Indies will allay this jealousy because that cannot afford to lose the West India market, and this would throw a multitude of families in our fishing towns into the arms of famine."—Works of John Adams, II: 395-96.

On Oct. 8, the following resolution was adopted: "That this Congress approve of the opposition by the Inhabitants of the Massachusetts-bay to the execution of the late acts of Parliament; and if the same shall be attempted to be carried into execution by force, in such case, all America ought to support them in their opposition." Duane wished to have entered on the minutes his protest against this, but he was refused.—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), I: 58; Bancroft, Hist. of U. S., IV: 73-75.

On Oct. 13, Adams remarked: "Mr. Duane has had his heart set upon asserting in our bill of rights the authority of Parliament to regulate the trade of the Colonies. He is for grounding it on compact, acquiescence, necessity, protection, not merely on our consent."—Works of John Adams, II: 507. On this point, Duane finally won.—Bancroft, Hist. of U. S., IV: 69.

On Oct. 22, the members resolved that another congress be held at Philadelphia on May 10, 1775 (p.v.), "unless the redress of grievances . . . be obtained before that time."—Ibid., I: 102.

The work of the congress was completed on Oct. 26, when it dissolved.—Ibid., I: 114.

This congress drew up: 1. an Association prohibiting importation from Great Britain after Dec. 1, 1774, and exportation to that country after Sept. 15, 1775 (ibid., I: 75-81); 2. an address, drafted by John Jay, to the people of Great Britain (ibid., I: 82-90); 3. a memorial to the inhabitants of the British colonies (ibid., I: 90-101); 4. an address to the king (ibid., I: 101-13); 5. an address to the inhabitants of Quebec (ibid., I: 105-15).

An advertisement informs the public that "A Merchant Broker's Office, is open'd by William Tongue, At the corner house of Mr. Richard Waldron, near the Exchange, New-York; where all kinds of business will be transacted on commissions, either in buying, selling, or bartering West-India, Americans, or European goods; also slaves, vessels, or any merchandise, sold in a brokerage way, in the manner practised in London."—N. Y. Merc. Sept. 5, 1774.

An advertisement reads: "New-York Water Works. Notice is hereby given, that a large quantity of pitch pine logs will be wanting for the New-York water works: Such persons as are willing to furnish the same, are desired to send their proposals, in writing, before the 20th of October next, to Christopher Coles, cornet, West-India Merch., Sept. 2, 1774. The logs were secured from Stillwater, in Albany County (see Nov. 8).

The Earl of Dartmouth writes to Colden: "The King has seen with concern that His Subjects in the different Colonies in North America have been induced upon the ground stated in their different Resolutions to nominate Deputies to meet in general Congress at Philadelphia."

"If the object of this Congress be humbly to represent to the King any Grievances they may have to complain of, or any propositions they may have to make on the present state of America, such Representations would certainly have come from each Colony with greater Weight in it in its separate existence, if the Propriety and Legality of which there may be much doubt." Dartmouth also informs Colden that large quantities of gunpowder are being shipped from Holland to New York, and instructs him to find a means of putting a stop to so dangerous a Correspondence.—N. Y. Col. Decs., VIII: 265. On Oct. 19, the king issued an order in council stopping the exportation of gunpowder from Great Britain, and its importation into the colonies, except by license of the king or privy-council.—Ibid., VII: 509. On Nov. 2, nevertheless, Colden reported that "Americans" are "purchasing large quantities of Arms & Ammunition in the different parts of Europe."—Ibid., VIII: 510.

Smith says: "The Affairs of this Country grow very serious—Nothing so fully discovered the Spirit of the lower Classes as their Countenances and Speeches, upon a false Alarm which arrived yesterday, of Gen'l Gages Firing upon Boston. Perceiving that we in the most imminent Danger of a Civil War I wrote this Day & Sept. yesterday to Gov' Bown, Mr Sargent & Col' Fanning to the Intent that they may know the Truth on the other side of the Water . . . It is astonishing to observe to what a Pass the People are arrived. Instead of that Respect they formerly had for the King, you now hear the very lowest Orders call him a Knave or a Fool, & reproaching him for the Diversion of his & his Grandfather's Conduct."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. In a letter to Dartmouth, of the same date, Colden expresses a sentiment that the populace is now directed by men who have much at stake, not by demagogues opposed to the government. Men now speak and publish sentiments in favour of the government and argue upon the political subjects of the times. There are "no more burning of Elliptes, or putting cut-out papers under People's Doors." The delegates to "the general Congress" went to Philadelphia last week (see Sept. 1). "Seven Counties of this Province, neither appointed Deligates for themselves nor concur'd in the choice made by the City; and two Counties sent Deligates of their own . . . the City Deligates were embarrassed by this Dissention of the People."—N. Y. Col. Decs., VIII: 488.

In a letter to his nephew, Capt. Maturin, who is secretary to Gen. Gage, Smith declares that "the first Act of Indiscrition on the Part of the Army or the People marked with Blood, would light up a Civil War."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

The following handbill is dismissed as an "humbug":

"A Card.—The thanks of the public are presented to those worthy citizens, who have, to their immortal honour, nobly refused to let their Vessels for the base purpose of transporting troops, ammunition, &c to oppress the brave defenders of American Liberties, who are already suffering the most pitiable and patriotic conduct merits applause, as much as a contrary one would the contempt and indignation of every generous mind."—N. T. Jour., Sept. 15, 1774; 4 Am. Arch., I: 782. One of the original handbills is preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library. See Sept. 14.

John Thurman writes a long letter to "Sargent Chambers & Co.," probably of London: "Tho' I hate Politicks from their Late very disagreeable Circumstances it may not be aims or very disagreeable to you at Present to hear the opinion of a True friend to the Liberties of America, & a sincere Lover of Great-Britain—I am Grieved to think she is Weary of her Greatness, & that Prosperity should set heavy upon her, is there no enemy to find on which she may waste her Blood and Ill got Treasure or has Conquest & Success only Laid a Foundation for Cruelty & Oppression, or has the operations in the Estate given such a Relish to Murder Oppression & Robbery that finding no more Plunder there she should Turn her Volarious desires on Plundering America, her best Friend . . . every American was Born free we Boast every Liberty our Most Excellent Constitution affords we are long used to its Benefic Influence & would part with Life Sooner than Live under the Fetter of discontent & Slavery, You have often told me America would Become Great, Mr. Sargent, & no doubt she is, which was very disagreeable to me nor could I conceive it Possible or which way it would be brought about it is said Oppression will make a wise man mad I am sure Loss of Liberty & the Horrible expectation of Cruel, and Barbarous opposition is enough to make every American mad what have we done to forfeit our Birth Right or how came our Liberties dependant on the parliament of Great Britain . . . Americans dare dye but dare not tamely give up their Liberties—we dread the Consequences of a Civil War & Fighting with our best friends, this seems at hand. Freeman are not to be governed by Power & forces, we have no Idea of it & bed knows where it is, than in a channel of the Propriety and Legality of which there may be much doubt."

Dartmouth's letter is reported: "Almost all the New Settlements & in the Cities you can scarcely find a Lad of 12 years old that does not go to Grandfather's for the worst of Consequences . . . It is yet in your power to call back our Love to save your Honour to make us Happy yourselves Prosperous, but should you drive America into a Rebellion you will in my Opinion find it Easier to Conquer France than to subdue them . . ."

"There is not a Man born in America that does not Understand the Use of Fire arms & that well, as we have much Spirit Every Man is provided, it is Almost the First thing they Purchase & take to all the New Settlements & in the Cities you can scarcely find a Lad of 12 years old that does not go to Grandfather's . . ."

"We were Shocked with an a Larrem that General Gage had Robbed the Magazine of the Powder & that in Attempting to take it Back were fired upon & 6 men killed he did take the Province powder but no further harm was done [see Sept. 7] It is said above Fifty Thousand Men were in Motion for the Relief of

The following handbill is distributed about the city:

"To the Publick.—As the merchants of this city have nobly refused letting their vessels to the tools of Government for the base purpose of transporting troops and military stores to Boston; for enforcing the cruel and arbitrary excises of a corrupt ministry, on that virtuous people, now suffering in the glorious cause of American freedom; it is therefore hoped that no pilot will be found so lost to all Sense of duty to his country, as to assist in that detestable work. Mr. Francis Post inadvertently engaged to make some chests for the transportation of arms; and Mr. Jonathan Hampton, in like manner, undertook to contract with house carpenters, for the purpose (as is supposed) of building barracks at Boston; but when their fellow-citizens represented to them the tendency of their conduct, they immediately declined the abominable Service. After these laudable examples of the merchants and tradesmen of this city, there is no doubt but their patriotic conduct will be followed by all their fellow-citizens. But, notwithstanding, should any sordid miscreant be found amongst us, who will aid the enemies of this country to subvert her liberties, he must not be surprised if that vengeance overtake him, which is the reward justly due to traitors. A broadside, addressed "To the Inhabitants of New York," and signed "Humanus," offers the following arguments against withholding provisions and clothing from the troops at Boston: 1. It is a matter that should be decided by the continental congress; 2. "To attempt to starve and perish the Soldiery, will make every Man of them our Enemy, at a Time we should use every Means to conciliate their Friendship." 3. These measures may lead the soldiers "to sally out against the Inhabitants and seize the Supports of Nature." The resulting riots would injure the American cause in the eyes of English supporters.

"Starving an Enemy is an Act that would be proper in Time of open and avowed War," but it is not proper while the colonists are trying to secure redress of grievances "in a calm and rational Manner." 5. The plan will not succeed, for "Supplies will be found sufficient to prevent the Soldiers from starving or perishing."—From an original in the N. Y. Public Library.

The common council orders that the following warrants be issued: one for £100 to be expended for digging out Chatham St; one for £1000 towards building a dock at North River; and one for £815 for making and painting several street boards.—M. A notice in the Journal reads: "The Committee of Correspondence having taken into consideration the present dissatisfaction prevailing in the City on Account of the Advance upon several Articles imported from Great Britain; and foreseeing that these Discontents will be likely to increase when a Non Importation Agreement shall have taken Place, have judged it necessary to request a Meeting of all the Importers, at the Exchange, on Friday Morning next [Oct. 7, 9, 11] at Eleven o’clock, to consider and determine upon such a Plan, as will be most likely to remedy these Inconveniences. Colden informs Dartmouth that a committee of the more violent citizens went to the merchants and endeavoured to deter them from sending articles to the army at Boston. This caused a meeting of "the principal People and Merchants" who expressed their disapproval, and, as a result, they "now go on compleating their meetings with no further Interruption."—N. Y. Col. At a meeting of the importers of goods from Great-Britain [see Oct. 4], to take into consideration the dissatisfaction that has already appeared, upon the advance of divers articles, some of them the real necessaries of life and being determined as far as in us lies, to preserve the peace of the city, we think it necessary, in order to remove the cause of any future murmuring, to make the following declaration: That we will not, from the apprehension of a non-importation agreement, put any unreasonable advance upon our goods; and when such an agreement shall have taken place, we will continue to sell them for a moderate profit, and no more.

That we will do our utmost to discourage all engrossers, and persons who buy up goods with a view of creating an artificial scarcity, thereby to obtain a more plausible pretext for enhancing the prices.

That if any retailer, or other person, should by a contrary conduct, endeavour to defeat these our good intentions, we will, as one man, decline dealing with him; and shall consider him, as the author or authors of all the disturbances that shall be consequent thereupon.

Signed by order of a large number of importers met at the Exchange on the 5th of October, by Henry Rensselaer, Chairman. "Ordered, That the above declaration be published in all the news-papers."—Rivington’s Gazette, Oct. 13, 1774.

A survey of this day by Gerard Bancker is entitled: "Plan of a Parcel of Land lying at Greenwich in the Out Ward of the City of New York... Surveyed at the Request of the Hon. O. D. D this..."
868 THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

8th Oct. 1774. C.B. C.S. 'Under date of Oct. 20, 1800, the plan is endorsed, "Now Ireland's formerly School House Lot at Green-   stone." From the original in the Bancroft Collection, in the N. Y.   Pub. Library (box G-N, folder 83). This is part of the Warren   property, and shows Lady Warren's schoolhouse. "O D L" was the   Hon. Oliver de Lancy, Lady Warren's brother. Description of   Pl. 46, fig. 13, p. 19.

Elithis Gallaudet is paid $77 for engraving Eight Plates & Head   Pieces for the Water Work Notes" (see Aug. 25).—M. G. C., VIII.   59. See Oct. 25.

The Mercury contains an interesting list of nursery stock sold   by William Hope, at "Flushing Landing near New York." Among a   dozen varieties of cherries, nearly three dozen plums, apricots,   nectarines, a large variety of peaches, pears, and apples, mel-   lumbers, fig trees, quince trees, currants, gooseberries, raspberries, strawberries, evergreen trees and shrubs, and a long   list of timber trees and flowering shrubs are catalogued.   N. Y. Merc., Oct. 10, 1774.

Between 12 and 1 o'clock in the morning, a fire breaks out "be-   hind the upper Barracks," in a house which has for some time   been used as a military hospital. The house is consumed, but no   further damage is done.—N. Y. Merc., Oct. 17, 1774.

This date is noted on a warrant called "A Plan of a Parcel of   Ground lying in Montgomery Ward in the City of New York,   lately purchased by the People called Quakers for erecting   a House of Public Worship." It shows the ground plan of the   Quaker meeting-house on Queen St. (see 1775), measuring 48 ft.   x 74 ft., as given in the original in the Bancroft Collection in   the N. Y. Pub. Library (box N-W, folder 109). Cf. I: 559.

Gen. Haldimand, a company of the Royal Artillery, "with a   large quantity of Ordnance Stores for Castle-William," three   companies of the "Royal Regiment of Ireland," and the 47th Regi-   ment, are the chief transports for Boston. "On board the Transpor-   ts are a great Number of Artificers, who are engaged to Work   upon the Barracks preparing for the accommodation of his Majesty's   Troops at Boston" (see Sept. 25).—N. Y. Merc., Oct. 17, 1774.   See also Nov. 2. Gen. Haldimand arrived in Boston on Oct. 25—   1774.

The "Association" passed on this day by the continental con-   gress (see Sept. 5) contains the following paragraph: "We will,   in our several stations, encourage frugality, economy, and indus-   try, and promote agriculture, arts and the manufactures of this   country, especially that of wool; and will discontinue and dis-   courage every species of extravagance and dissipation, espe-   cially all horse-raising, and all kinds of gaming, cock-fighting,   exhibitions of shows, plays, and other expensive diversions and   entertainments . . . . "—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), I: 8. This   passage refers to the fact that the John Street Theatre re-   mained closed during 1775 and 1776. It was reopened by British   officers in 1777 (see Jan. 6, 1777).

John Jay, John Watts, Jr., and Henry Livingston have been   elected for the season the managers of the "New-York Dancing   Assembly," at Hall's Tavern.—N. Y. Merc., Oct. 24, 1774.

At a meeting of the governors of the hospital, Drs. Peter   Middeltoon, John Jones, and Samuel Bard (see March 9, 1776)   are appointed physicians to "that truly charitable and benevolent   foundation." The house is now "under cover" and preparations   are being made for "the speedy reception of patients, which it is   hoped will excite a generous and liberal disposition in the publica-   tion, to render it extensively useful by their beneficent contributions.   —Rivington's Gazetteer, Oct. 27, 1774. Before the hospital was   ready for occupancy, it was consumed by fire (see Feb. 28,   1775)."

The amount of £500 is ordered paid by the common council to   be used on account of the works of De Gruchy's ferry (see March   1)—M. G. C., VIII: 62.

Christopher Colles is paid £500 for his work "on the New   York Water Works."—M. G. C., VIII: 62. For further appro-   priations see Nov. 6.

The continental congress, convened at Philadelphia on   Sept. 5 (q.v.), disbanded. Isaac Low, John Alpin, John Jay, James   Duane, William Floyd, Henry Wiener, and S. Boerum are the   representatives from the colony of New York who sign the articles of   association, which are intended for a non-importa-   tion, non-consumption, and non-exportation agreement among the   colonies.—N. Y. Merc., Oct. 31, 1774.

Part of the New York and Connecticut delegates to the con-   tinent's congress arrive from Philadelphia. The remainder came Oct.   the following day.—N. Y. Merc., Oct. 31, 1774.

John Thurman writes to Amos Hoyton, probably of London:   "You will find we are in a Terrible Situation the Bostonians are   Ready to draw the sword as is Connecticut they are a Numerous   Brave People & will as surely fight Hostilities are begun as we   know you know these People all under hand fire arms are daily   under arms, the Spirit is gone forth I hope it may be Recalled in   Peace if once a Blow is Struck which may be done by some   Imprudent hand God only knows where it will end."—From "Ex-   tracts from the Letter Books of John Thurman, Jr.," in Hist.   Ala., and et., vol. 1: 205.

About 100 men of the Royal Irish Regiment have been left   with Colden by Gen. Haldimand; and "About four score Artificers   went from hence with the General, to work on the Barracks there   [see Oct. 15] and last week some iron Potts and Stores were ship'd   for the use of the Troops at Boston, without any attempt being   made to prevent it."

Regarding contraband trade, Colden says: "The Vessels from   Holland, or St. Eustatius, do not come into this Port, but anchor   at some Distance in the numerous Bays and Creeks that our Coasts   and Rivers furnish, from whence several Legoons and Goods are sent   up in small Boats. I believe it would be very proper to make some   Regulations that might discourage the owners of these small Boats   from engaging in this Business. When they are now seized, their   Boats are sold at so low a price that the Owners recover them   for a Loss that is the poorest of them does not regard. The risk   being so small, they engage with the illicit Traders at low Wages.   This increases the Profits of that Trade."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII:   511, 544.

The "Maria Wilhelmina," one of the largest and "best built   ships ever produced in America," is launched at the New   ship-yard of Thomas Cheeseman. "It is computed that there   were upwards of 12,000 people at this launch, who testified their   happiness by the loudest acclamations, on seeing so large a vessel   floating in our water."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Nov. 10, 1774.   This ship was three decked, and "of near one thousand tons burden."   —Ibid., Oct. 25, 1774. For the general location of ship-yards on the   East River shore, see Pls. 40 & 41, Vol. I.

Hugh Finley, joint postmaster-general for North America,   arrives from Quebec by way of Boston.—N. Y. Jour., Nov. 9,   1774.

Joseph Reed writes from Philadelphia to Josiah Quincy:   "there is no danger of the enemy being let in through this City;   there is a band of stannch, chosen Sons of Liberty among some of   our best families, who are backed by the body of the people in such   a manner that no discontented spirit dares oppose the measures   which the government is at present necessary for the public safety;   if there has been a strange delinquency and backwardness during   the whole Summer. If you have any correspondence there I wish you   would endeavour to animate them. While they are attending to   the little palty disputes which their own parties have produced,   the great cause is suffering in their hands."—Am. Arch., II 964.

Because the exportation of sheep is contrary to a resolution   of the continental congress, several citizens wait upon the captain   of a sloop in the harbour and request the return of the 18 sheep   on board, which are destined for the West Indies. In the evening,   the unfilfilled promise of the captain to do this, together with a rumour   that the ship is to sail that night, causes quite an excitement. Two   hundred people assemble on the wharf and appoint a committee to   consult with the committee of correspondence. The latter advises   that the merchant to whom the vessel came consigned be sent for   and desired to cause the landing of the sheep. These are then to   be delivered to one of the committee for safe keeping until the boat   shall sail. Upon the enactment of these conditions, the people   peaceably disperse.—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 14, 1774.

Isaac Low issues a call to the "freeholders and freemen" of this   city "to assemble together at the usual places of election, in their   several wards, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, on the 5th day of this instant November, then and there to elect, and appoint   eight fit persons in each respective ward to be a Committee of   Inspection."—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 14, 1774. But see Nov. 15.

An advertisement informs the public that "Mt Colles . . .   proposes to deliver at a Course of Lectures, in natural philosophical   principles. He has taken a large and convenient room in Fair-   street near the turn into Golden-hill, and intends to commence these lectures on Monday the 14th day of November. . . . Tickets . . .

The common council having contracted with Isaac Man and Isaac Man Jr. of Stillwater in Albany County "for 66,000 feet of pine timber, for the making of Pipes of the Water Works" (see July 21), the articles of agreement are signed by the mayor and sealed. The contract provides that the logs shall be from 14 to 20 ft. long, that one-fourth of them shall be 12 in. in diameter at the small end, "exclusive of the sap thereof," that three-fourths shall be 9 in. in diameter at the small end, and that all shall have "straight and true grain and sap". One third of the timber is to be delivered on July 1, 1775, the third next on Aug. 1, and the last on Oct. 1. From the original in the city clerk's record-room, M. G. C., VIII: 62-63. Panic logs had been advertised in New York on Sept. 5 (q.v.).

Isaac Low issues the following notice from the committee chamber: "Whereas it is intended very soon to transmit the donations that have been collected in this colony, for the support of the poor of Boston, to that city; the committee of correspondence request the favour of the benefactors and collectors of that laudable charity, as soon as possible, to pay the several contributions into the hands of Messrs. Gerard Wm. Beekman, Gerardus Duycking, and Peter T. Cunienius, of the city of New York, merchants, or either of them, who are appointed by this committee, and have undertaken to transact that business."—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 14, 1774.

"His Excellency General Gage has ordered the victualing Office to be immediately removed from this City to Boston."—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 14, 1774.

"At a late Meeting of the Distillers of this City, (in Support of the Proceedings of the Continental Congress) they unanimously Resolved, To distil no Molasses or Syrups that may hereafter be imported from any of the British West-India Islands, or from Dominiques; nor to sell any Rum, or other Spirits, for the Purpose of carrying on the Slave Trade, or that they shall have Reason to apprehend is intended to be so applied."—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 14, 1774.

John Young advertises a school which will be a benefit to children whose parents are unable to furnish wood. It is conducted by the鳍rs. Crofts, on Broadway nearly opposite Verletonburgh Hill. He plans in January to open a night school in which the charge for each study to be a specified amount "without candles."—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 14, 1774.

From the committee chamber is issued the following notice, which is signed by Isaac Low: "Whereas it is apprehended, that inconsiderabilities may arise from the mode lately recommended by this committee, for electing a new committee to superintend the execution of the association entered into by the Continental Congress; and this committee of correspondence having taken the same into further consideration, and consulted many of their fellow citizens, and also conferred with the committee of mechanics, and having agreed to dissolve their body as soon as such new committee shall be appointed; public notice is therefore hereby given, that it is now thought fit, that instead of the mode prescribed by the former advertisement [see Nov. 7, sixty persons, to constitute the committee until the first day of July next, shall be chosen by the freeholders and freemen of the said city, to be a committee for the purposes mentioned in the said association, and that the said election shall be held at the City-Hall, on Tuesday next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, under the inspection of the Vestrymen of this city, who shall be requested by the inhabitants to attend at that purpose."—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 21, 1774. See Nov. 22.

The clerk of the common council is ordered to "advertize in the public Gazettars, that this Corporation are determined to carry into Execution the Building of a Bridewell, and being desirous of procuring such building in such a manner as shall be of the utmost advantage to any person or persons that will favor them with a plan of the Same by the tenth day of January next, for their Consideration."—M. G. C., VIII: 64. The advertisement appeared in subsequent issues of the N. Y. Mercury, and Rivington's Gazetteer. The plan was not decided upon until March 17, 1775 (q.v.).

Payment is ordered of the account of Samuel "Frances" for the expenses of a committee of this Corporation.—M. G. C., M. 17, No. 64. Among the receipts of $2,414.60, are "Madera 35/", "Punch 5/," "Sangray 7/.", "Porter 1/2, Shynce 1/6."—From voucher in comptroller's office, box No. 1.

A broadside, addressed "To the Public" and signed "Citizens of New-York," announces: "We have had frequent intimations from England, both by private letters and news papers, that there would be attempts made to bribse the printers of the public papers in America... Whether or not Mr. Rivington is really a pensioner from the ministry, or has been influenced by hopes of their future favours, every one is at liberty to judge from the conduct of his press... It is the opinion of a great number here, of the friends to the rights and liberties of British America, that the general scope and tendency of the news papers published by Mr. Rivington, have been to promote the designs of the British ministry—to countenance and support their unconstitutional claims and arbitrary measures, to subject the British colonies to tyrannical power, reduce them to slavery, and finally to destroy the English constitution.

From this opinion of the aforesaid paper, and not from enmity to Mr. Rivington on any other account, we have thought proper to publish the following letters, in some measure to prevent the mischievous design of his papers. By showing that the friends to liberty, tho' in distant parts and unconnected, agree in sentiments, and have the same opinion of it as ourselves." The letters are from a number of citizens in Baltimore to Rivington announcing the withdrawal of their subscriptions to his paper because of his "most notorious partiality" to Great Britain's side of the struggle.—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

A broadside of this date gives the names of 60 persons "proposed to be elected as a Committee on Tuesday next" (see Nov. 22).—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

In an address to the New York delegates who attended the Philadelphia congress (see Sept. 5), the "Committee of Mechanics" expresses its approval of "the wise, prudent, and spirited Measures which you have adopted... for obtaining a Redress of Grievances, and a Restoration of our violated Rights."—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 21, 1774.

The freeholders and freemen of New York City, in conformity with the notice of Nov. 15 (q.v.), meet at the city hall and choose a committee of 60 men to enforce the "Association" (non-importation, non-exportation, and non-consumption agreement) which was adopted by the congress at Philadelphia.—Am. Arch., 1791:16-19, 92, in Rivington's Mercur., Dec. 1774. This new committee succeeded the former one, but included many of those who had served on the committee of correspondence.

Rev. John Ogilvie, assistant minister of Trinity Church, dies. He was buried in Trinity churchyard the next afternoon.—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 28, 1774. His obituary is found in the Mercury of Dec. 5. By his will he left £500 to the charity school in this city, £100 to King's College, and £100 to "the corporation for the relief of the widows and children of clergymen in communion with the church of England in America."—N. T. Jour., Dec. 29, 1774. For Dr. Ogilvie's successor, see Dec. 1.

The business of inspection (see Nov. 22) meets. While the business of the meeting is not made public, it is said that they "entered into some proper Rules and Measures for the effectual Discharge of the important Duties of their Appointment, in order to a strict Compliance with the Resolutions and Recommendations of the General Congress."—N. Y. Merc., Dec. 5, 1774.

William Bateman, "Stone Seal Engraver, Lapidary and Jeweller, from London, at the House of Mr. Hopkins, Pitot, in Fair-street, Goldenshill, New-York," informs the public that he "Engraves on stone, steel, silver and copper plate, coats of arms, crests, ciphers, figures, heads, or the most minute fancies in the most reasonable terms."—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 28, 1774. Steauffer, in dm. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 18-19, says he knew of no copper-plate signed by Bateman.

"The King's Speech on the Opening the Session" begins thus: "It gives me much concern that I am obliged, at the opening of the present Parliament, to inform you that we have not received from the other side of the water any further tokens of that spirit of resistance and disobedience to the law still unhappily prevalent in the province of Massachusetts's Bay, and has in divers parts of it broke forth in fresh violences of a very criminal nature. These proceedings have been recounted and encouraged in other of my colonies, and unwarrantable attempts have been made to obstruct the commerce of the kingdom by unexampled combinations. I have taken such sure measures, and given such orders, as I judged most proper and effectual for carrying into execution the laws which were passed in the last session of the late parliament, for the protection and security of the commerce of my subjects, and for the restoration and preservation of every government in the province of the Massachusetts's Bay. And you may depend upon my firm and stedfast resolution to withstand every attempt to weaken, or impair the authority of the Supreme Legislature, over all His Majesty's Dominions."—N. T. Col. Decr., VIII: 151.

The Earl of Dartmouth informs the governors in America of the king's "Firm & steadfast Resolution, to withstand every Attempt to weaken, or impair the authority of the Supreme Legislature, over all His Majesty's Dominions."—N. T. Col. Decr., Dec. 12, 1774.

Two puppet shows, one in the Fields and one at the exchange, are dispersed, as being in violation of the association entered into by the general congress, which disconveniences and discourages "all kinds of gaming, cock fighting, exhibitions of swows, Plays, and other expensive diversions and entertainments."—*N. 27 A number of people styling themselves "the Mohawks and River Indians" write to Andrew Elliot, collector of the port (see Dec. 15): "A Number of fire-arms of British manufacture, legally imported, having been lately seized by your orders and conveyed on Longpoint, Nicholas Hoffman, Peter T. Currie, Lindley Murray, Rodolphus Ritzma, Lancaster Burling, Jacob von Voorhis, Francis Lewis, and Capt. Fleming."—N.Y. Merc., Dec. 19, 1774.

Mr. Johnson, an Indian of the Mohican Tribe, is to preach this evening in the Old Presbyterian Church, in this City, when a Collection is to be raised for him, to defray a considerable Expense he has been at, in preparing the Way for the Removal of his Tribe, and the Remains of six other Tribes in that Vicinity, who are Chiefly Christians, unto the Onedia Country. An Event that promises the most salutary Effects to this Province.—N. Y. Jour., Dec. 23, 1774.

A handbill appears addressed "To the Inhabitants of New York," and signed by "Plain English," which states, in part: "your country in Council of the said City has decided upon a considerable number of arms, which were legally exported from Great-Britain, and imported here, in the ship Lady Gage, and therefore not liable to a seizure, upon any pretense whatsoever, as they are actually the manufacture of England." Those arms (I am credibly informed) are now on board the man of war, and are in a few days to be sent to General Gage, and of consequence are to be used for your destruction . . . In the name of Heaven, throw off your supineness; assemble together immediately, and go in a body to the Collector, insist upon the arms being relanded, and he must see them forth-coming, or abide the consequences; delays are dangerous; there is no time to be lost." In spite of this, most of the prominent people of the city were in sympathy with the collector's action, and declared themselves ready to support him.—Rivington's Gazettes, Jan. 5, 1775.

31 Estimates of the expense of building a fortress in New York (Governor's Island), and of joining and altering the Flat Rock and Conyn batteries bear this date.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 850. The original of these records were lost in the capitol fire in Albany.

Prof. Johnston estimates that the population of New York City and County, given as 21,805 in the last official census, of 1771 (p. v), "must have risen to full 25,000. Philadelphia's population was somewhat larger; Boston's less."—Johnston, The Campaign of 1776 around N. Y., 36mootpage.

9 In another letter of almanacs, or hand-books (see Dec. 12, 1774), this one having the title Geane's Universal Register, or, American and British Kalendar, bears this date. In his introductory statement in this volume (a 16mo), he says that this work is "the first of its Kind that ever appeared in this Province, . . ." He adds: "At this Time, when all America is united in one great political Compact, for their common Security, it is certainly necessary that we should be furnish'd with as intime a Knowledge as can be obtain'd of every Province . . . . this Work has the merit, he states, "of containing more useful Matter than the Court Calendar." It contains also "as much as either of the American Registers already publish'd in two Provinces." He has "selected every Thing from the British and Irish Lists worthy of Notice, and, besides the General Establishment of America, the Public is presented with an Account of every Province from West Florida to Quebec inclusive." Among the features relating to New York Province, mentioned or described, is "New-York College." Of this it states, among various facts: "The Building (which is only one Third of the intended Structure) consists of an elegant Stone Edifice, three complete Stories high, with four Stair-cases, twelve Apartments in each, a Chapel, Hall, Library, Museum, Anatomical Theatre and a School for experimental Philosophy.

All Students, but those in Medicine, are obliged to lodge and diet in the College, unless they are particularly exempted by the Governors or President, The Edifice is surrounded by a high Fence, which also encloses a large Court and Garden; and a Porter constantly attends at the front Gate, which is lock'd at 1 o'Clock each Evening in Summer, and at 9 in Winter; after which Hours, the Names of all that come in, are delivered weekly to the President.

The College is supplied with Water from a Spring on the South side of the Bank of Hudson's River, which it overflows; commanding a most extensive and beautiful Prospect." From pp. iii, and 102, etc.

"In 1775 there were seven students graduated Bachelor of Arts, but there was no public Commencement [of King's College] this year on account of the absence of Dr. Cooper."—Hist. of Columb. Univ. (1894), 59.

During this year and the next, the Queen St. Friends' meeting-house was built. It was a brick structure, and stood on the present Pearl St. between Franklin Sq. and Oak St.—Onderdonk, Annals of Hempstead, 103; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 918.

R. Aitken begins the publication at Philadelphia of The Pennsylvania Magazine: or, American Monthly Museum. He continued it until July, 1776. It was edited by Thomas Payne.—Sabin, XIV: 394 (item 603.46).

Colden writes to the Earl of Dartmouth: "I have received your Ldp's Commands of the 19th of October, with his Majesty's order in Council of the 26th of the same month, which I shall endeavour by every means in my power, to execute in the most effectual manner. I immediately communicated to Mt. Elliot the Collector of this Port, the orders which I had received, and gave him the necessary directions for the conduct of the officers of the Customs [see Dec. 15, 1774]. I am well assured he will be very attentive to this important duty. A day or two after this order was received one of the Custom House officers discovered ten chests of Arms, three Boxes of Lead and one Barrel of Gun-Powder on Board a Vessel bound to Rhode Island. It has been found on enquiry that these arms were lately imported on board the ship Lady Gage, and it is said, were shipped at London as Hardware; but there was no Cockett for them under any Denomination. Mt. Elliot secured them all, and for greater safety sent them on Board the Man of War in the Harbour where they remain.

That set of people who have for some time been waiting for every opportunity to raise a Mob and throw the City into confusion, made an infamous attempt to frighten Mt. Elliot into a surrender of the Arms, which they insisted were legally support [see Dec. 27 and 28, 1774]. The principal Gentlemen and Merchants, to prevent mischief waited upon Mt. Elliot in a body, assured him they were perfectly satisfied with his behavior, and declared with every confidence that they should attempt to insult him on account of what had happened which silenced the others who were working in the dark and en-} who assured them of their protection on the occasion. A few instances of such a determined resolution not to submit to the tyranny of Meths would soon I am persuaded overcome their violence and reassert their natural rights and tranquility to Government."—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 520–31.

The Earl of Dartmouth writes to the governours in North America that he is commanded by the king to "signify" to them the king's "pleasure that they use their utmost endeavours to prevent the appointment of delegates to the congress which the first congress (see Sept. 5, 1774) resolved to hold in Philadelphia on May 10.—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 28.

A letter from London says: "The King has received the Petition of your Congress, and will lay it before Parliament. Much Good will is expected, and it may depend a great deal will be given up."—N. Y. Merc, March 13, 1775.

At a meeting of the merchants and others, concerned in American commerce, held at King's Arms Tavern, Cornhill, London, it is "unanimously Resolved, that it is the opinion of this meeting, that the alarming state of the Trade to North America makes it expedient to petition Parliament for redress." It is also resolved, "That a Committee be appointed to prepare a Petition to the House of Commons, and lay the same before a general meeting, to be held at this place this day seven o'clock."—Am. Arch., I: 1086.

An "Evening School" is advertised to commence "immediately after the Holidays ... at the Mercantile and Mathematic-School, In Broad-street."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Jan. 5, 1775.

The Earl of Dartmouth writes to Colden: "The affairs of America are now come to a crisis ... The idea of union upon some solid foundation, is now formed, and if I have no doubt of its being yet attainable through some channel of mutual consideration and discussion."—Am. Arch., I: 1101; N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 530.

An extract of a letter from London states: "Every reasonable expectation of the Colonists will be complied with; but no claims for exemption from parliamentary jurisdiction, can deserve that title. Such an exemption would be a dissolution of the British empire.—The outrages of the Bostonians will not pass with impunity, if vigour and firmness in Great Britain can effect it."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Jan. 5, 1775.

At a meeting of the Union Library Society (see July 25, 1774) it is ordered "That the Librarian permit the Members of the General Assembly, during their sitting, to have the free use of their Library, as though they were Members thereof; and that the Librarian supply the Speaker with a Catalogue of the Books, and a Copy of the Order."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Jan. 19, 1775: Upcott Coll, IV: 205. See April 12.

In the British parliament, Lord Chatham proposes an address to the king "for recalling the troops from Boston. This motion was ushered in and supported by a long speech in which he represented this measure as a matter of immediate necessity ... the present situation of the troops rendered them and the Americans continually liable to events, which would cut off the possibility of a reconciliation ... this mark of affection and good-will on our side, will remove all jealousy and apprehension on the other and instantaneously produce the happiest effects to both." In addition, Lord Chatham condemns all the recent laws and measures relating to America, and warns the ministers "of the humiliating disgrace, of repeating these acts through their necessity, which they refused to do from other motives." He is said to have concluded his speech with these words: "If the ministers thus persevere in misadvising and misleading the king, I will not say that they can alienate the affections of his subjects from his crown, but I will say, they will make his wearing—I will not say that the king is betrayed, but I will pronounce that—the kingdom is undone!"—Ann. Reg. (1775), 47–48.

In an address to Colden, the members of the assembly say: "We respectfully appeal to the deepest Coten, by the distressed State of the Colonies, and impressed with a due Sense of the fatal Consequences attending the unhappy Dispute between Great Britain and his Majesty's American Dominions, we feel the most affecting Anxiety at this alarming Crisis. Fully convinced that the Happiness of our present Measure, we shall exercise the important Trust they have reposed in us, with Firmness and Fidelity; and with Calmness and Deliberation, pursue the most probable Means to obtain a Redress of our Grievances ... Anxiety for the Interest and Happiness of the Constituents, and our Country. The Re-establishment of Harmony with Great-Britain, we shall Deference every Measure which may tend to increase our Distress; and, by our Conduct, shew ourselves truly desirous of a cordial and permanent Reconciliation with our Parent Kingdom."—Assem. Jour. (Philad. City, 1775), 43.

The public is informed "That the Town Clerk's Office is removed to the House lately occupied by John Jay, Esq.; in the Broad-Way, next Door to the one in which the late Mr. Chambers lived."—N. Y. Merc, Jan. 23, 1775.

Colden informs Dartmouth that the assembly's address (see Jan. 20) has given him so much satisfaction that he is sending it to England immediately. He adds: "It was some days before a sufficient number of the members of Assembly got to town ... and there are still twelve of them absent; which has occasioned the House to put off the farther consideration of their important business to the seventh of next month."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Jan. 5, 1775.

A gentleman in Philadelphia, in a letter to New York says: "I am not without hopes that a Petition will be sent to our Assembly, at their meeting next month, to rescind their approbation of the Proceedings of Congress. Nothing but a shameful fear of popular resentment ever could have extorted from them such a Resolve. Your Assembly is revered by all sensible men in this City, for their great prudence and unshaken resolution in first making a stand against lawless usurpers of power, and violators of liberty; from that period I date the fall of anarchy, and the commencement of good order."—Am. Arch., I: 1180; cf. Feb. 6.

Dirck Schuyler and others, manufacturers of chocolate in New York City, petition "that the colony duty of four shillings per hundred weight, payable on all cocoa imported, may be taken off."—Assem. Jour. (1775), 15.

Samuel Holland of New York and David Rittenhouse of Philadelphia, appointed to fix the beginning of the 43d degree, north latitude, make their report.—Col. Min., 355.

By a vote of the Assembly, Jan. 15, 1775, New York "is to take into consideration the proceedings of the continental congress held in the city of Philadelphia, in the months of September and October last."—Assem. Jour. (1775), 18. See Feb. 17 and 22.

Samuel Baldwin petitions for "Leave to Surrender to this board his Lease of Peck's Slip's ferry on the first of February or May next on his paying his rent to the day of his surrendering up the same." The common council gives him permission to do so on May 1, and orders that the ferry be advertised to be sold on March 20 (q.v.).—M. G. C., VIII: 75. The advertisement appeared in the N. Y. Merc, Feb. 16, 1775 and in Rivington's Gazetteer, Feb. 9, 1775.

A New Yorker, in a letter to Boston, says: "The present Assembly has existed since 1769, and most of the Members who were against an inquiry into the measures of the Congress [see Jan. 16], as preparatory to the approbation of them, have long since forfeited the esteem of the Constitution and, among others looking for favours from the Crown for themselves and families. Others of them were imposed on from mere ignorance, and some from fear. In short, sir, no virtuous or spirited act could be expected from a House, which had, by its votes, violated the right of Election, suspended the habeas corpus Act, deprived the subject of his right to a trial by a jury, and permitted six thousand of Tory Whigs kept here for the express purpose of enslaving America; but although these miscreants are the legal Representatives of the people, yet I can assure you they are not their real Representatives, and therefore you have no cause to fear that this City will depart from the Association."—Am. Arch., I: 1190.

County petition for permission to introduce a bill "to declare an oath administered according to the usage of North Britain to be legal."—Assembly, Journ. (1775), 19. When taking an oath, the inhabitants in Scotland merely raised the right hand instead of kissing the Bible. The Scotch form was made legal in New York by an act passed on April 1 (p. o.).

The committee appointed a sub-committee "to observe the conduct of all Vessels which may arrive after the first day of February next, having on board any Goods, Wares, or Merchandise, not allowed to be imported by the Association."—Am. Arch., I, 1802. See Feb. 2 and Feb. 16.

"The Governor of New York to Boston: says: "Since the glorious eleven [see Jan. 26], with Colonel Phillips at their head, have carried the day, two more Members are come, both of which are of the right side, so that there is now no chance of the Assembly's aiding or abetting the Congress. The friends of Government plume themselves on this victory, and are now open-mouthed against the proceedings of Congress, and no one dares, among gentlemen, to support them. Worthy old Silver Locks, (Lieutenant Governor Colden) when he heard that the Assembly had acted right, cried out, 'Lord, now let thou thy servant depart in peace,' in the T. J."—Am. Arch., 1: 1802. Cf. Jan. 12.

An advertisement reads: "Samuel Prince, Cabinet-Maker, At the sign of the chest of drawers, in William-Street, near the North Church, in New York: Makes and sells all sorts of cabinet work in the nearest manner, and on the lowest terms... He has under hand for sale, the most elegant furniture, made of mahogany of the very best quality, such as chest of drawers, chest upon chest, closet presses, desks, desks [sic] and book cases of different sorts, chairs of many different and new patterns, bureau tables, dining tables, card tables, breakfast tables, tea tables and many other sorts of cabinet work."—N. T. Merce., Jan. 30, 1775.

The lieutenant-governor, with great satisfaction, reports to Dartmouth the action of the assembly on Jan. 26 (p. v.). He then goes on to say: "When your Lordship considers that every American Assembly which has met since the Congress was held at Philadelphia, have approved of and adopted the Proceedings of the Congress... the loyalty and firmness of the Assembly of this Province, and of the People in general, will appear in a very striking light... I have strong expectations, my Lord, that the conduct of this Province will every day more evidently shew the loyalty and affection of the People for their gracious Sovereign, and their earnest desire for a Reconciliation with great Britain."—N. T. Col. Doc., VIII: 331–32.

The house of commons debates "upon the Disturbances in North America." Previous to the debate, "the avenues leading to the House were so extremely crowded, that there was not room for the members and some of the officers who were in the lobby and gallery to be cleared. "Lord North recapitulated the information contained in the papers; discriminated the temper of the colonies; pointed out those where moderation prevailed, and where violence was conceded under the appearance of duty and submission... He spoke of arts which he asserted were employed on both sides the Atlantic to raise this sedulous spirit. He drew a comparison between the burdens borne by the people of Great Britain and those of America. The annual taxes of Great Britain, he said, amounted to ten millions sterling, exclusive of the expenses of collection; and the number of inhabitants of Great Britain he supposed to be eight millions, therefore every inhabitant paid at least 2½ shillings annually. The total taxes of the continent of America amount to no more than 75,000 l; the number of inhabitants of America were three millions, therefore an inhabitant of America paid no more than sixpence annually. He then proceeded to lay down the legislative supremacy of parliament; stated the measures adopted by America to resist it, and the almost universal concord of the colonies in that resistance. Here, he said, he laid his foot on the great barrier, which separated, and for the present disunited both countries; and on this ground alone of resistance..."—Chron. of Eng., XVIII: 311–33.

Feb. 5
"The ship "James" arrives from Glasgow with a cargo of coal and dry goods, but as importation is no longer permitted, a strict watch is kept "to prevent the landing of any Goods in a clandestine manner." Some "Ministerial tools" assemble a few vagrants with a view to landing the goods, but these "banditti" are soon suppressed by the inhabitants of New Foundland."—Chron. of Eng., XVIII: 311–33.

Feb. 9
"When ever any of the colonies shall make a proper application to us, we shall be ready to afford them every just and reasonable indulgence; but that, at the same time, we consider it our indis- pensable duty, humbly to beseech his Majesty, that his Majesty will take the most effectual measures to enforce due obedience to the laws and authority of the supreme legislature; and that we beg leave to assure his Majesty, that it is our fixed resolution, at the hazard of our lives and properties, to stand by his Majesty, against all rebellious attempts, in the maintenance of the just rights of his Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament."

Mr. Dunning answered as follows (in part): "You passed Acts in the last session, which instead of governing America, carried tyranny into the bowels of America. You executed those Acts by force of arms; the people of the colonies thinking themselves tyrannically used, convened a general congress; the deputies met in that congress, came to resolutions declaratory of their ideas of their submission unto Britain, full of duty and allegiance to the King, and respect towards parliament. A people... professing the utmost loyalty and obedience to the King, and using no violence against his troops, nor being any where in arms, cannot, but by the utmost perversion of sense and expression be denounced rebels... I insist that every appearance of riot, disorder, tumult, and sedition which the noble lord has so faithfully recounted from the papers, arises not from disobedience, treason, or rebellion, but is caused by the conduct of those, who are anxious to establish despotism."—Chron. of Eng., XVIII: 311–33.

Attorney General Thurlow then called attention to the fact that "the several provincial meetings have ordered an arrangement of the militia... and the inhabitants of the colonies are so alert in levying these orders, that it is impossible to avoid the necessity upon the King's artillery and stores; the whole continent joining in one universal voice of disobedience to the legislature of this country. By every principle of policy we ought to render ourselves as secure as possible; and if we heard that such menacing circumstances as I have mentioned were breaking out in Scotland, in Ireland, or Cornwall, would not the ministry desire impeachment. Should they wait till all parties had joined, and were on one march to London?"

Among the other speakers was Charles Fox, who pointed out "the injustice, the inexpediency, and folly of the motion; the danger which may arise to the whole continent by a reconciliation with the colonies. He further said "that the measures taken by his Majesty's servants tend rather to widen than to heal the unhappy differences... between Great Britain and America."

Mr. Cruger "strongly recommended to all parties to go into an examination of the question; free from beyond their prejudice... He then attempted to vindicate the Americans both in courage and gallantry."

Captain Luttrell pointed out the necessity of keeping at home all of the already depleted fleet. "Can we believe," he said, "that the French and Spanish fleets are in the Channel and ready to take advantage of these disputes... or that they have not at this very hour, priests and emissaries in America... to blow the coal of contention between America and this country? Do we not know, Sir, that the Spaniards have never abandoned the claim they set up to Jamaica?... Or can we believe that the French will ever forget the manner in which you made reprisals, previous to the commencement of the late war?"

The solicitor-general concluded the day's debate. He said that "descriptions of the immense consequences of American trade were arguments rather against the opposing members than for them; for the greater the consequences, the greater the care ought to be, and the firmer the policy that was to preserve it; that the question was not now the importance of the American colonies, but the possession of the colonies at all."—Parl. Hist. of Eng., XVIII: 311–33.
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1775 a prodigious concourse of people, he was, without suffering the least Feb. 2 hurt or injury, put on board a boat, with some hands to row him, and sent off. As his ship was then two miles below the town, he went on board the man-of-war until the morning of Feb. 10 when the "James" came to anchor "under the cannon of the King- Fisher." \footnote{1775, Feb. 2.}

On Feb. 11, after some trouble over clearance papers, the "James" got under sail "accompanied by a boat, with two of the Committee, and a number of inhabitants on board." This convoy left her "about a league to the Southward of Sandy Hook," and two hours later she was out of sight.-\footnote{1775, Feb. 8.}

6 "A Freeman" issues an address to "The Freeholders, Freeman, and Inhabitants of the City and County of New-York." It begins: "As the Conduct of the General Committee is not understood by some, and misrepresented by others, it will not be improper to inform you, that a few Persons interested in the Importation of Goods, pretended to be in Doubt, whether it was necessary according to the Association entered into by the Congress, that the Goods which should arrive here, after the first day of February, should be sent back in the same Vessel. In order to determine this Matter, and to prevent any misunderstandings... on Monday last, Jan. 30, a Member made a Motion to get the Sense of the Committee on the Question: The Association was then read, and the different Articles of it which relate to the Point, were duly considered and fully argued, upon which the Committee determined unanimously, that according to the \textit{Articles} of the Association, the Goods, Wares, or Merchandize which should be imported after the first Day of February, should be sent back in the same Vessel in which they were imported." The author then publishes the names of those present at the meeting.

On Feb. 2 (p.v.), he continues, the committee decided that the ship "James" could not land her cargo, and at a meeting on Feb. 3, reiterated its decision of Jan. 30. The writer concludes: "What now must you think of the Impudence and Wickedness of those Men who, to escape the force of the said Ship [the "James"] to the Wharf, in order to land her Cargo, and thereby plunge this City into Confusion. Are three or four Men of no Consideration, Tools to the Enemies of our Country— to be suffered with Impunity, to attempt a Violation of the Engagements entered into by our Delegates, in our behalf? Are they, and not the Committee [i.e., to speak the Sense of the City, Forbid it Heaven! Such Men must incur your Indignation. For your Duty, your Honour, your Liberty, is highly concerned, to support your Engagements to the other Colonies, which can only be done by supporting the Determination of your Committee, which hath been fully stated to you." From an original broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

A Philadelphia writer to his correspondent in New York: "It is much to be lamented that your Province has not yet adopted the Proceedings of the Congress; but a faithful adherence to the Association will go far to remove the infamy which must certainly fall upon that Province, whose defection may tend to defeat the virtuous struggles in which we are engaged. We observe a number of publications in Rivington's Paper from your City, to which there is not the least spark of credit due. They dare not offer them to our Printers, because their notorious falsehood would ruin the credit of the Paper."-\footnote{1775, Feb. 8.}

Valentine Nutter, "At His Shop Opposite the Coffee-House Bridge," advertises some new books for sale. Nutter also "carries on the Book-Binding Business in its various Branches."-\footnote{1775, Feb. 6.}

7 "The Vestry of the City of New-York, Acquainted the Public, That in and by an order of the Court of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, now holding for the city and county of New York, they were appointed overseers of the several public wells and pumps within the said city, for one year. They ask that any person who is desirous of contracting for the work attend a meeting "at the town of Simmons, near the City-Hall" (see Oct. 8, 1779) on Feb. 14.-\footnote{1775, Feb. 15.}

And the creation of the first vestry in the city and for the responsibilities of that body, see Sept. 22, 1693. These vestrymen were civil, not ecclesiastical, officers, chosen annually by the voters.\footnote{1775, Feb. 15.}—\footnote{1775, Feb. 15.}

A cylinder is cast at the furnace of Messrs. Sharp and Curtius (see April 13, 1775) for the "Steam Engine of the Water Works now carrying on here [see July 21] being the first performance of the kind ever attempted in America, and allowed by Judges to be extremely well executed."-\footnote{1775, Feb. 16.}

A London letter reports that the British ministers "assure themselves of the defection of New-York.―\footnote{1775, Feb. 16.}

Mr. Bayard, deputy-secretary, brings to the assembly from Colden "sundry accounts of monies expended in repairs at Fort George and the Battery... amounting to £6,416 4."-\footnote{1775, Feb. 21.}

Col. Schuyler moves that certain letters from the committee of correspondence of Connecticut, the answer of the New York committee, and a letter from the assembly to Edmund Burke, all written in 1774, "be forthwith entered on the journals of this house, and that the clerk of this house be ordered to deliver copies of the same to the printer of this colony, that they may be by him inserted in the public newspapers." The motion is lost by a vote of 16 to 9.-\footnote{1775, Feb. 21.}

The ship "Beulah" arrives at the Watering Place, about the third leaves from this City [New York], in nine weeks from London. The Pilots, we are informed, were ordered not to bring her up, lest her being in the Harbour should give uneasiness to the City. The same night, a Sloop with some members of the Sub-Committee of Observation [see Jan. 50, and other citizens on board, went there and anchored near the sail to observe her conduct, and they will continue there till she departs. The Ship wants a new bowspirit; when she is furnished with this, and other necessary for her voyage, she will be despatched without delay."-\footnote{1775, Feb. 21.}

Both of fifteen to nine, the assembly refuses to thank Philip Livingston, Isaac Low, John Jay, John Alop, James Duane, Simon Boerum, William Floyd, and Henry Wiener, "for their faithful and judicious discharge of the trust reposed in them by the good people of this colony, at the continental congress, held at Phila-1755—Asiemb. it may be best to have it seen to by our neighbors because we do not run into the same violent measures with them yet I dare he bold to say this province would be as firm as any constitutional opposition to unconstitutional impostions as any of them. — From "Extracts from the Letter Books of John Thurman, Jr.," in Hist. Am. Coll., and ser., IV: 291.

Mr. John Schoonmaker, of Ulster County, overheard two negroes plotting to set fire to a number of houses in the vicinity. This being reported to the magistrates, the negroes were imprisoned.

The motive for this Conspiracy, was the Recovery of their Freedom. The Society of Powder and Ball was found with several Negroes and there are said to be Advices in Town, that the negroes were to be divided into parties, "to fire the houses, cry fire, and kill the people as they came out." — N. Y. Merc., March 6, 1775. "From Jamaica, on Long-Island, we are also informed, that several of the Negroes at that Place, were last week committed to Goal there, on account of a Conspiracy said to have been discovered by them to destroy the White People; and we are told most of the Slaves for Many Miles round are concerned in this Plot." — Ibid., March 6, 1775. On April 27, the Journal reported: "We can inform the public from good authority, that sundry negroes have lately been committed to the goal at the White Plains in Westchester County, upon suspicion of conspiring the death of the whites." — N. Y. Jour., April 27, 1775.

The ferry to be established "from the Dock belonging to this Corporation, at the Bear Market at the North River to Hoboken," is leased for two years to Herman Talman at an annual rent of $30.— Poc. Hist. N. Y. (1845), IV: 75. On May 8, 1775, Mayor and Assembly ordered to deliver Talman— Ibid., VIII: 91.

Talman must have made some private arrangement with Cornelius Haring, for, on May 11, the latter opened the ferry (see May 11). As late as May 24, 1776, Talman was considered the lessee.— Ibid., VIII: 140. For more about this ferry, see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 642.

By a vote of 15 to 10, the general assembly refuses to thank the merchants and inhabitants of the city "for their repeated, disinterested, public spirited, and patriotic conduct, in declining the importation, or receiving of goods from Great Britain, and for their firm adherence to the association entered into and recommended by the Grand Continental Congress, held at Philadelphia." — Assemb. Jour. (1775), 40.

The provincial assembly of New York meets with censure from the Pennsylvania Journal for having "refused even to consider the Peace of the Continental Congress" (see April 3). In a way suggesting modern journalism, the members of the governor's council and the New York City representatives in the assembly are listed, with occasional caustic comment against the name of an individual.— Penn. Jour., Feb. 23, 1775. For an expression of opinion from the Jour. see March 1.

A motion "that the sense of this house be taken, on the necessity of appointing delegates for this colony, to meet the delegates for the other colonies on this continent, in General congress," is lost by a vote of 17 to 9.— Assemb. Jour. (1775), 44-45. See April 5.

Samuel Seabury, of New York, writes the "Rector of the Westchester," advising him that he has "Hath opened a School in that Town, and offers his Service to prepare young Gentlemen for the College, the Comming-House, or any gentee Business for which Parents or Guardians may design them. Children who know their Letters, will be admitted into his School, and taught to read English with propriety, and to write it with a fair Hand, and with grammatical accuracy. They will be instructed in Arithmetic, if required, in its utmost extent; and in the Elements of Geometry; in Trigo- nometry, Navigation, Astronomy. The Latin and Greek Languages will be taught those who are intended for a learned Education. "

There are already eleven Students under Mr. Seabury's Care, and as soon as the Number of Scholars shall require it, a good English will be provided. And no Child or Gentee shall be requested to give Satisfaction to those Gentlemen, who shall favor him with the Education of their Children."

Proper attention will be paid to the young Gentlemen, that they be kept clean and decent, and that they behave with propriety; for the most of Educational purposes, it will be given them to discharge the Duties and Offices of Life with Integrity and Virtue, particular Care will be taken to explain to them the Principles of Morality, and the Christian Religion, by frequent short Lectures, adapted to their Capacity.

Board, (Washing included) may be had, in uncontrollable Families, at about twenty Pounds per Ann. and the Tuition will be six Pounds, New-York Currency, and eight Shillings for Wood.

Westchester is about nineteen Miles from New-York, by Land, and about fifteen by Water; and a Water-passage may be had almost every Day, when the Weather will permit, in good safe Boats." — Rivington's Gazetteer, March 1, 1775. In Westchester County, there are from thirty young gentlemen from the Island of Jamaica, one from Montreal, four children of gentlemen now in England and others from New York and the country.— Dawson, Westchester County in the Rev., 139. For the raid on Seabury, see Nov. 22.

The Governor reports a meeting of the "committee of observation" (see Nov. 22, 1774). It is proposed that they "nominate delegates, to the continental congress, for the approbation of the city and county," but being opposed, the final resolution of the committee is deferred to the next meeting.— Rivington's Gazetteer, March 1, 1775. See Feb. 11.

At a meeting of the New York committee of correspondence, it is ordered "That as the Non-Importation of Indus Tea is to take place in a few days, the third article of the Association be printed in all the publick Papers of this City, in order that the inhabitants be apprized thereof." — Assemb. Jour., 1: 1269. This order, together with the third article of the "Association," appeared in Rivington's Gazetteer, March 2, 1775. The third article read: "As a non-consumption agreement, strictly adhered to, will be an effective security for the observation of the non-importation, we, as above, solemnly agree and associate, that from this day, we will not purchase or use any tea; or any other article, or any which has been imported from the East-India Company, or any on which a duty hath been, or shall be paid; and from and after the first day of March next, we will not purchase or use any East-India Tea whatever; nor will we, nor shall any person for or under us, purchase or use any of those goods, wares or merch- anises, we have agreed not to import, which shall have cause to suspect, were imported after the first day of December, except such as come under the rules and directions of the tenth article hereafter mentioned." — By private sale, All that valuable house, many years known by the name of the Queen's Head Tavern, near the Exchange, in three stories high, with a tile and lead roof, has fourteen fire places, a most excellent large Kitchen, fine dry cellars, with good and convenient offices, sufficient for a large family, the business above- mentioned, a merchant, or any other trader, is a corner house, very open and airy, and in the most complete repair, near to the new Ferry. Further particulars and a good title will be given by S. E. Francis, who, so far from declining his present business, is determined to use every the utmost endeavour, to carry on the same to the pleasure and satisfaction of his friends, and the public in general.— N. Y. Merc., Feb. 27, and April 17, 1775. Francis did not sell the house until ten years later, and continued to keep tavern here until the Revolution, and again after 1785 until its sale on Apr. 23, 1785 (q. v.).

The New York Hospital (see Sept. 3, 1777), "at Ranclagh, a large pile of buildings lately erected and nearly finished," is almost totally destroyed by Westchester, being all gone to Draper, and the Rooms lumbered with combustible Materials, the Flames spread so fast, that before any Help could be called, they were got to too great a Height to be suppressed, and the whole wooden Part of the Building, the erection of which had been the Work of many Months, was, in about one Hour, reduced to Ashes.— It is unknown by what Means the Accident happened, but it is supposed that the Feb. 28. shavings might have been left too near the Fire.—It is hoped, how- ever, that Charity, which reared this Structure, will cause any one who has any Food for the Distressed Poor”—

N. T. Jour, March 2, 1775. The legislature responded to the appeal for aid on April 1 (q.v.).

Mar. 1. The committee of correspondence summons the freeholders and freemen to meet at the exchange on March 6 (q.v.), to "signify their sense of the best method of choosing . . . Delegates [to the second continental congress], and whether they will appoint a certain number of persons, to meet such Deputies as the Counties may elect for that purpose, and join with them in appointing out of their body, Delegates for the next Congress."—Am. Arch., II: 34;

The general committee of Charlestown, S. C., writes to the New York committee: "It was with equal surprise and concern that we read in the public prints what passed in your House of Assembly on the 26th of January [q.v.], with respect to the proceedings of the General Congress. It is impossible for us, at this distance, to conjecture the reasons which induced the Assembly to refuse their formal assent to the Solemn Agreement of all these Colonies . . . We are not insensible of the consequence of your resolution of American disunion; and your Assembly, if it becomes the Ministry insensible of it; we are well aware of your unhappy situation, and of the many artful measures that have been, and now are, taking, if possible, to throw you into confusion . . . We are not ignorant of that crowd of placemen, of contractors, of officers, and needy dependents upon the town, who are constantly employed to misrepresent your Measures. We know the dangerous tendency of being made the headquarters of America for many years. All these things, though they necessarily tend to clog the wheels of public spirit, yet do not cause us to doubt of public virtue, as a Colony: nay, we assure ourselves, that your love to Constitutional Liberty, to justice, and your posterity, however depressed for a little while, will at last surmount all obstacles, and do honour to New York."—Am. Arch., II: 1-2.

Colden writes to Dartmouth that "the non-importation association of the Congress is ever rigidly maintained in this Place. The enemies of Government do all they can to propagate an opinion that the Ministry will yet draw back and quiet the Colonies by a Repeal." He sends him a "Pamphlet lately published in this Place," saying: "We have had several good political pieces published here this winter this is esteemed one of the best, it is written by Mr Galloway of Philadelphia."—N. T. Col. Desc., VIII: 547-48. The pamphlet was A Candid Examination of the Mutual Claims of Great Britain and the Colonies, etc. (ibid., 544, foot-note).

The Whigs of Newport, R. I., draw up the following resolution: "whereas, a certain James Rivington, a Printer and Stationer in this City, is accused by the Town of having written and printed: This handbill accorded pelt with that haughty domineering spirit, hath, for a long time, in the dirty Gazetteer, and in pamphlets, if possible still more dirty, uniformly persists [sic] in publishing every falsehood which his own wicked imagination, or the imaginations of others of the same stamp, at ingenious perhaps in mischief as himself, could suggest or fabricate, that had a tendency to spread jealousies, fear, discord, and discordion through this country; and by partial and false representations of facts, hath endeavoured to pervert truth and to deceive and to mislead the innocent in worse conceptions of facts reported, and wrong sentiments respecting the measures now carrying on for the recovery and establishment of our rights, and the supporters of those measures . . .Resolved, therefore . . . that no further dealings or correspondence ought to be had with the said James Rivington; and we recommend it to every person who takes his paper . . . immediately to drop the same."—Am. Arch., III: 245-46.

Similar resolutions were adopted at Freehold, N. J., on March 6 (4 Am. Arch., II: 53-56), and at Ulster County, N. Y., on March 14 (ibid., II: 132). See March 29.

This City, after being one of the most refractory on the Continent, it becomes the most submissive and compliant in the Nation, America, for they have not only built excellent barracks for the army, but also supply the troops with every necessary of life; and late last the Assembly voted 200l. for the current year, and not-withstanding the passing the Stamp Act, and duties on paper, glass, paint, cordage, and tea, and their Assembly anathematized by tyranny, yet that very Assembly, when afterwards suffered to meet, immediately granted fifteen hundred pounds to be invested in an equestrine statue of his Majesty, on the arrival of which it was erected in a Square in the Heart of the City, on the Anniversary day of its erecting. Governor Colden, with his wretched council and assembly, the Mayor, Aldermen, with the military, went in procession on the Spot, where, after surrounding the leading horse and his rider, the common cryer made proclamation for the multitude, and an occasion was made by Mr. Thomas Cleeve, in which he recited the many blessings they enjoy under this pious reign; after which they drank his majesty's health, and returned to their respective homes, amidst the Hisses of the people.

The wretches above mentioned met in Council and Assembly, have by a majority voted, not to obey the General Congress resolution, but to protest against and oppose all the Continent of America, who are making so noble a stand in defence of their liberty, whilst the people of this Province wish to do the same; but they are unhappily in the hands of dependant Planters, Contractors, Informers, a refugee Roman Catholic Family, and other, the veriest reptiles on earth. This therefore is the only Colony, on which the British Junto must rely to enslave America."—From newspaper clipping in the Upcott Coll., IV: 299.

A Londoner writes: "The friends of America, on the arrival of the Packet, were greatly alarmed at a report, that New York was disaffected to the common cause, and determined to break the Resolves of the Congress, especially that of non-importation; however we had the pleasure, from the best accounts, to find it otherwise, and that we had little reason to fear the late Resolutions of your Assembly would produce any change in your proceedings."—Am. Arch., II: 24-25; cf. March 4.

The notice of March 3 (q.v.) meets with the disapproval of the conservative element in the city. John Thurman, as chairman of a meeting of a "very respectable number of . . . friends to constitutional liberty," issue an Address to the "freeholders of the City and County of New York." These "friends" oppose the meeting of March 6 (q.v.) because "the sense of the city [concerning the choice of delegates] ought to be taken in a most satisfactory manner, for which, next Monday is a day much too early." They think that, if the meeting is postponed until April 20, "it is highly probable that we shall have such advice from England as will enable us then effectually to determine on the most expeditious mode of acting, whereas in the present situation of things, we may resolve on that which we may soone have reason to repent of." For this reason, they ask the people to vote (on March 6) "for post- ponning the said Meeting until Thursday 20th of April next, as you will thereby prevent the many ill consequences, which will probably ensue, on so hasty a determination, and give yourselves time to deliberate on the most expeditious mode of benefiting your Country, and securing your invaluable liberties.""—From column of protest from the radicalists, who, on the same date, issue several answers to it. "A Tory" tells John Thurman: "That the sense of this city on the question now before them, may as well be taken on Monday next, as at any time: For although it may take much time to make him understand it, his fellow-citizens labour under no such incapacity . . . That advice from England have nothing to do with our appointing Delegates for the next Congress, and therefore that we may as well wait till the conclusion of the Pope, as the arrival of the Packet . . . that between the 20th of April, and the 10th of May [q.v.] there is not sufficient time to write to, and receive an answer from all the colonies."

Another writer, signing himself "Americanus," addressing the "Freeholders and Freemen," declares: "Their [the Conservatives'] insinuation that the day is too short, for your consideration, is an insult upon your understandings: All of our sister colonies, have lately chosen their Delegates, and shall we delay concurring in a measure, that has been the subject of consideration, ever since the last Congress? You cannot be ignorant that if we do not appoint Delegates, all the Colonies will, and must withhold their trade and connection with us; whereby . . . we shall not only act a dishonourable part, but believe it will be the ruin of us: we shall be destitute of many necessaries which we now receive from them, and the next Congress may be induced to enter any Measures against us, for our perfidy . . . We have already chosen a respectable and approved Committee; as such, let us strenuously support them in the measures they have adopted and frustrate the wicked attempts of our enemies."

There is also an address "To the Inhabitants of the City and County of New York" by "A Citizen." He pleads: "Consider what you are about—take care that you don't become a bye word, and a reproach throughout the world, and through out all ages—You have saved your country, preserve it still—you have therefore been free, be so still... Go then, on Monday, to the Exchange, and delay not to pursue the advice of the Congress, by forthwith declaring, that Deputies shall be chosen to meet those from the other Counties, and in conjunction with them, appoint Delegates for the next Congress."—From the handwritings in the N. Y. Pub. Library. The one signed by John Thurnam is, by misprint, dated 1774.

A letter from London contains the following: "The news which the Packet brought us of the conduct of the people of New-York, has filled every heart with joy, and employed every tongue in your praise. Even faction itself admires in silent applause. Pursue the same line of mild and prudent counsel and conduct, and you will secure the liberties of your Country, and obtain immortal gratitude from the posterity of even your rivals."—4 Am. Arch., II: 29. Cf. March 2.

6 The meeting previously announced (see March 1) takes place at the exchange. In preparation for this meeting, a "Union Flag, with a red field, was hoisted on the liberty-pole, where, at nine o'clock, the friends of Freedom assembled." They marched to the exchange, "attended by music." Later (see March 4), members of the Packet were present. Among those present were several of the Army and Navy, of this Island, and some of the principal citizens, who refused taking into consideration the proceedings of the Congress [see Jan. 29, together with Officers of the Customs, and other departments. On March 7, 1774, the same committee proposed, but sub-sidies without any bad consequences." By a majority vote, it was decided to authorize the committee to nominate 11 delegates (see March 16) "to meet such Deputies as the Counteys may elect" on April 30 (g. v.) and appoint delegates to the next Congress.—4 Am. Arch., II: 48-49. Cf. Becker, Hist. of Pol. Parties in the S. W. 2: 226.

Two Tories, William Cunningham (see Aug. 4, 1774) and John Hill, are handled roughly by "a mob of above two hundred men near the liberty pole." The former is called upon to "go down on his knees and damn his Popish King George," but he explains instead "God bless King George." This enraged the people that they "dragged him through the green, tore the cloaths off his back, and robbed him of his watch." Hill was treated in a like manner.—Rivington's Gazetteer, March 9, 1775. Cunningham became later the British provost-marshall (see Sept. 16, 1776).

7 This week the New-York Packet printed (March 11, 1774, g. v.), "to fix on a suitable place for building a government house, and to prepare a plan or plans, and an estimate of the expense," report that they think "the most proper place... is in Fort George, either in the front towards the broad way, or in the rear next the back curtain, provided the front curtain be pulled down." They present plans for the building and an estimate of the expense, which are referred to a committee of the whole house.—Assemb. Jour. (1775), 59-60.

8 By a vote of 14 to 12, the assembly adopts the following resolutions:
1. That the people of New-York "owe the same faith and allegiance to his most gracious Majesty King George the third, that are due to him from his subjects in Great Britain."
2. That they owe obedience "to all acts of parliament calculated for the general weal of the whole empire, and the due regulation of the trade and commerce, but do not in consistence with the essential rights and liberties of Englishmen."
3. That "it is essential to freedom, and the undoubted right of Englishmen, that no taxes be imposed on them but with their consent, given personally, or by their representatives in general assembly and jury."
4. That the parliamentary acts for raising revenue, for extending the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts, and for depriving the colonists of trial by jury "are destructive to freedom, and subversive of the rights and liberties of the colonists."
5. That the practice of sessing inhabitants of the colony suspected of disloyalty or other offenses and sending them out of the colony to be tried "is dangerous to the lives and liberties of his Majesty's American subjects."—Assemb. Jour. (1775), 63-65.

The general assembly resolves to grant $4,000 towards rebuilding the hospital.—Assemb. Jour. (1775), 67. On March 16, the governors of the hospital thanked the assembly for the resolution.

—Ibid., 78.

On or about this date, a broadside, addressed "To the Freeholders and Citizens of the City and County of New-York," and signed "A Freeman," was published. This attacked the city committee for suggesting that the delegates to the second continental congress be chosen by a provincial convention instead of by the inhabitants at large. It urged the inhabitants to resist the holding of such a convention because many of the counties would refuse to send representatives and because the members would probably assume powers not delegated to them. In conclusion, "A Freeman" called upon the people of the city to meet the five men who had attended the first congress and to allow the other counties to choose their representatives separately.—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library. For an answer to this, see March 14.

A letter from London contains this news: "The plan of this accursed Ministry is, to divide and govern, in hopes of completing their principle of slavery, by the base advantages and preferences now held out to New-York, North-Carolina, and Georgia... with what contempt ought the base majority of the New-York Assembly to be held! Have they not been honoured with that disapprobation, to wit: Tarring and Feathering? It ought to be administered as a deterrent to others. For if that deflection had not happened, we had the utmost reason to expect other measures would have been adopted than these villainous Acts passed and passing."—4 Am. Arch., II: 118. Cf. March 4.

Colden, in a message to the assembly, says: "The very insufficient state of the public office of the Secretary of the province [see III: 975] is obvious. The records and papers, which are of the greatest importance to the whole province, are, from the ruinous state of the house, daily exposed to the worst effects of the weather. —Assemb. Jour. (1775), 71. On March 22, Gerard Bancker was allowed a sum, not to exceed $400, "to be laid out by him in repairing the Secretary's office of this colony."—Ibid., (1775), 84.

James Rivington having printed in his paper (see Feb. 27) a paragraph which the committee of correspondents had suggested "to publish very truly and wholly false and groundless," two members of the committee report on their interview with him. When asked what authority he had for the statement, Rivington told them "he published it from common report, but would be more careful in the future, and was willing to contradict it." The committee thereupon resolves, "That common report is not sufficient authority for any Printer in this City to publish any matters as facts relative to this Committee, and tending to expose them to the resentment of their Constituents, and the odium of the Colonies; for that the transactions of this Committee are kept secret. March 15, 1774 (g. v.). The committee then resolved to pull down the list of such reports, by applying to any of the Members." In the Gazetteer of March 16, Rivington objected to the committee members' report, and claimed that he actually said: "what was related in my Paper was credited; yet if they would furnish me with accounts of their Proceedings, I might be able to print them without error."—4 Am. Arch., II: 90-91.

He says: "This is the only way to get a proper representation of the Colony as the Assembly has not the power to do the matter. Let your suffrages be given free. Mark the men who oppose this equitable mode, as foes to your liberty... Behold them, as those who are doing all in their power to distract your tion of the actions of the committees, a plea for sending delegates to the continental congress and for allowing the provincial convention to frame a constitution, and a refutation of the charges made by "A Freeman" on March 10 (p. v.).

On the same day, "A Friend to the Congress" publishes a 43 broadside, addressed "To The Freeholders & Freeman of the City and County of New-York," in favour of the provincial convention.
He shows that the five men who represented the city and county in the first congress will not be excluded from the second, for their names are on the list of eleven nominated by the committee.—From in the weekly newspapers an advertisement to this effect.—M. C. C., VIII: 8.

Isaac Lown, in an address "To the respectable Public," makes 53 known his decision not to be a delegate to the continental congress, even if chosen, because he has "long been weary of Politics, which appear ... to be too much influenced by Mecevolence and Faction ... He 55 declares that all the Lown are Anti-Liberal Americans, through their heredity, education, manners, religious principles, forms of government, and distance from Great Britain, have been imbued with an intense passion for liberty, and will under no circumstances yield to force.
57
Then he discusses and controverts the different schemes which have been either proposed or talked of for the government of America, and finally offers his resolutions, which, he says, "mean to establish the equity and justice of a taxation of America by grant and not by impostion. To mark the legal competency of the 59 colony assemblies for the support of their government in peace, and for public aids in time of war. To acknowledge that this legal 61 competency has had a dutiful and beneficial exercise; and that this experience has shown the benefit of their grants, and the facility of parliamentary taxation as a method of supply."

Burke presents each of his six resolutions separately, advocates 63 the repeal of the Boston Port Bill and the other coercive laws applied to Massachusetts, and, in conclusion, entitles this paper as
"Let us get an American revenue as we have got an American empire. English privileges have made it all that it is; English privileges alone will make it all it can be. In full confidence of this unalterable truth, I now ... say the first stone of the temple of peace,"

Edmund Burke delivers in parliament his celebrated speech 79 on American colonization which contains the immortal 81 vista, that the proposition which he offers is peace. "Not peace 83 through the medium of war. Not peace to be hunted through the 85 labyrinth of intrigue and endless negotiations. Not peace to arise 87 out of universal discord, cemented from principle in all parts of the 89 empires ... It is simply peace sought in its natural course, and its 91 ordinary haunts. It is peace sought in the spirit of peace, and 93 laid in principles purely pacific ... "Peace implies reconciliation; and where there has been a material dispute, reconciliation does in a manner imply concession on 95
the part of one or both parties. In this state of things I make no difficulty in affirming that the proposal ought to originate from us.
Great and acknowledged force is not impaired, either in effect or in 97 opinion, by an unwillingness to exert itself. The superior power 99 may offer peace with honor and with safety. Such an offer, from such a power, will be attributed to magnanimity. But the concessions of the weak are the concessions of fear." He observes that the questions which must be decided are whether parliament ought to concede and what the concession ought to be. He then examines, with minuteness and accuracy, the 103 internal and external, the natural and accidental circumstances of the 105 colonies; he considers them with respect to situation, resources, extent, numbers, amazing growth in population, rapid increase in commerce, fisheries, and agriculture; and from these he points out 107 their great strength and importance. England's export trade had increased tenfold between 1764 and 1774, and the exports in 1772 to the colonies alone were almost equal to the entire export trade 109 of Great Britain in 1704.
101

After giving these statistics, Burke continues: "America, gentlemen, I say, is a noble object. It is an object well worth fighting 111 for. Certainly it is, if fighting a people he the best way of gaining 113 them ... But I confess ... my opinion is much more in favor of prudent management than of force; considering force not 115 as an odious but a feeble instrument, for preserving a people so numerous, so active, so growing, so spirited as this, in a profitable
and subordinate connection with us."

1775 and your Majesty's American dominions, give us the deepest and most undesigned concern. . . .

25 "Your Majesty's American subjects have hitherto been in a state of infancy; . . ; they have now reached the period of maturity, and are entitled to an equal participation of freedom with their fellow subjects in Britain. It is with this view we now address your Majesty. We mean not to become independent of the British Parliament; . . ; we wish only to enjoy the rights of Englishmen, and to have that share of liberty, and those privileges secured to us which we are entitled to . . .

26 "Your Majesty's subjects in this colony, think it essential to freedom, and the unbounded right of Englishmen, that no taxes should be imposed on them without their consent given personally, or by their representatives.

27 We likewise beg leave to declare to your Majesty, that we consider the acts of Parliament raising a revenue in America, but more especially those to provide for the support of civil government, and the administration of justice [see June 29, 1767] . . . and extending the courts of admiralty beyond their ancient limits— as grievous and destructive of our rights and privileges . . .

28 "That the imposition of duties upon articles of commerce imported from Great Britain, is oppressive and impolitic, as it gives the greatest encouragement to illicit trade . . .

29 "We likewise think, the act prohibiting the legislature of this colony from passing any law for the abolition of paper currency to be a legal tender therein [see April 18, 1763], is disadvantageous to the growth and commerce thereof . . .

30 "The late acts for shutting up the port of Boston, and altering the charter of the Massachusetts Bay, we presume not to mention to your Majesty, without first assuring you that we, in many instances, disapprove of the conduct of that province, and beseeching your gracious interposition in their favor; we cannot however help observing that those acts . . . establish a dangerous precedent, by inflicting punishment without the formality of a trial." Addres ses similar to those referred to the two Houses of Parliament.

31 Assemb. Journ. (1775), 109-17. These were all forwarded on the "Charming Peggy," which sailed March 30 (q.v.).

32 John Thurman writes another letter to Rutger Bleeker of Albany: "I think we are all in the Wrong both Parties in the House & out. Committees Congresses & Conventions a Spirit of Opposition so frequently excludes Reason & Moderation that Matters are Now got to such a pass as to require more than Human Wisdom to set them right . . .

33 We are told by all the Governors on the Continent if we ask a Redress of our Grievances tho' our Assemblies we shall be heard & if Our Grievances are real they shall be redressed I am for taking them at their Word & would follow Peace in any way & so far agree with our assembly in their mode . . .

34 "I think it was very Wrong to Hurry the House in the Consideration of the Congress [see Jan. 26] this would have come well at the New Session of Congress . . . If it were Possible for Great Britain to make peace with America without Degrading herself below the Dignity of a Superior & lead to new Broils I should be easier as I am. But as I think she cannot grant all that she asks I fear the Breach will not be healed."—From "Extracts from the Letter Books of John Thurman, Jr." in Hist. Mag., 20d ser., IV: 291.

35 "The Corporation of this City have laid out a Lot of Ground between the Work-House and the Liberty Pole, for erecting the Bridewell, so much, and so long wanted in this Place; and we hear the said Building will be set about immediately" (see April 6)—N. Y. Merc., March 27, 1775. The building erected was of dark grey stone, two stories high, besides the basement. For complete descriptions and pictures of it, see Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 486-92; Booth, Hist. of City of N. Y., 522-23; Smith, N. Y. City in 1789, 15-14; Richmond, N. T. and its Institutions 1691-1811, 69, 514-15; Wilkes, Hist. of N. Y., III: 342; Ref. Key, III: 972. It was hardly finished by the time the war started, but the British, in spite of this, used it as a prison (see Dec. 15, 1776).

36 A newspaper advertisement reads: "To be Let (And entered on the 25th June next) all the large and extensive Vineyards situate at the North-River, which have been for many years past occupied by the crown as provision stores."—N. Y. Merc., March 27, 1775. This seems to be the "Arsenal" shown on Pl. 43, Vol. I. It faced the North River between Cortlandt and Dey Sts. To-day, the boundaries of the plot would be Cortlandt, Dey, Greenwich, and Washington Sts.

37 At a meeting of the committee of 60, in the committee chamber, an advertisement is drawn addressed "To the respectable Inhabitants of the City of New-York, with a view to ascertain the committee views with concern and uneasiness the unusual exportation of rails, and fears the distress which a monopoly of this or any other article may occasion, and recommends avoiding "drawing the people of this City into any difficulties or discontent, by expounding or encouraging the monopoly of such great quantities of Nails as may leave a provision for our own consumption precarious, especially as it is not certain whether these Nails, so hastily bought up and exported, are designed to be used or to be stored." The committee also warns the citizens against the "propriety of supplying the Troops at Boston with implements of war, and articles essential to hostilities."—4 Am. Arch., II: 242-43. These recommendations were considered at a meeting of the inhabitants on April 6 (q.v.).

38 A gentleman in Connecticut writes to John Holt: "Mr. James Rivington has often been misinformed on a publick manner, and sundry Resolves have been passed in the different Colonies, respecting his conduct as a Printer [see March 13] only as being partial, but as publishing falsehoods tending to disunite them in their great struggle to support constitutional liberty, destroy their mutual confidence, and render abortive that system of conduct recommended by the Congress as the most certain and advisable expedient for obtaining a redress of our grievances. Mr. Rivington, or his partisans, have represented this as an attempt to destroy the liberty of the press. But shall a press disgorge calumny and falsehood with impunity? Shall the most innocent actions of a community be traversed, and the most reputable characters, even Legislative bodies, be traduced with passive tameness? This would be a tacit acknowledgement of the charge. Is it not notorious, that be, while America is anxiously struggling to preserve her constitutional liberties, like an insidious spy, watches every motion towards the grand point, and strives to frustrate every design, by disseminating distrust and falsehood among the people, in order to intimidate or divide them, thereby rendering his press an engine of tyranny, as well as a sink of the most impure productions."—4 Am. Arch., III: 111. See May 4.

39 The slop "Charming Peggy" sails for Bristol. The general assembly of New York sends by it "an humble, firm, dutiful and loyal petition to his Majesty; as also a memorial to the Lords, and a representation and remonstrance to the commons of Great Britain [see March 25] requesting their mutual endeavors for a settlement of the present disputes between the mother country and the colonies."—Am. Arch., April 4, 1775.

A Loudener writes to a correspondent in Philadelphia: "The Apr. behaviour of the New-Yorkers has raised the drooping spirits of the Ministry, and has been the cause of their pursuing their tyrannous measures towards America with tenfold vigour."—4 Am. Arch., III: 252.

40 In response to the petition of Jan. 27 (q.v.), the assembly passes "An Act for an indulgence to Persons of Scrupulous Consciences in the manner of Administering Oaths."—Col. Lema. N. Y., V: 785-84. Acts are also passed "to regulate the Pilots and establish their Pilotage between Sandy Hook and the Port of New York" and for the revival of "An Act for the better and more effectual collecting of Taxes in the City of New York."—Ibid., V: 746-52, 766.

41 The law of Dec. 31, 1766 (q.v.), "for the more effectual prevention of fires," etc., is amended so as to permit the erection of wooden buildings, with roofs of shingles or boards, north of a certain irregular line drawn across the city (as described in the act); but such buildings shall not exceed fourteen feet in height from the street level to the eaves, or have a roof whose elevation exceeds its breadth. The act also makes it lawful south of the line above mentioned "to cover the Flat of any building or dwelling house, or the Flat of any sill or sill northerly of the Flat of said house, so that the Flat do not exceed two equal fifth Parts of the Span of such Roof and there be erected around the same Flat a substantial Balcony or Balustrade and a Platform and Steps to the top of every Chimney."—Col. Lema. N. Y., V: 743-46. See May 2, 1774.

42 The last Militia Act of the provincial legislatures passed. It follows the general plan, and, in the main, the provisions of the act of March 24, 1772 (q.v.), with few amendments. It introduces the new provision that the blue coats of the troopers of Albany shall have "White metal Buttons;" and it provides for a uniform for the troopers of Kings County which shall be "blue Coats and red Jackets and their backs laced with Silver Lace." Persons free from enlistment now include "all Firemen within this Colony... All Supervisors, One Founder and Six Men to every Furnace and six Men to every Forge, all Colliers and their necessary Servants employed in burning of Coal and all bought Servants during their Servitude," in addition to those persons previously exempted (see Dec. 17, 1743). Every Quaker producing a certificate from one of the monthly meetings of his denomination, that he has been deemed a Quaker for a year or more, shall be exempted "from the ordinary Duties of Training or Mustering unless upon an Alarm, Invasion, Insurrection or Rebellion" (q. f. of Feb. 19, 1753).

The treasurer of the colony is ordered to pay 728—Col. Laws N. Y., V. 723—4. It then expired.

The treasurer of the colony is ordered to pay unto the Governors of the Society of the Hospital of the City of New York in America (see June 13, 1771) the Sum of Four Thousand Pounds for rebuilding the said Hospital lately consumed by Fire" (see Feb. 28)—Col. Laws N. Y., V. 725. Before the building was finished, the war between Great Britain and the colonies broke out, and the New York "Committee of Safety," on April 2, 1776 (q. v.), ordered that it be used as a barracks for the soldiers.

The treasurer of the colony is ordered to pay 577:8:2 to John van Dalsam "for Repairs done to the Battery."—Col. Laws N. Y., V. 728.

The legislature passes an act "to confirm the Proceedings of the Commissioners heretofore appointed by a Law of this Colony (see Messrs. Hardings) to settle the Lines of Division between the City of New York and the Township of Haerlem, and for establishing the Boundary between the said City and Township."—Col. Laws N. Y., V. 811—44.

The stands and stallings in the public markets (see March 14) are the subject of Collier's "General Act of Decl. 1752. Persons free and wharves and slips to John Bingham at the yearly rent of £100, subject to the Covenants Contained in the Conditions of Sale."—M. C. C., VIII. 88. For prior lesser, see ibid., VIII. 549.

Colden writes that as the assembly has refused to appoint delegates to the second continental congress (see Feb. 23) the "disaffected party are... exerting their utmost influence to obtain an appointment of Delegates by the people. It is not in the power of Government to prevent such measures; they are supported by individuals in their private characters and do not come within the energy of our Laws."—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII. 566.

The king grants to Drs. Cooper and Chandler allowances of $200 per annum in consideration of their "merit & Services."—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII. 569.

A royal commission is sent to James Rivington (see March 13) "to be His Majesty Printer within the Province of N. York," and an allowance of £100 per annum is made to him, to be paid out of such fund as the lords commissioners of the treasury shall think proper.—N. T. Col. Doc., VIII. 568.

The address of the committee of 60 to the inhabitants of New York concerning the exportation of naiis (see March 20) is read at a public meeting and unanimously approved. The question whether the troops at Boston ought to be supplied with "implements of war, and other necessary, for carrying on their operations against the people of the Massachusetts Bay" is decided in the negative. Because William and Henry Ustick have purchased "spades, shovels, and other intrenching tools, for the use of the army now at Boston," and have thus helped Gen. Gage, they are voted "invererate foes to American freedom," and the people agree "to break off all connection, and dealing with them for the future." After this, a committee of seven is "appointed to wait on the importers of Nails, and request them, not to dispose of those, which they have on hand to supply, to purchase them with a design to export them out of the province."—N. T. Jour., April 15, 1775. See also April 15.

The common council appoints a committee "to superintend the Building of the Bride-law, to make Contracts, purchase Materials, Auditor's Dept. &c."—M. C. C., VIII. 568.

A news item in the London Packet reads: "A gentleman lately arrived from New York reports, that the Americans are as likely to hold out as long a contest with their adversaries, as any of the ancient Vice-Roys of Mexico ever did against Old Spain; he saw nothing but rubbing up of arms, illatio, exercising, and every other preparation, denoting a vigorous resolution in the people, to defend themselves against all opposers to the very last."—London Apr. Packet, April 5 to 7, 1775.

A ship arrives from England with the latest news. Smith says: "Lord Chatham's Speech of 20 Jan[.] 9 v. gave the utmost animation to the Populace, and there were conventions immediately on it to obstruct the Exportation of Provisions & Straw & Timber &c to the Colonies; the Exportation of Bottled Spirit began with intimidating Ralph Thurman and Robert Harding" (see April 13). At a council held on April 13, the chief business was "to approve a Proch aq: those Designs on Representations of Briggs Genl Robertson to the L5 Govt"—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV, in N. Y. Pub. Library. Gen. Robertson's report seems to have concerned "a riot in which two transports were cast off from the wharf, and threats of destroying the magazine at Turtle Bay made."—Cal. Coun. Min., 505. At Smith's suggestion, the council decided "that the magistrates be directed to inquire, take Deposits & lay them before us, that we might know the Truth & have solid Grounds to act upon." The mayor and Gen. Robertson were immediately informed of this decision.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. For the mayor's action in regard to the matter, see April 15.

The "King Fisher" (see Jan. 12) soap-of-war weighs anchor and proceeds to the North Rivers, in Order to protect two Transports [see April 24] which lately arrived here from Boston, to take in necessary for carrying on the Siege of that Place."—N. Y. Jour., April 13, 1775.

A broadside, addressed "To the Inhabitants of the City and County of New-York" states that "a number of the Freeman, Freeholders, Merchants, and others, met at the house of the Widow Van de Water" and appointed a committee to dissuade Messrs. Ustick and others from supplying the British army under General Gage with implements of war. This broadside, which is signed Col. Hardings Order of the Meeting," adds that, "those inexpressible grief, they were found to be so infatuated with the hopes of gain, that no impression could be made on their minds, of the cruelty, or injustice of their conduct." It is therefore thought by the "Meeting" to be absolutely necessary once more, in the present posture of affairs, to collect the sense of the city and county, on the propriety of furnishing the troops with hay, straw, &c, as well as boards and planks; the former of which will enable the General... more effectually to take the field, and the latter to make platforms for the artillery, &c." Ralph Thurman and Robert Harding have been employed to furnish these articles, for which transports have been sent to New York. It is "earnestly requested that the Freeman, Freeholders, and other inhabitants of the city and county will meet at VI o'clock on next Saturday evening [April 15], at the Liberty-Pole, in order to signify their sense on the present occasion... From one of the original broadsides in N. Y. Pub. Library.

An effigy is hung up "by some of the lower class of inhabitants, at New-Brussels... representing the person of Mr. Rivington, the printer at New-York, merely for acting consistent with his profession as a free printer."—Rivington's Gazetteer, April 26, 1775.

In executing the council's order (see April 11), Mayor Hewes makes a blunder. He "mistook our Intention merely of gaining Information," Smith says, and on this day "Sears & one Wellet" were brought before him on warrants. "Wellet gave Ball—Sears refused & was carried to the New-Jail & there rescued at the Door, & paraded thro' the Town at 4 in the Afternoon & then carried to the Liberty Pole whereegaable to various notices by pelleted Billets the Populous conuened to punish Thurman & Harding—Sears took this opportunity to ask them, whether he should give Ball & the majority were for it—Hardings House was search'd but he escaped—Thurman's was not attacked... the magistrates & others represented the Fury of the Multitude—The poor Mayor was in the Fields, while these Councils were held with all his Balliffs, as mere Cyphers.... Thus every Day produces fresh Fuel to the General opposition.... De Lancey was in the Crowd in the Fields, help'd to save Will Bayard who by Speeches expressed himself to Inniut. See July 31..."

A news item in the London Packet reads: "A gentleman lately arrived from New York reports, that the Americans are as likely to hold out as long a contest with their adversaries, as any of the ancient Vice-Roys of Mexico ever did against Old Spain; he saw nothing but rubbing up of arms, illatio, exercising, and every other preparation, denoting a vigorous resolution in the people...

Colonial stores at Concord, crossed the Charles River on the night of the 18th and started toward Lexington. The people, however, had been aroused by patriot expresses, and the troops formed a company of Minute-men drawn up on Lexington green. A similar considerable force of provincials were ordered by them the British proceeded to Concord. Here they destroyed cannon and ammunition, and set fire to the court-houses. One party left to guard Concord bridge was opposed by a body of provincials. Shots were fired from both sides until finally the detachment had to retreat to the main body at Concord. By this time, the militiamen had begun to assemble from all parts of the country in such large numbers that Col. Smith found it imperative to retreat from Concord. He had sent to Gage for reinforcements, but the 2,500 men detached by the general under Earl Percy did not meet the retreating troops until they had reached Lexington. With the aid of two field pieces brought by Percy, the British made a stand at Lexington for about an hour. When they again proceeded on their march, they were closely pursued by a large force of colonial militia under the command of Maj.-Gen. Heath. Firing continued all the way to Charlestown Neck and then the British, under the protection of the "Somerset" man-of-war, got safely into the city.

American sources claim that the regulars fired first at both Lexington green and Concord bridge, and British accounts put the blame on the provincials. For a good bibliographical list of sources, see Justin Winsor's The Reader's Hand Book of the Am. Rev. 1775-1854, John Thuman Jr., in Hist. Mag. and ser. IV: 592. For the arrival of the news in New York, see April 23. See also Addenda.

Rev. Samuel Achmuty, in a letter to Capt. Montresor, says: "We have lately been plagued with a racially Whig mob here, but they have effectually nothing, only Sears, the King, was rescued at the jail during it. There were several Magistrates upon his refusing to give bail for being guilty of misdemeanors, &c. see April 15. Our Magistrates have not the spirit of a house; however, I prognosticate it will not long before he is handled by authority." —4 Am. Arch., II: 350.

The provincial convention summoned for the purpose of appointing delegates to represent the colony of New York in the second continental congress meets at the exchange. Deputies from the counties of New York, Albany, Ulster, Orange, Westchester, Dutchess, Kings, Suffolk, and Queens are present. Philip Livingston is unanimously elected president. On April 21, the convention chose James Johnseu, John Thuman, John Thuman, Thomas Bardin, Thomas Bardin, Thomas Bardin, Thomas Bardin, Thomas Bayonets &c.

To the inhabitants of New York, and all the British Colonies, containing extracts from London letters, is published. One of March 2, reads: "Part of the troops now ordered for embarkation here and in Ireland, are to rendezvous in New York, to make it a place of arms, securing the defection of that Province, from the general alliance in the cause of Freedom . . . and prevent the communication, between Virginia, Maryland, and the other southern Colonies, with New-England, where General Gage, with such assistance as he may get from New-York, is to subdue those Colonies first, and then all America; in which, if he succeed, New-York is to be a garrison town and place of arms, and with the assistance of Quebec, to rule with a rod of iron all the States of America; for without New-York, every Gentleman and man of knowledge in this kingdom is fully convinced the schemes is impracticable.

Another letter, dated March 1, states: "The means of Minis terial people here . . . Pray print this short hint for the observa tion of the honest men among you."—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

A Loyalist correspondent ("Anti-Licentiousness") discusses in Rivering's paper the disturbances created in the city by the Sons of Liberty, which he likens to the buzzing of "harmless insects" which "have at length made a feeble essay to sting as well as make a noise." After a published notice regarding non-importation of nails, a "certain set," assembled "at first at Philip's Coffee-house [the Horn and the Star], next at the Liberty Hall, then at the Liberty Pole, and lastly at Van Der Water's [Nassau St.]. . . ." A later meeting, he records, was held, on April 15, at the "Liberty Pole," at which Capt. Sears was apprehended and carried before the mayor. Bail was refused him and he was carried toward the jail, but was "set at liberty from the officers of justice, and led in triumph through the town." After describing these events, the writer continues: "For fear of being too populous, I shall omit the exploit to Turtle Bay, the march to the theater in the North-River, in consequence of which she was cut off from the wharf, and the bustling through the town, and cry of No Board at the Albany Pier; which being on the evening of Captain Lawrence's arrival, doubtless proceeded from their joy on the good tidings he brought [see April 15], and is a mark of gratitude and a proof that they are actuated by nothing but the patriotic sentiments of liberty.

"The Wind-Mill in the Bowery Lane, with the six valuable lots of ground on which it is built," is advertised to be sold on this day at the Merchant's Coffee-house.—N. T. Merc., March 20, 1775.

The relation to the events of April 15 (p.v.), Smith writes: 1

"I saw the Mayor at my own house—ask'd him why he did not take my Hint & bring in his Depositions for the Council to act upon them that the Saddle might be put upon the right Horse. Out came the Secret, that some of the Council had urged him on to save themselves . . . That within 3 an Hour after he left us it was accused by one who told him the heads of the Council had ordered Sears to be taken up—He remembered well he said that I told him in Council that he was to inquire & bring in his affidavits—That he so intended if he had not been urged by Reports as before—That he finds what he was made a Cattus Paw by of Fellow who had not the Courage to support him after the Rescue in preventing the Search of Hardings House—That Sears & Mc Dougall were useful in preventing Thurman's—He said he suspected some wanted Matter of Accusation ag't him—that he called the all the Magistrates together on Saturday morning [April 15] & they all agreed to his issuing the Warrants of that day. As Boornum Smith adds, in a note, his private opinion concerning the occurrence: "I suspect that Morris the Friend & Wallace the Brother in Law of Isaac Low hoped to find a Way to make Low Mayor next Michaelmas. The Mayor has disappointed them—Low refuses this Day to set in the Convention of New-York for part of the business, that they may be heard before that Time, as he writes me . . . that he has Leave of absence only till May & hopes to see me in June or July."—

Wm. Smith's Diary (M.S.), IV.

News of the battle of Lexington (see April 19) reaches the city at about noon on this day (Sunday) by an "express," who left while the conflict was still in progress. His story was substantiated by documents signed by the principal men of the New England towns through which he passed. In the afternoon these "interesting advices" were issued as a broadside without the printer's name. One of them, preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc., here reproduced at Pt. 25, Vol. IV. Although this broadside is mentioned by Evans (No. 14537), that of April 25 (p.v.), printed by John Holt, is often erroneously spoken of by collectors as "the Lexington broadside."

On April 14 this account of the battle was published in the N. T. Merc.

Col. Marinus Willet relates that the receipt of this news in New York "occasioned an Impulse in the Inhabitants which produced a general Insurrection of the Population who assembled and not being able to procure the Key of an armory where a number of arms belonging to the Colonial Government were deposited. Several of the Doors were forced open the door and took possession of those arms consisting of about 600 Muskets and Bayonets & Cartridge boxes to each filled with ball Cartridge. These arms were distributed among the most active of the Citizens who formed themselves into a Voluntary Corps and assumed the Government of the City. They possessed themselves of the keys of the Custom-house and took possession of all the public stores. There was a general stagnation of business. The armed Citizens were Constantly parading about the City Without any Definite object."—From "Colonel Maritus Willet's Narrative," in N.Y. City during the Rev. War, p. 53; 57; Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV, under date of April 24.

In a signed certificate dated Sept. 6, 1775, Jacobus Stoutenburgh stated that when the account of the battle of Lexington arrived there were 322 markets under his care in the city hall, and that "by the order of His Majesty's Council, the resturants instantly took the alarm; they had wished for it for a long time, they received the news with avidity. Isaac Sears, John Lamb and Donald Campbell (a half pay officer) paraded the town with drums beating and colours flying, (attended by a mob of negroes, boys, sailors, and pick-pockets) inviting all mankind to the "Accoutrements," that 28 markets and their "Accoutrements," which had been given to Isaac Stoutenburgh to clean, were also taken, and six iron bullet-moulds. He estimated each market and its accoutrements to be worth £5.

On Sept. 29, 1783, the common council ordered an investigation, with the intention of applying to the legislature for reimbursement.—M. C. (MS.), VIII, 171.

Judge Thomas Jones gives this account of the happenings in New York: "On Sunday morning the 23d of April, a confused account arrived from Boston, of a skirmish at Lexington between a detachment of the New England troops, and a party of the provincials, which instantly took the alarm; they had wished for it for a long time, they received the news with avidity. Isaac Sears, John Lamb and Donald Campbell (a half pay officer) paraded the town with drums beating and colours flying, (attended by a mob of negroes, boys, sailors, and pick-pockets) inviting all mankind to the "Accoutrements," that 28 markets and their "Accoutrements," which had been given to Isaac Stoutenburgh to clean, were also taken, and six iron bullet-moulds. He estimated each market and its accoutrements to be worth £5.

On the same evening the same set of fellows, under the same leaders broke open the Arsenal in the City Hall, and forcibly took away 1,000 stand of arms, belonging to the City Corporation, and delivered them out to the rabble, to be used as the demagogues of rebellion should direct. The whole city became one continued scene of riot, tumult, and confusion. Troops were enlisted for the service of rebellion, the Loyalists threatened with the gallows, and the property of the Crown plundered and seized upon wherever it could be found."—Jones, Hist. of N. Y. during the Rev. War, I, 39-40.

Private letters sent to England in the early part of May, after mentioning the unloading of the provision ships and the seizure of the arms, stated that "most of the Soldiers were made Prisoners."—St. James's Chronicle, June 10-13, 1775. For other reports of the battle see April 27 and 29, and May 31, also the "Diary of Rev. Mr. Shewkirk, pastor of the Moravian Church, New York," in The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 101.

A letter from Wethersfield, Connecticut, reads: "The eyes of America are on New-York; the Ministry have certainly been promised by some of your leading men, that your Province would desert us. ... Take care of your selves; we have more than men enough to block up the enemy at Boston, and if we are like to fall by treachery, by Heaven we will not fall unrevenged on the traitors; but if balls or swords will reach them, they shall fall with us. It is now time to dally, or be merely neutral; he that is not for us is against us, and ought to feel the first of our resentment. You must now declare most explicitly, one way or the other, that we may know whether we are to go to Boston or New-York. If you desert us, then we will as cheerfully attack New-York as Boston; for we can but perish, and that we are determined upon, or be free."—Am. Arch., II, 367.

Lieut.-Gov. Colden informs the council "that last Night a Number of Persons violently Seized five hundred and thirty stand of Arms, which belonged to the City and were Lodged in the City Hall, that they also Seized the public powder House, and have put a Guard of fifty Men to maintain it; that they have been Parading thro' the Town this Day, and have Proclaimed a meeting of the Inhabitants this Afternoon, in order as it is said to chuse Majesties's Arms, which are now in the hands of the "Accoutrements; to lay down their Arms." The advice of the council is desired in this Alarming Exigency of Affairs."—Count. Min. (MS.), XXVI: Apr. 431 (Albany).

Smith reports that, in order to "know our Strength," the council decided to hold another meeting at half past four and ordered the Judges in Town the Field officers of the Militia the Mayor & Recorder to attend. At this meeting, he says, that he could give Gov'l no Aid from the Militia for they were all Liberty Boys who would keep the Peace of the City in other respects—The Mayor said that the Magistrate Authority was gone—Judge Livingston that all was quiet in Dutchess, & Jones said the same of Orange. They withheld Laspert's assertion that he did not believe there was any Design upon the Soldiers—we were then unanimously of Opinion that we had no Power to do any Thing & the best mode of proceeding for private Safety and general Peace was to use Distraction from Violence."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

Judge Jones, erroneously reporting the meeting under date of April 23, states that he "boldly proposed that the militia should be called out, the riot act read, and if the mob did not disperse, to apprehend and imprison the ringleaders, and by such coercive means to secure the peace of the City. This proposal was opposed by Mr. Sherman, by his Majesty's Council, who openly declared that 'the ferment which then raged in the city was general and not confined to a few; that it was owing to a design in the British Ministry to enslave the Colonies, and to carry such design into execution by dint of a military force that the battle of Lexington was paraded upon as a prelude to such intemperance, and that the spirit then prevailing in the town (which he represented as universal) would subsist as soon as the grievances of the people were redressed, and advised to let the populace act as they pleased.' Nobody replied, the times were critical, a declaration of one's sentiments might be dangerous, the Council broke up and nothing was done."—Jones, Hist, of N. Y, during the Rev. War, I, 40-41.

A letter from New York, printed in the Penn. Journal, states: "I do not doubt but the interesting news from Boston [see April 19] must give every good and virtuous man much concern, that from present appearances a reconciliation between us and Great-Britain, is at a farther distance than we have, from the following importunity; surely this proceeding on the part of General Gage, is not the olive branch held up by government. Yesterday this whole city was in a state of alarm, every face appeared animated with resentment, soon after the news arrived by express, many citizens went to two transports loaded with bread, flour, &c. for the troops, and they were speedily unloaded."

Another letter of this date, written from New York, reports: "When the accounts from Massachusetts-Bay came to town yesterday, the inhabitants went immediately down to two sloops that were loaded with provisions for the parliamentary army at Boston, discharged them before they could bring them on to the land, and bringing the following importunity; surely this proceeding on the part of General Gage, is not the olive branch held up by government. Yesterday this whole city was in a state of alarm, every face appeared animated with resentment, soon after the news arrived by express, many citizens went to two transports loaded with bread, flour, &c. for the troops, and they were speedily unloaded."

Still another letter of April 24 gives this account: "This city [New York] was alarmed yesterday [April 23, 9-11] by a report from the eastward, that the king's troops had attacked the Massachussetts Bay people; the report was confirmed a few hours after by the arrival of St. Croix from Rhode-Island and an express from near Boston; the Committee was soon called and an express sent off to your city [Philadelphia], as you will have particulars by him before this reaches you I need say no more. There were two sloops here loaded with flour for the soldiers at Boston, by Mr. Watts; the people went Sunday as it was, and unloaded them in a hurry. Towards evening they went and secured about half the city arms, a guard of 100 men I am told was to be placed at the city hall to secure the rest of the arms, and another hundred at the powder house, this was not done by the magistrates but by the people.—Several arrivals from the eastward since the express, confirm the report of a battle between the Regulars and Provincialis, but differ in the number of killed, &c. The last account I think is, that about 100 Regulars were killed, among whom were two Colonels, and go taken prisoners the rest killed and 4 taken prisoners."—Penn. Jour, April 26, 1775. Cf. Col. Coun. Min., 505; Jones, Hist. of N. Y. During the Rev. War, I: 40.

A broadside, "Printed from the attested Original, by John Holt," is published. It begins: "This Day, about Noon, arrived a Frightful and Extremely bad account from this City, with the following in Advices."—i. e., a letter from Wallingford, of April 24, giving more

"A Virginia delegate to the congress (see April 20) writes: "The storm thickens very fast. The New-Youkers have received intelligence that their Town is to be fortificed, and fourteen Regiments to be sent there to cut off the communication between the Southern and Eastern Colonies; this has united them to a train in the American cause. They are forming themselves, and beg assistance from the Southland."—4 Am. Arch, II: 587

An address from Philadelphia is directed to "Mesieurs Delancy, White, Cohen, Watts, and Cooper, of New-York."

This paper, signed by "Three Millions," declares: "It appears, from a number of authentic letters from London, that the present hostile preparations against the American Colonies were occasioned by nothing but assurances from you of the defection and submission of the Colony of New-York. It is impossible to unfold the extensive and complicated nature of your crimes. You have defeated the attempts of the Congress to bring about a constitutional reconciliation with Great Britain. You have involved your fellow-subjects in Britain, Ireland, and the West-Indies, in all the distresses which must speedily fall upon them from an interruption of their Trade with America. But you have done more; You have undeceived the worm of Britain, and pointed against the bottom of your Country. You have held up a signal for a civil war; and all the calamities of Towns in flames, a desolated Country, butchered fathers, and weeping widows and children now lay entirely at your doors. Go now, ye patriots, to the Press of your associate, James Rivington, and there satiate yourselves with your triumph. But do not presume too much upon the impunity of Bernard, Hutchinson, and other traitors to America. Repeated insults and unparalleled oppressions have reduced the Americans to a state of desperation. Executions of villains in effigy will now no longer gratify their resentment. The blind of your unfortunate British and American fellow-subjects, who have already fallen in Massachusetts-Bay, calls to Heaven for vengeance against you. The injury you have done to your Country cannot admit of a reparation. Fly for your lives, or anticipate your doom by becoming your own executioners."—4 Am. Arch, II: 589.

The committee of 60 issues the following notice: "The Committee having taken into consideration the commotions occasioned by the sanguinary measures pursued by the British ministry [see April 19]... are unanimously of opinion, that a new Committee be elected by the freethinkers and freemen of this city and county; by John Watts, Esq., N. Y. 14178. And this Committee is further unanimously of opinion, that at the present alarming juncture, it is highly advisable that a Provincial Congress be immediately summoned; and that it be recommended to the freethinkers and freemen... to choose the 25 members for the City of New York. And at the said assembly, twenty deputies to represent them at the said Congress... to meet at New-York on... the 22d of May next." (q.v.)—Rivington's Gazetteer, May 4, 1775. The same notice, as a broadside, is in the collection of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. See May 1.

Judge Robert R. Livingston writes to his wife that "the town has been in a continual bustle enquiring into the Boston News of which we have not yet a clear account. People here are perfectly fearless. I mean the Whigs and the Tories turn Whigs so fast that they will soon be as much united as they are in the Massachusetts Colony."—Biographical Sketch of Francis Lewis and Morgan Lewis, N. Y. Hist. Soc, 1877, III: 224.

"The ill Success of the Troops at Boston concerning which we know nothing certain but that they had the worst of it, has induced all Parties here to cry out for committees & Congresses, & a Hand Bill now circulates for the Enlargement of the Committees, & for a parade of the民. Men in Arms to make a Great Meeting to form Companies this Day in the Fields."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

A broadside is published announcing the names of 10 men "recommended to the Public, as proper to be elected for a General Committee of the City and County of New-York, in the present alarming Exigency," and the names of 20 men recommended as deputies to the provincial congress. One of these is preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. and is reproduced as Pl. 43, Vol. IV.

A letter of this date from the New York committee to the counties, requesting them to elect delegates to the provincial congress, and signed by Isaac Low, chairman, states: "Most of the Deputies who composed the late Provincial Congress held in this city [see Apr. 20] were of opinion that the powers to choose Delegates to represent the Province at the next Continental Congress and the Convention having executed that trust, dissolved themselves. It is therefore thought advisable by this committee, that a Provincial Congress be immediately summoned to deliberate upon, and from time to time, to direct such measures as may be expedient for our common safety. "... We therefore entreat your county heartily to unite in the choice of proper persons to represent them at a Provincial Congress, to be held in this city, on the 22d of May next. Twenty deputies are proposed for this city. ..."—Jour. Provim. Cong., (1842), 5. See May 21.

Wm. Smith records in his diary: "It is impossible fully to describe the agitated state of the Town since last Sunday [April 23] when the News first arrived of the Skirmish between Concord & Boston.—At all Corners People inquisitive for News—Tales of all sorts invested believed, denied, discredited—Sunday in the afternoon... 2 Slops laden by Watts for Boston with Provisions unladen. On that Night the City Armory broken open & Powder taken out of the Powder-House—The efforts of the Townsmen done in the Day—few Jurors and Witnesses attend the Courts. armed Parties summon the Town publicly to come and take arms & learn the Manual Exercise—They are publicly delivered out and armed! Individuals shew themselves at all Hours in the Streets—Conflagration in the Faces of the Principal Inhabitants... Sears yesterday afternoon with 300 armed men waited on Eliot the Collector and got the Keys of the Custom House to shut up the Port—The Merchants are amazed & yet so humbled as only to sigh or complain in whispers. They now dread Sears' Train of armed Men—Friday Morning [April 28] he went with the Pride of a Dictator & forbade the Polls objecting to the List proposed by the Committee—The better Sort Whigs & Tories were astonished and cried out for a Committee. In the afternoon the Post arrives from Phil.—A Paragraph in Bradford's Paper charging as in a Letter from England De Lancey Watts Cooper & White with sending for Troops—The Populace rage—De Lancey went among the Crowd & offers his Oath of Denial—The Urtom Pains taken to asswage the Multitude who meant to proceed to execute them immediately... Saturday White called upon me & drew up a Denial upon oath Watts & De Lancey having published affidavits—a meeting in the Fields at 2 P.M.—I did not attend the summons of the Council of 100 persons. All Parties ran this Morning to sign an Association at the Coffee House—This seemed to give Peace and moderated the Field Business which evaporated in approving the Association—Thanking Sears for removing Cannon from the Docks to Kings Bridge which he had begun on Thursday for that sentence of 24 upon the Cape of New York and the 27th for the orders for seizing Cannon & merchant Ships at Marble Head & Salem—Whigs & Tories formed this Day's convention at the Liberty Pole in earnest for establishing the Power of the Committee as a general Provincial Congress. ..."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV; cf. Shewkirk's diary, in The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 127.

A "General Association," bearing this date, is agreed to, and subscribed by the freethinkers, freemen, and inhabitants of the city and county of New York. It is as follows: "Persuaded that the salvation of the rights and liberties of America, depends, under God, on the firm union of its inhabitants, in a vigorous prosecution of the measures necessary for its safety; and convinced of the necessity of preventing the anarchy and confusion on which attend a dissolution of the powers of government: We, the freemen, freethinkers and inhabitants of this city and county of New York, being greatly alarmed at the avowed design of the Ministry to raise a revenue in America; and shocked by the bloody scene now acting in the Massachusetts Bay, do, in the most solemn manner resolve, never to become slaves; and do associate under all the ties of religion, honour and love to our country, to adopt and endeavour to carry into execution whatever measures may be recommended by the Continental Congress, or resolved upon by our Provincial Convention for the purpose of preserving our Constitution, and opposing the execution of the several arbitrary and oppressive acts of the British Parliament,
The committee of 100 receives an address from Samuel Broome, in behalf of the "Military Association" of 100 inhabitants which he has been chosen to command. It is an expression of the desire of the company to support your resolutions respecting the preservation of American liberty, of peace and good order, and the safety of individuals, and of public property; upon every occasion we will cheerfully take our tour of duty.—q Am. Arch., III: 467; Leseke, Life of John Lamb, 102-3.

The public is informed that the treasury office "is removed to the House where Mr. Justice Livingston formerly lived, nearly opposite to Chapel Street."—N. Y. Merc., May 1, 1775.

Edward Willett, formerly of the York Arms in Broadway, opens a tavern in Broad St. near the exchange.—N. Y. Merc., May 1, 1775.

In a voluminous letter, addressed to "Dear Vardill," and signed "A Real Churchman," the recent events and present political conditions in New York and the country generally are cursorily described, and advice is given how the situation should be met by Great Britain. The original of this pro-British, anti-Republican, letter is among the Egerton MSS. in the British Museum (cited 2135 f. 5), and there is a copy of it in the Library of Congress.

The committee of 100 (see May 1) sends forth a "Committee-Chamber" this resolution: "Resolved unanimously, that it be recommended to every inhabitant, to perfect himself in Military Discipline, and be provided with Arms, Accoutrements, and Ammunition, as by law directed. Ordered, That the above resolve be immediately made public by the Order of the Committee, Isaac Low, Chairman."—Rivington's Gazetteer, May 11, 1775.

Colden informs Dartmouth that "the first accounts of an action between the Kings Troops and People, near Boston (Lenington), was published [see April 25] with horrid and aggravating circumstances. The moment of consternation and anxiety was seized. The people were assembled, and the spirit of disorder and violence began, which has entirely prostrated the Powers of Government, and produced an association by which this Province has solemnly united with the others in resisting the Acts of Parliament."

The committee has caused the custom-house to be closed. The military force at New York consists of a sloop of war ("King Fisher")—see April 12—and 100 men of the Royal Irish Regiment, commanded by Major Hamilton. "This small Body of Troops are quartered in the City Barracks without any kind of Protection but in their arms. Lord Dunmore when this in Govern' converted the Fort Barrast House, and burnt down the stables, and it is believed that before that time was a sufficient security against the attempts of a Mob. . . . The Posts between this place and Boston are stopped."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 571-72.

The committee of 100 has learned that the post master has discharged the "Eastern Post-riders. A sub-committee appointed to discover the reason reports that the post master said "That the four last mails between New-York and Boston have been stopped, the mails broken open, many of the letters taken out and publicly read . . . and that the riders informed him that it was not safe for them to travel with the mails in consequence of which, they were dismissed by him until they could carry the mail with safety as heretofore."

The sub-committee issues a notice stating as its opinion of the best way to continue a correspondence with the eastern colonies that "the present Eastern Post-riders be employed to depart from this City on the usual days, and to go the usual stage to the public office, and then, after that, which before that time was a sufficient security against the attempts of a Mob. . . . The Posts between this place and Boston are stopped."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 571-72.

A letter from New York says: "The late unhappy affair at Boston [see April 19] has had most amazing effects through every part of America; in this city it is astonishing to find the most violent proposals meeting with universal approbation:—The whole city has been arming up and Daniel Duryea, the post master, ordered to pass about 18 miles off, where a camp will be formed . . . Many families are retreating into the city, all business declining fast, and in a few weeks we expect will totally cease. The port here was stopped in
THE GOVERNORS and Council have represented to the King the state of the province, and given as their opinion that no propositions of reconciliation are likely to take effect, unless the American Assembly and the Connecticut Legislature knows what will be the issue of these unhappy disputes; every hour and every drop of blood spilled, put the hope of a reconciliation at a farther distance. It is my opinion, from the present spirit of the people, that there is a determined resolution to die with arms in their hands—establish the liberties of the country on a permanent footing.—London Chronicle, June 13-15, 1775. See May 25.

Instructions are given to Gov. Tryon at Whitehall to return to New York. He is informed that "The rebuilding the Governors House, Secretaries office, and the Hospital, are considered by the King as very commendable services, and his Majesty is graciously pleased to allow you to assent to any Bills, that either have been, or shall be preferred, for making provision for defraying the expense of those services, either by Lottery or in any other mode the Assembly shall think fit to adopt." The subject of granting charters to the Dutch and Presbyterian Churches, and to King's College, was also considered.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 572-74.

An advertisement of this date reads: "Those Gentlemen who incline to insist in a Company of Foot, are requested to send their names to the house of Mr. Jasper Drake, where may be seen the articles of the Company, on no principle he admitted that is about the House or in the streets high."—N. Y. Jour., May 4, 1775.

"In the Harriet Pasquet, which will this day sail for England, goes as passenger Lieutenant-Colonel John Maunsell [see May 15, 1767], who has resided in this province 12 years, and is well acquainted with it in order to lay before administration a true state of the colony: It must be supposed, as this gentleman has long served his Majesty, and being still a servant of the Crown, that his report will be favourably received."—Rivington's Gazetteer, May 4, 1775. The ship carries a letter from Lieut-Gov. Colden to Lord North which says: "...So many gentlemen have since taken the resolution of quitting the province, among worse in this, that any passengers on board the ship may have the best Information from a variety of Hands."

James Rivington addresses the public in these words: "As many Publications have appeared from my Press which have given great Offence to the Colonies, and particularly to many of my Fellow Citizens; I am therefore led by a most sincere regard for their favourable Opinion, to declare to the Public that Nothing I have ever done has proceeded from any Sentiment in the least unfriendly to the Liberties of this Continent, but altogether from the Ideas I entertained of the Liberty of the Press, and of my duty as a Printer. I am led to make this free and public Declaration to my Fellow Citizens which I hope they will consider as one of my Resolutions, to conduct my Press upon such Principles as shall give offence to the Inhabitants of the Colonies in general, and of this City in particular, to which I am connected by the tenderness of all human Ties, and in the Welfare of which I shall consider my own as inseparably involved."—Rivington's Gazetteer, May 4, 1775. See May 10.

The "General Committee of Association" (committee of 100) draws up a letter to the lord mayor and magistrates of London "on the Subject of American Wrongs." Among Great Britain's offenses against the colonies are "the oppressive Restraints on the Commerce of the Colonies,—the Blockade of the Port of Boston,—the change of Internal Police in the Massachusetts and Quebec,—the establishment of Popery in the latter,—the extension of its bounds,—the ruin of our Indian Commerce by Regulations calculated to aggravate that arbitrary Government,—the admiralty Jurisdiction thrown out on the Colonies,—the invasion of our Right to a Trial in the most capital Cases by a Jury of the Vicinage,—the horrid Contrivance to screen from Punishment the bloody Executions of ministerial Vengeance,—and, not to mention the Rest of the black Catalogue of our wrongs,—or the hostile operations of an Army who have already shed the Blood of our Countrymen." The committee has been induced to send this address by "A sincere regard to the public Weal and the Cause of Humanity, an hearty desire to spare the further Effusion of Human Blood, our Loyalty to our Prince ... and a full Conviction of the warmest Attachment in the Capital of the Empire to the Cause of Justice and Liberty," and it is confident that "the same cogent Motive, which has produced the various Exertions of the City of London to restore Union, mutual Confidence, and Peace to the whole Empire." The letter is signed with 91 names.—N. Y. Merc, May 15, 1775; 4 Am. Arch., II: 310-12. Among miscellaneous N. Y. City MSS. (in box Ch.-El.) in MSS. Div., N. Y. Pub. Library, is a pamphlet containing a facsimile of this letter. The original is probably in the Guildhall, London.

Lieu.-Gov. Colden informs the provincial council of his intention to go to his country seat at Flushing, L. I. On June 3, the council meeting was held in "Brookland," but on June 28 (p. 9), when Gov. Tryon returned, meetings were resumed in New York.—Col. Coun. Min., 505.

The Massachusetts and Connecticut delegates to the continental congress arrive in New York on their way to Philadelphia. They were met a few Miles out of Town by a great Number of the principal Gentlemen of the Place, in Carriages and on Horseback, and escorted into the City by near a Thousand Men under Arms; the Roads were lined with greater Numbers of People than were ever known on any Occasion before. Their Arrival was announced by the ringing of Bells and other Demonstrations of Joy; They were placed at the Door of their Lodging.—N. Y. Merc, May 8, 1775. On May 8, they left for Philadelphia.—N. Y. Jour., May 11, 1775.

John Hancock arrives in New York. In a letter to Miss Dorothy Quincy, dated May 7 (see Addenda), he describes his reception. Philp Livingston, James Duong, John Alleg, and Francis Lewis, of New York City, with Col. William Floyd of Suffolk and Simon Boerum of Kings county, delegates from New York (see April 20), set out to attend the continental congress at Philadelphia. They are attended "by a great train to the North River Ferry ... and it is said about 592 Gentlemen crossed the ferry with them, among whom too of the most valuable persons; any ship may have the best Information from a variety of Hands."—Sheldon, The Jewell Mansion, 20. Roger Morris and John Watts, of the provincial council, are among the passengers.—N. Y. Jour., May 11, 1775. Col. Philip Schuyler and George Clinton did not start until May 12.—Ibid, May 18, 1775; N. Y. Merc., May 15, 1775.

A broadside, entitled "Extract of a Letter From Philadelphia, To a Gentleman in this City, dated the 6th inst," published on this day, reads: "Yesterday evening Dr. Franklin arrived here from London in six weeks ... which has given great joy to this town, he says we have no favours to expect from the Ministry, nothing but submission will satisfy them, they expect little or no compensation will be made to the Colonies, those who are now coming are for New-York, where it is expected they will be received with cordiality. As near as we can learn there are about four thousand troops coming in this fleet, the men of war and transports are in a great measure loaded with dry goods, to supply New-York, and the country round it, agents are coming over with them. Dr. Franklin is highly pleased to find further evidence of the munificence for the worst events, he thinks nothing else can save us from the most abject slavery and destruction, at the same time encourages us to believe a spirited opposition, will be the means of our salvation. The Ministry are alarmed at every opposition, and lifted up again at every thing which appears the least in their favour, every letter and every paper from hence, are read by them."—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library. See Pl. 44, Vol. IV.

"The first continental money bears this date.—See June 22;

Dr. Myles Cooper, president of Kings College, barely escapes from a mob attack. During the night, "his lodgings in the College were forcibly entered by a mob, to the fury of which, he had soon found there, he would probably have fallen a victim. A few days previous had been published a letter, dated Philadelphia, April 25, 1775, addressed to Dr. Cooper and four other obnoxious gentlemen of New-York, ascribing to them, and to their assurances of the defense of the latter city, all the hostile proceedings of England . . . .
They are denounced as parricides, and told that the Americans, reduced to desperation, will no longer satisfy their resentment with the execution of villains in effigy; and the letter concludes—"Fly for Your lives, or anticipate your doom by becoming your own executioners. [Signed] Three Millionists." But the design of his enemies was frustrated by one of Dr. Cooper's former pupils, who, preceding the throng of several hundred men, admonished him of his danger just in time to save him. He escaped, only half dressed, over the College fence; reached the shore of the river, where he was sheltered in the house of a gentleman, whose house remained for that day, and during the night following took refuge on the board of the Kingfisher."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 297–98, footnote.

Lieu.-Gov. Colden thus describes the incident in a letter of June 71: "The recent instance of Disorder . . . was a most scandalous outrage upon Dr. Cooper, the president of our College.
He narrowly escaped being seized by a Mob, who broke the College Gate open, and would certainly have committed the most violent abuse upon him if he had not happily saved himself by Flight.
The Doctor is since gone from this distressed country to England . . . .
The odium excited against him is for warm attachm't to Cooper; which was the exception of the elopement, and an event which was published on that side of the Question."—Ibid., VIII: 581.

In 1774, Cooper had published The American Querist, "by a North American. New York 1774." This pamphlet on the 8th of September was, in full conclave of the Sons of Liberty in New-York, committed to the flames by the hands of the common executioners. Another pamphlet, The Friendly Address to all Reasonable Americans on the Subject of our Political Confusions, published in 1774, is commonly attributed to him (see Hist. of Columbia Univ., 1904, p. 46), although Dr. Hawkins, in Historical Notices of the Church of England in the Colonies, says it was written by Rev.
The proceedings of the continental congress called down his wrath again, and he published his opinions of that body under the title, What think ye of Congress now? He included in his condemnation "the nominal sons of Liberty but the real sons of Licentiousness, Faction and Confusion." Such productions soon made Cooper "one of the most thoroughly hated men in America . . . .
Among those who answered him was one anonymous writer of great acuteness, one who finally got the better of him in his argument. This proved to be young Alexander Hamilton, then a student. Cooper took it as an insult, and both officers and students were with almost entire unanimity heartily devoted to the cause of their country. To Cooper's personal unpopularity, and to the false impression which his attitude had created, may be attributed the peremptory demand of the Committee of Safety that the College buildings be surrendered for military purposes, the sudden suspension of all exercises, the dispersion of the library and scientific apparatus, and the much more serious loss of confidence. It removed for the alumni to restore that confidence and to vindicate the loyalty of their Alma Mater, and this task they nobly accomplished."—From A. Leroy Jones's sketch of Myles Cooper, LLD., in Columbia University Year, I: 347–57. See May 17.

The attack upon Dr. Cooper, the mob next attacked Rivington, who was rescued by one or two friends, and subsequently sought refuge on board a man-of-war in the harbour.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 568, footnote. In writing of the event to Dartmouth, Colden said: Mr. Revington the Printer of one of our newspapers was attacked by the same Mob and res-bred out of their Hands by the Restoration of one or two friends.
He has since taken refuge on Board of the Man of War and will not yet venture to return to his House. His Crime is only the liberty

The New York "Association" draws up an address to Lieu-Governor Colden, stating popular confidence, that "This City and County, as well as the rest of the Colony, have exercised the greatest Patience in waiting the in vain, for a redress of the many unconstitutional Burdens upon which this whole Continent has ground'd for several years past. To their inexpressible grief they have found, that the enemy make no efforts against the Colonies, and as they have been only rejected but have been answered by reiterated violations of their Rights." The members declare: "That our Constituents, while they cheerfully yield that the legislative of the Parent State may make Provisions in their Nature merely calculated to regulate the Trade of the empire, yet they claim as their indefeasible Birthright a Total exemption from all Taxes internal and external by Authority of Parliament," etc. A recital of specific grievances follows. They inform Colden that, though they are arming, it is "to defend the liberties of the subject, and to enable his Honor and those in office under his command, to do honor to the just Government of this Colony." They express their apprehension of the results which may follow the arrival of troops which are expected from Great Britain. They appeal to Colden to see that the troops do not land or encamp here.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 583–35; 4

Colden answered this address of the association on May 13, exhorting them "not to irritate the present enraged state of their with the people's minds, nor suffer them to plunge into Labrythis from whence they can neither advance nor retreat, but through Blood and Desolation." He informed them that he suspected the enemies of the government, charging them with having meant, (of which he had not been informed) had been invented "to facilitate the introduction of an arm'd Force from Connecticut," which he is told is meditated.—Ibid., VIII: 586. The Mercury states that the address was presented to Colden and his answer given on the same day, May 13, and that in answering he was "so affected that he shed many Tears."—N. Y. Merc., May 14, 1775.

A New Yorker writes: "By the last accounts from England we hear that the Americans are to expect no favour from the Ministry; that there were four thousand troops and some men of war coming out for this place; the people seem determined to oppose their landing; it is expected this place will soon be reinforced with five or six hundred troops from Connecticut to assist the opposition. I dread the consequences."—London Chron., June 22–24, 1775.

A committee of the Massachusetts congress writes from Watertown to the "Committee of Inspection" at New-York: Gentlemen: We are directed by the Congress of this Colony, who are just informed that two men-of-war, the Asia, and one other, with three or four companies of Troops on board, sailed yesterday from Boston for your place, to give you the earliest notice thereof.
It is supposed that they have orders to secure the ammunition and military stores now in your possession, the Fire is under your officer, took no precautions. It is not supposed that the exertions in the common cause have given the Congress reason to think that a timely information relative to the matter would be important to you . . . ."—4 Am. Arch., II: 556. See May 26.

Till a constitutional post office is settled by the Continental Congress, letters arrived and were dispatched, in an undefined manner, either eastward and westward, from J. Holt's Printing Office,

"Cornelius Haring, Presents his most respectful Compliments to the Public, and informs them that on . . . the first of May, he opened the New Established Ferry, from the remarkable pleasant and commodious place of Hobuck—from which place all Gentlemen Travellers and others . . . will be accommodated with the best of boats . . . to convey them thence to New York, near the new Corporation Pier, at the North River, opposite Vesey-Street, at which place a suitable house will be kept for the reception of travellers . . . by Mr. Talman [see Feb. 26] . . . The boats are to be distinguished by the name of the Hobuck Ferry, pointed on the stern."—N. Y. Jour., May 11, 1775.

Edmund Burke, in the house of commons, moves "That the Representation and Remonstrance of the General Assembly of the colony of New York [see Mar. 25] be brought up." In presenting the motion, Mr. Burke said that the paper was a "complaint in the form of a Remonstrance, of several acts of parliament, some of which as they affirmed, had established principles, and others which had made regulations subversive of the rights of English subjects. The very mention of the House's name is a strong and popular opinion contained in that paper; but as nothing could be more decent and respectful than the whole tenor and language of the Remonstrance, a mere mistake in opinion upon any point, ought not to hinder them from receiving it, and granting redress on such other objects as might arise from it, which was necessarily connected with that erroneous opinion. They never had before them so fair an opportunity of putting an end to the unhappy disputes with the colonies as at present; and he conjured them, in the most earnest manner, not to let it escape, as possibly the like might never return. He thought the application from America so very desirable to the House, that he could have made no sort of doubt of their entering heartily into his ideas, if the noble lord (North) some days before, in opening the budget, had not gone out of his way, to pass a panegyric on the last parliament; and in particular to commend as acts of lenity and mercy, those very laws, which the Remonstrance considers as intolerable grievances. This circumstance, indeed, did somewhat abate the sanguine hopes of success which he had entertained from this dutiful procedure of the colony of New York. That he was so ill as not to be able to trouble them, if he were willing with a long speech. He had several times in the session, expressed his sentiments very fully upon every thing contained in that Remonstrance; as for the rest it spoke so strongly for itself, that he did not see how people in their senses could refuse at least the consideration of so reasonable and decent an Address." Burke concluded with appreciation of New York, and said that "he would gladly do any thing in his power to shew his regard to the good behavior of that colony; but the honour of parliament required, that no paper should be presented to that House, which tended to call in question the unlimited rights of parliament. That they had already related in very essential points; but could not so much as hear of any thing which tended to call in question their right of taxing. As to Quebec duties, by which the province of New York was affected, as he did not pretend to be infallible, he confessed they were not laid exactly as they ought to be, and he was willing to give satisfaction in that point immediately. This however but a trifle to the general objects of the Remonstrance."

Mr. Cruger modestly pointed out that "The Assembly of New York have pursued this path; they have endeavour'd to put a truce to resentment and tumult, and, while the other colonies (in the frenzy of riot, commotion, and despair) have nearly annihilated the people of New York, and had in contemplation to copy . . . In their present addresses to the throne, and both Houses of Parliament, though they may have extended their claims and complaints a little too far, . . . they could not at this particular crisis, wholly disregard the opinion of their sister colonies."

He further showed the injustice of stating, "as a reason for rejecting a petition from British subjects and in an English House of May Commons, that they [the colonists] claim a right of giving and getting their own money by their own authority."

"And, Sir, as a refutation of many unjust charges alleged against them, they particularly disclaim all intentions and desire of independence. They confess the necessity of a superintending power in parliament. . . . Permit me then, Sir, to beseech the House not to turn a card, and thereby let the righteousness of the Remonstrance rest upon them.

Mr. Aubrey remarked that the right under which parliament had taxed the colonies "is at best obsolete, if a thing never practised can become so. Now, a right that has become obsolete is very near akin to no right at all; and when revived is as offensive as if it had never previously existed. . . . And here the Americans seem equally excusable (as the rebels against Charles I) for not admitting a principle, which may be abused to their ruin. . . . Whenever a minister wants money for bad purposes and finds the nation clamorous against his raising it at home, what so natural for him as to supply his wants by the Plunder of another nation."

Mr. Fox pointed out the folly of not listening to the petition of New York. "What is there," he said, "to hinder the people of New York from trading with the interior country as before? Every thing is just the same; there are no troops to hinder them passing and repassing as usual. Is there so much as an officer to receive a dollar which is directed to be paid? It is mentioned, to convince you of your ignorance in taxing America. You make an act of parliament to raise a revenue in that country, and you not only make a capital blunder, but stumble at the threshold of collecting it."

Gov. Johnstone observed: "Ministers have long declared, they were wished for a dutiful application from one of the colonies, and now it come they treat it with scorn and indignity." He was severe on Mr. Cornwall for saying it came only from 26 individuals. "These 26 are the whole assembly," he said. "When the question to adopt the measures recommended by the congress, was negatived by a majority of one only, in this assembly of 26 individuals, the ministers were in high spirits and these individ-

The City and County of New-York having through the delegates of that colony, applied to the congress for their advice how to conduct themselves with regard to the troops expected there,

"The Congress . . . Resolved, That it be recommended to the present for the inhabitants of New-York, that if the troops, with which expected should arrive, the 6th Colony act on the defensive only, in may be consistent with their safety and security; that the troops should remain in the barracks, so long as they should behave peaceably and quietly, that they be not suffered to erect fortifications, or take any steps for cutting off the communication between the town and country; and that if they commit hostilities or invade private property, the inhabitants should defend them-

The Martial Spirit diffused through this Province at this Gunter is almost beyond Conception; many new Companies have been already raised in this City, and several more are in Contemplation, most of them are in very neat Uniforms; much of their Tents is spent in perfecting themselves in the Manuel Exercise, and several of them are already so complete as to vie with the best Veterans."—N. Y. Merc., May 15, 1775. See also May 1 and 4.

The committee of 100 resolves, "That it be recommended to the Ward Companies of Militia . . . to enroll their men in the present heat, so that they may be in the best order when the call for their tour of duty as a Military Night Watch for this City, and it is rec-

The Penn. Jour. observes: "We hear from New-York, that the well known Dr. Cooper, and his Printer, that he and his are at Washington-Lee May 10, have taken sanctuary on board a man of war, from whence it is said they intend for England. We hope the Non-exportation Agreement to Great-Britain will always except such traitors to the Liberties of America."—Penn. Jour., May 17, 1775. See May 24.
The committee of 100 decides upon the following "Directions for a Military Watch in the City of New York:

1. First. That a guard be mounted every evening at eight o'clock, at the City-Hall, consisting of not less than forty men properly officered.

2. Second. That detachments be made from the said guard to patrol the streets every two hours, under the command of a non-commissioned officer, accompanied by a constable or other civil officer, who may be directed by a Magistrate to attend from nine o'clock in the evening until five o'clock in the morning.

3. Third. That they pay particular attention that no Provisions be exported from this City; and if any persons are discovered exporting Provisions contrary to the Resolves of this Committee, to take particular notice of them, and endeavour, by persuasion and other peaceable methods, to prevent it, and that they make a report thereof.

4. Fourth. That the patrols do not challenge persons, boats, &c., but watch their motions, if suspected, and by all means endeavour to prevent outrage on person or property, and report the perpetrators.

5. Fifth. That no unnecessary and wanton alarm be given to our fellow citizens, either by firing of guns, beating of drums, or otherwise, in the night, but that all their operations be conducted with that manly prudence and discretion becoming citizens zealous to support their freedom without tumult or disorder.

6. Sixth. That the commanding officer of the guard dismiss his guard every evening by passing the roll in the morning, and in the evening to give the roll, to the Captain, Deputy, or Chairman pro tempore, extraordinary occurrences which may have happened during the time of his being on duty, signed by himself."—4 Am. Arch, II: 659-57; N.T. Merc, May 22, 1775. For later regulations see December 1775.

James Rivington sends the following address to the continental congress: "Whereas the subscriber, by the freedom of his publications during the present unhappy disputes between Great Britain and her Colonies, has brought upon himself much publicc displeasure; (see March 29) in consequence of which his life has been endangered, his property invaded, and a regard to his personal safety requires him still to be absent from his family and business; and whereas it has been ordered by the Committee of Correspondence for the City of New York, that a report of the state of his case should be made to the Continental Congress, that the manner of his future treatment may be submitted to their direction [see June 3]... He humbly presumes that the very respectable gentlemen of the Congress... will permit him to declare, and, as a man of honor and veracity, he can and does solemnly declare, that however wrong and mistaken he may have been, he has always been actuated by the sincerest wishes... and the fairest considerations of the rights and interests of the whole nation..."—4 Am. Arch, II: 659-57. Subsequently, he is lent to the American Magazine, and the letters are published in pamphlet form.

Deputies from several counties in the colony assemble at the "Exchange" for the purpose "of forming a Provincial Congress." As there are not enough members present, the meeting adjourns. On May 23, the majority of the deputies had arrived, and the provincial congress began its session. Isaac Low, Peter van Brugh Livingston, Alexander McDougal, Leonard Lippincott, Joseph Hallett, Abraham Walton, Abraham Brasier, Isaac Roosevelt, John de Lancey, James Bedrick, Samuel Verplanck, Richard Yates, David Clarkson, Thomas Smith, Benjamin Kissam, John Morris, John Cortland, Jacobus van Zandt, John Mars- ton, George Folliot, and Walter Johnston represent the county of New York. Deputies from the counties of Albany, Dutchess, Ulster, Orange, Greene, Suffolk, Westchester, Kings, and Richmond were also present. Peter V. B. Livingston was elected president, and the rules of the congress were decided upon.

A gentleman in New York writes to a friend in London: "Upon a calculation made here, we have upwards of 600 tons of lead in and about this town, which will be removed as soon as possible. The women and children are quitting the town fast. I expect to see it in ashes before long; which, I hope, may be the case of every one in the continent rather than our liberty should be weakened from the boasted efforts of receiving another supply of powder very soon."—London Gtmon, June 27-29, 1775.

An advertisement announces: "The New Caravan to drive from Powles Hook to the New Bridge above Hackensack to set out from Powles Hook on Saturday the 28th inst."—N.T. Merc, May 22, 1775.

Dartmouth writes to Tryon that if a reconciliation between Great Britain and the colonies be affected, "it will be and ought in Justice to be attributed in great measure to the moderation and good disposition which has appeared in the Assembly of New York."—N. Y. Col. Docs, VIII: 375.

The provincial congress resolves: "That this Congress will, before they rise, provide the best ways and means in their power, as Representatives of the People, for the discharge of such money as is now lent or shall be subscribed, or otherwise advanced or supplied on the public faith, to defray the charges that are or shall be incurred in the effort to writing by ten o'clock, to the Chairman, Deputy, or Chairman pro tempore, extraordinary occurrences which may have happened during the time of his being on duty, signed by himself."—4 Am. Arch, II: 656-57; N.T. Merc, May 22, 1775. For later regulations see December 1775.

Dr. Cooper (see May 10 and 17) sails for Bristol in the "Exeter," having remained for nearly two weeks previously on board the "King Fisher," commanded by Capt. Montagu, "where he thought fit to shelter himself from the resentment of a people, who consider him as the writer of several pieces highly injurious to the liberties of America."—Penn. Jour, May 31, 1775.

The continuance of the maladministration of the officers of the colony is decided upon the following:

1. Resolved, that a post be immediately taken and fortified at or near King's bridge in the colony of New York, that the ground be chosen with a particular view to prevent the communication between the city of New York and the country from being interrupted by land.

2. Resolved, that a post be also taken in the highlands on each side of Hudson's River and batteries erected in such manner as will most effectually prevent any vessels passing that may be sent to harass the inhabitants on the borders of said river.

3. That the militia of New York be armed and trained and in constant readiness, and that a number of men be immediately Embodied and Kept in that city and so disposed of as to give protection to the inhabitants in case any insult should be offered by the troops, that may land there, and to prevent any attempts that may be made to gain possession of the city and interrupt its intercourse with the country.

4. That it be left to the provincial congress of New York to determine the number of men sufficient to occupy the several posts above mentioned, as well as to guard the City, provided the whole do not exceed the number of three thousand men, to be commanded by such officers as shall be thereunto appointed by said provincial congress; and to be governed by such rules and regulations as shall be established by the Congress; and to be observed by the officers and soldiers appointed by the Congress.

5. That it be recommended to the provincial congress of New York to that in sending those forces they allow no bounty or clothing, and that their pay shall not exceed the establishment of the New England colonies."—Jour. Cont. Cong, (Ford ed.), II: 59-61; cf. 4 Am. Arch, II: 844; Dunlap, Hist. of N. Netherland, Province of N. Y. & State of N. Y., II: Appendis, xxvi. Doubtless it was in connection with these measures of defense that cannon in the city belonging to private persons were captured and "removed to King's Bridge," some of which were afterward delivered to persons in Connecticut for the use of that state.—Laws of N.Y., 1800, chap. 33. See June 7.

The ship "Asia" arrives in New York from Boston, "after a passage of 16 Days."—N.T. Merc, May 29, 1775. This "Man of War of 64 Guns" is in the opinion of the namesake of the ship, Capt. John Gott, "the best naval vessel ever captured on the seas," and is one of the surprising events of the war. —Ibid, May 22, 1775. On June 7, Golden wrote to Dartmouth: "His Majesty's Ship Asia came into our Harbour about ten days since."
Cronology: The Revolutionary Period: 1763-1776

In my letter of March 185... I informed your Lordship that May I had suggested to Admiral Graves the propriety of sending one of the large Ships to this Place. He answered that I might expect the Asia here by the 1st of April. I am heartily sorry she was not, for I am firmly convinced of the Convention of the Ministers of the Provincial Government and the Convention of the Provinces by their good effect by encouraging some and discouraging others—The friends of Government saw no security for their persons or property but by joining with the multitude."—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII:
151:82. See May 27.

"In a letter to Maj. Isaac Hamilton, Col den says: "The very disagreeable Situation the five Companies under your Command have been in for some Time past has given Me a great deal of Concern. I am of Opinion that it cannot in any way advance his Majesty's Service to keep the Troops in that Situation, and therefore have no doubt that the Measure proposed to You by Genl Gage is the most proper of any that can be pursued at this Time
... My advice to you is Sir that after consulting with him [Capt.
Vanderpuy] and fixing on the best Plan for embarking you should get the five Companies on board the Asia as soon as possible.
It will be necessary to keep this Intention entirely Secret, and to effect the Embarkation in such a way as to give the People the least Notice you possibly can of it."—Colden Papers (1797), 413:14.

Mr. Schuyler, having received an order from the purser of the "Asia" to supply the ship with provisions, writes to the provincial congress to ask "whether the order shall be complied with, and whether he shall be at liberty to supply the said ship with such other provisions as she may from time to time have occasion for, for her own use, during her stay in this Colony."—4 Am.
Arch., II: 419:13. To this, the Governor replies, that he may furnish any provisions asked for, but that he shall report, from time to time, to the congress or to the committee of 100,
"a list of the supplies so made."—Ibid., III: 1527. See June 20.

Richard Henry Lee writes from Philadelphia to Governor May Morris: "The friends of virtuous liberty in New York have 28 certainly effected a most important change in the political system of that flourishing City. ... It is most certain that a proli gate Ministry have greatly lost the confidence of Edward Fine, the Province for carrying into execution their cruel system; a system by which existing millions, and millions yet unborn, are to be plunged into the abyss of slavery, and of consequence deprived of every distinction that marks the man from the beast. But happily for the cause of humanity, the Colonies are now united, and may bid defiance to tyranny and its infamous abettors.

"You will see that Mr. Rivington's case [see May 20] is involved in all of a similar nature, which are to be determined on by the Colony Conventions where the offense is committed. I am sorry, for the honour of human nature, that this man should have so prostituted himself in support of a cause the most detestable that ever disgraced mankind. But he repents, and should be forgiven. It is not yet too late to exert his powers in defence of the liberty and just rights of a much injured Country."—4 Am.
Arch., III: 756. See June 2.
a commission from the king, or attempts to exercise a commission, received heretofore, "shall be deemed an enemy to his country," and shall be tried.—N. Y. Jour. June 29, 1775. Regarding the controversy over the date and substance of the "Mecklenburg Resolves," see Winson, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 536-57 (footnote 41).

It is resolved in the provincial congress at New York: "That it be recommended to the inhabitants of this Colony in general, immediately to furnish themselves with necessary arms and ammunition; to use all diligence to perfect themselves in the military art; and if necessary, to bind themselves into companies for that purpose, until the further order of this Congress."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 311 The Remembrancer (1775), 117.

Colden writes from "Spring Hill" to Gen. Gage: "Major Hamilton having communicated to me your Excellency's Letter to him, I had no doubt of the Propriety of advising him to put the five Companies of the 18th Regt. under his Command on board the Asia [see May 27]. They have never made above 100 Men, and have ever since the affair at Boston [see April 19] been in a very critical situation.

"After writing my opinion on this subject I had the pleasure of a visit from Capt'n Van Duyren . . . and then found that there was such a Number of Women and Children belonging to the Troops, as would by no means be taken on Board the Asia [see June 5], it was therefore agreed by Us that the Troops must remain in the Barracks. You will hear from Major Hamilton what Pains are taken to debauc this Men, and how successfully high Temptations are offered to Deserters.

"I hear the spirit of arming and parading still continues to rage High in Town, & that several Independent Companies are form'd, who are cloathed in this form, & Exercise every Day. I have no room that affairs are yet in a State among Us to take a Turn for the Better.

"It is said to be resolved by the Continental and our provincial Congress that a very large Sum of Paper Money shall be issued. That the Port of New York shall be shut up when the others are. A Fortune is to be raised Kings bridge, and one on each side of Hudson's River. The Impositions which such Measures must produce, may make the People uneasy & dissatisfied, and they may then perhaps take up Resolution enough to return to legal Government."—Golden Papers (1877), 415-16.

Colden writes to Gerard Barcuker, the provincial barrack-master: "Major Hamilton intending soon to move the Troops out of the Barracks, has desired Me to lend them some Blankets and Utensils, which appearing to Me to be necessary in their present Situation, you will please to let the Major have what Blankets and utensils he wants taking particular and proper Receipts for whatever you lend."—Golden Papers (1877), 418.

In a letter of the same date to Major Hamilton, Colden reveals that the difficulty entertained earlier (see May 31) in regard to the removal of the troops has been obviated "by removing the Women to Governor's Island."—Ibid., 417.

William Smith, writing to Col. Lewis Morris, delegate from Westchester Co. to the continental congress at Philadelphia, says: "You are called upon by every Motive of Honor & Interest, Patriotism and Patriotism, to ponder well upon the strange look of this tremendous Hour . . . ."

"Among the many Objects that probably present themselves to your Mind, I think your Attention should be principally directed, to the present overture of Administration, however disdained you may be to subscribe an Assent to it. Remember that the Congress widened the Controversy unnecessarily, by a Denial of the whole Legislative Authority of Great Britain . . . . It was a just Idea formed by our English Friends in the Commentment of this unhappy Quarrel, that an Authority to tax us, was not requisite to maintain the Legislative Supremacy of the Nation—and if the contending Parties, could be brought to adopt this Principle in a reasonable Extent, all Animoity would instantly cease . . . ."

"The present is the precise Moment for attempting this good Work. . . ."

"As to the Mode of answering the British Proposal, it cannot be very Material. . . . The Nature of the Answer itself is the great Desideratum.

"Certainly it should in the most explicit Maner shew your Loyalty to the King—your Affection to Great Britain, and your abhorrence of a Separation. . . . You will next lament the present Calamities of the Province (in which it is inserted). An Article about a Word about Rights) proceed to state the Line of Conduct that will calm the stormy, troubled Sea of Discontent—Then you will in Terms of the most explicit Affection, declare your Readiness to contribute to the Exigencies of the Nation, upon Confidence that all future Aids are to be expected in the Way of Requisition, and . . . that your internal Police, if you forward it, it be left to the Colonies, you engaging for such a liberal Support of Government, as shall give the Executive no just Foundation for Complaint.

Colony in the Confederacy, that whenever it shall please his Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament, to signify their Approbation and Adoption of a Foundation of the Restoration of the Harmony of the Empire, to liberate the Commerce and cultivate their ancient Affection.

"This Course of negotiating, will feel the Pulse and try the Sincerity of the Ministry; and appears to me to be recommended, by every Reason, that I can possibly give. . . . Remember that Time will give you every Thing, which the most sagacious Zeal for your Country can desire."—Ifm. Smith MSS. (folio 208) in N. Y. Pub. Library.

The several companies of the royal regiment of Ireland, marched from the upper barrack, and embarked on board "his Majesty's ship Asia, of 64 guns, commanded by George Vandeput, Esq. The rest of the regiment are at Fort Chartres and at Boston."—Rivington's Gazetteer, June 8, 1775.

Col. Marion Willett gives this description of their departure: "There was a public house near Beckman Slip kept by a Mr. Jasper Drake. At this house the warm friends of the opposition to the British measures used to meet daily. I was at that place with about half dozen more when word was brought that the troops had commenced their march. And that beside the arms and accouterments they brought with them, they loaded their Carriages, loaded with Arms, with Arms. As we were among the number of those who consider the permitting the troops to depart at any rate when we had it in our power to make them Prisoners proceeded from fear or something worse and as the permission given by the Committee did not extend to their taking any spare arms with them. It was suddenly determined to harass the Consequence of endeavouring to seize upon these spare arms. The persons present by agreement set out on different routes through the City to alarm our friends. My rout led me to pass the Coffee-house where after notifying the measure about to be pursued I proceeded through Water Street, down to the Exchange, which I then stood at the Lower End of Broad Street from whence I discovered the Troops on their March down Broad Street I proceeded up the street and on discovering several Carriages loaded with Chests of arms in front of the troops under a small guard I stopt the front Horse which of Course caused a halt in the whole line of march. On the appearance of the Commanding officer to Enquire into the cause of the halt I informed him that the permission of the Committee did not extend to the troops taking with them any other arms than those they carried about them . . . the halt of the troops after this time for the Congress of the Citizens. The Carriages loaded with arms were turned out of the line of march. And the troops under arms addressed with an Invitation to such as disliked the Service in which they were to recover their arms. And receive the protection of the Citizens who considered them as Brethren of the same family. But if their sentiments corroborated with the British measure of the British characters then they were disposed to Join in the Barbarous work of shedding the blood of their fellow citizens we were ready to meet them in the Crimson field. One of the Soldiers recovering his arms was received with repeated huzzas and Led away by the Enruling citizens, some few afterwards followed and were Conducted with the talons arms to a place of Safety. The troops marched to the river and embarked under the Hisses of the citizens."—N. Y. during the Am. Rev. 57-59.

On June 7, Colden gave Dartmouth a report of this affair. He wrote: "When the Troops march'd from the Barracks, several People began to Harrangue them exhorting them to desert, and assuring them of sufficient protection. Two or three fellows had the hardiness to turn off with their Arms from the Ranks, and were immediately carried away by the People. When the Troops got upon the Dock, it was very discovery in the Ranks that their Baggage were stopp'd, and in the face of the Mayor Aldermen Congress and Committee Meo, turn'd about by a few Desperate Fellows, carried to a Place at some Distance, where they open'd the Baggage and took out a number of Spare arms and all the Ammunition belonging to the Detachment. The Troops who had discovered their Baggage were stopp'd, and in the face of the Mayor Aldermen Congress and Committee Meo, turn'd about by a few Desperate Fellows, carried to a Place at some Distance, where they open'd the Baggage and took out a number of Spare arms and all the Ammunition belonging to the Detachment. This violence has much allarm'd the Inhabitants and many of the Congress and Committee Men themselves who did not expect their authority would meet with such a public Contempt, as demonstrated how inadequate they were to the Government & Protection of the People. The Events of Yesterday made it sufficiently apparent that a People encouraged to trample on Magistrates and legal authority by any Thing remote to Science and wild and dangerous Passion.—Colden Papers (1877), 44-26.

A committee of the provincial congress submits to that body the draft of a letter to be sent to the New York delegates in the continental congress, regarding the erection of a fortification at "King's Bridge." This is approved. In the committee's opinion, a post (capable of 150 men) will be required to guard the high ground adjoining Mr. Hyatt's house . . . will answer the purpose proposed by the continental congress in their requisition [see May 25], so far as the occupying that bridge can contribute to the keeping up a communication between the country and this city . . . this work should be constructed by the troops when embarked, and ready to occupy it . . . it would be the highest simplicity, to erect a fortification before we have the means of defending it: by this mode of proceeding the expense will also be very much reduced." In this session the provincial congress resolving "that Collo. Philip Schuyler is the most proper person in this Colony to be recommended as a major-general, and Richard Monningtom, Esqr. as a brigadier-general."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 31-32.

The provincial congress resolves: "That whenever doubts shall arise, with respect to the recommendations or resolutions of the Continental Congress, then we shall judge of those INSTANCES, which in Private persons, it is the duty of such persons to apply to this board for an explanation thereof. And that any attempts to raise tumults, riots or mobs, either under colour of a dubious interpretation of such recommendations or resolutions, or for any other reasons or purposes, is a high infraction of the fundamental association, and tends directly to the dissolution of this Congress."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 33.

In the afternoon of the same day, the congress took action in the case of Rivington (see May 10), by the following resolution: "Whereas James Rivington of this city, printer, hath sign'd the general association, and has lately published a handbill, declaring his intention rigidly to adhere to the said association, and also asked the pardon of the public who have been offended by his ill-judged publications:

"Resolved, therefore, That the said James Rivington be permitted to return to his house and family, and that this Congress doth recommend it to the inhabitants of this Colony not to molest him in his person or property."—Ibid., I: 34. See Nov. 23.

Colden informs Dartmouth that "congresses and Committees are now established in this Province and are acting with all the confidence and authority of a legal Government. The Provincial Congress of this Province, now setting, consist of upwards of 100 Members . . . . The principal matters said to be under consideration in the Congresses are raising money and an army to oppose the Kings Forces, and erecting such Fortifications as may best keep the command of the Country, and obstruct the March of an army . . . The Places proposed and are immediately for Business, Kingsbridge, upon the little River which separates the Island of New York from the continent, about 14 miles from the City: and some place on each side of Hudsons River, which may be best situated for maintaining the Command of that River . . . a number of Cannon were removed from the City into the Country [see May 25]. The Continental Congress approved of this measure and recommended that all the Cannon and Ammunition should be removed into the Country, except those belonging to the King; which has accordingly been done. I am told [they] amount to about 100 Pieces of Ship Cannon belonging to the Merchants, and many of them are not fit for use . . . . The Spirit of arming, and military Parade still runs high in the City. Several companies are formed who have appointed their own officers, are well armed and clothed in uniform."—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 579-80.

"The present colonial Virginia Congress of the 15th of May ultimo . . . it appears that the inhabitants of this City are directed not to remove any Military Stores belonging to the Crown: And whereas, this Congress is well informed that some persons have lately seized and removed the Military Stores belonging to the Crown at Turtle-Bay, this Congress, believes, that such a step is a direct breach of the Continental order, and tends to destroy the weight of their and our authority, is imatical to the true interest of the Colonies, and tends to involve this City in the utmost confusion and distress." A committee is appointed "to re-

The New York committee wishes the mayor "to give orders for the removal of some soldiers' wives and children, infested with the small-pox, out of this City; and to take measures to prevent their becoming a Parish charge."—Am. Arch., II: 966-66.

"The Members of the New-York Military Club, Are earnestly requested to meet next Friday Evening, precisely at 7 o'Clock, at the House of Mr. Abraham Van Dyck, and every Friday Evening following, at such Place as may occasionally be agreed on by the Majority of Members present at the Adjournment."—N. Congress orders "That Colo. Lispenard and Mr. McDougall be a committee to agree with any person in this city for importing without delay any quantity of gunpowder not exceeding thirty tons, allowing such importer one hundred per cent upon the first cost for the quantity to be imported, he being at all Charges and risk, and the powder to be delivered in good and merchantable order."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 41.

"Means. Christopher Miller and Patrick Dennis attesting at the door, were called in [to the provincial congress], when they informed this Congress that they were requested by a number of the members of the Marine Society of this City, to inform this Congress that they were about to form themselves into an artillery company, and that they had nominated Mr. Anthony Rutgers, Mayor of this city, for their captain, and prayed the approbation of this Congress in the nomination." The nomination is unanimously approved.—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 413; Am. Arch., I: 1257.

August McDougall, "who it is said has been privately initiating Men for some Time past to serve under General Gage, against their Country," is taken into custody "by a Party of Colonel Lasher's Company of Grenadiers," and conducted before the provincial congress. After his examination by that body, he is immediately sent off to Gen. Wooster's camp at Greenwich, Cona., being "exempted by virtue of our independent Companies as far as King's Bridge."—N. Y. Merc., June 19, 1775. See also N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 588-89.

The provincial congress orders "That no person whatsoever presume to inoculate for the small pox within this Colony before the first day of December next, and that the Several committees within their respective districts carefully observe that there be a proportional supply to whom to grant this order."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 441; Am. Arch., I: 1301.

The provincial congress writes to Gen. Wooster: "this congress think it expedient to request you to march to this Colony with the Troops under your command. . . . As we have at present but few tents, we beg you would direct such as you have, to be sent to the place intended for their encampment and make such other disposition for the support of your Troops as in your power."—Am. Arch., III: 1301.

Cornelius C. Bogenfield employs men "to set up a fence for him round a piece of his Land that had laid vacant & common for many Years which fence was fully completed without any Molestation," etc. In the afternoon it was chopped down and burned by order and in the presence of the mayor and aldermen.—From manuscript history of "Domine Hook," in N. Y. Hist. Soc. archives, concerning this fence to the property originally granted in 1666 to Anna Janse and Roelof her husband.

The battle of Bunker Hill occurs. About 3,000 British soldiers under Howe assault the American breastworks, and are twice repulsed by about 1,900 provincials commanded by Generals Prescott and Putnam. After maintaining the fire of the regulars for two hours, the Americans are forced to retreat because of lack of ammunition. The killed and wounded on the British side number about 1,500; on the American, about 450.—See bibliographical references to the battle in The Reader's Hand Book of the Am. Rev. by Justin Winsor (1880), 57-59. The first news of the battle reached New York on June 20 (3 p.m.). For earlier accounts in New York newspapers, see N. Y. Jour., and Reivington's Gazetteers, June 22, 29; N. Y. Merc., June 26, July 5.
In the N. Y. Mercury of Sept. 25 appeared an advertisement with a head-line reading "Philadelphia, Sept. 14th, 1775," in which subscriptions were solicited for "An exact View of the late Battle at Charlestown Hill, June 17, 1775." In which an advanced party of Seven Hundred Provincial Troops were attacked by Eleven Regiments and a Train of Artillery of the Ministerial Forces, and after an engagement of two hours, retreated to their main Body at Cambridge, leaving Eleven hundred of the Regulars killed and wounded on the Field... With a View of Gen. Burgoyne's Part in the Battle of Charlestown in Flanes, Brevets Hill, Provincial Breast-Work, a Broken Officer, and the Somerset Man of War and a Frigate Firing upon Charlestown.

"It shall be printed on a good Crown Imperial Paper, and to be delivered to the Subscribers in about Ten Days. "The Price will be Five Shillings, Plain... Seven Shillings and Six-Pence, Coloured." Nicholas Brooks, of Philadelphia, was to be the "Printer of said View." In New York, Hugh Gaine and Richard Sause would receive subscriptions.—N. T. Merc., Sept. 25, 1775. This was the well known but very rare view engraved by Bernard Romans, of which also an English issue is known. Both are fully described in Green's Ten Facsimile Reproductions Relating to Various Subjects (1901), 27 et seq. The view was also engraved by Atiken, at a small scale, and published in the Penn. Mag. for Sept., 1775. Both American issues are in the author's collection. See also Stauffer, Am. Engravers, Vol. II, pp. 314, 4.

"Friday last [June 16] the Mercury Frigate, Capt. M'Carthry, arrived at Sandy-Hook, in 14 Days from Boston: He was dispatched from thence by General Gage to order whatever Troops might arise here from England or Ireland, for Boston; and last Wednesday he suddenly fell in with a Transport from Cork with Part of the 44th Regiment bound into this Place but she soon stood to the Eastward, and Capt. M'Carthy now awaits at the Hook to give the Ride Orders to the Rest of the Fleet that may arrive here."—N. T. Merc., June 19, 1775. See June 23.

Late on this day (Tuesday), the first news reaches New York of the battle of Bunker Hill (see June 17).

"The provincial Congress orders, 'That Abraham Lott, Esquire, be at liberty to supply Capt. Van deput and the ship Asia, with such small necessaries as may be wanted from time to time'" (see May 27). This is the result of information given by the mayor, that Capt. Van deput "cannot get any small necessaries for himself or his ship and... requests such aid of this Congress as may give full relief to the premises."—Jour. Prov. Cong., II: 185; 4 Am. Arch., II: 1507.

This morning, the news which came from New England last night is "published in a hand bill, and distributed in this city." According to Rivington's report in the Gazetteer (published on Thursday, June 22), this handbill read as follows:

"New-York, 21st June, 1775.

"Last Night, by a Vessel in a short Passage from New-London, we have the following important Intelligence, in a Letter from a Gentleman at Norwich, to his Friend in New-York.

"The provincial Congress orders: 'That Abraham Lott, Esquire, be at liberty to supply Capt. Van deput and the ship Asia, with such small necessaries as may be wanted from time to time.'" (see May 27).

"I understand by Mr. David Trumbull, that by an Express from Cambridge, his honour our Governor, has advice, that our people attempting to take possession of Bunker's Hill, and Dorchester Point, they were attacked by the Regulars, shipping, &c. From the earliest dawn till Saturday the tenth of June, a body of men, who drove our people from Bunker's Hill: That three Colonels in our service were wounded, Col. Gardeur, mortally; how many are slain on either side, is uncertain.

"This happened on Saturday, June 17, 4 o'clock about noon... At Charlestown, when the Post came away, our people kept their ground all day... When they have fared at Dorchester, we do not hear; Gen. Putnam was safe when the Express came off; preparations were making for a general attack... Col. Tyler must be on the march as soon as possible, without confusion; I shall procure teams as fast as I can, and have them to take in his baggage." Col. June 17. Jabez Huntington desires I would dispatch an Express immediately, to have the troops forwarded; he sent orders in writing yesterday."—Rivington's Gazetteer, June 22; N. T. Jour., June 23; N. T. Merc., June 26, 1775. No copy of the original broadside is recorded by Evans. For a second broadside, containing fuller information, see June 24. See, further, June 26, 29.

A New Yorker writes to a friend in Edinburgh: "A regular Army of seventy thousand men is to be immediately raised. All ranks of people are in arms, and many regular companies are already formed in this City, who have no pay, and provide themselves with uniforms, arms, and ammunition. Should the unhappy contest continue six months longer, it is very probable that we will have near two hundred thousand bold, resolute men, disciplined to as great perfection as any of His Majesty's Troops... It is a gross calumny to say that we are aiming at independence, for our political principles are the same that raised the house of Hanover to the throne; and were your Ministers to adopt these principles, we would immediately lay down our arms."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1047-48.

The first issue of continental paper money is provided for when the continental congress resolves: "That a sum not exceeding two millions of Spanish milled dollars be emitted by the Congress in bills of Credit, for the defence of America... That the twelve confederated colonies be pledged for the redemption of the bills of credit, now directed to be emitted."—Jour. Gen. Cong. (Ford ed.), II: 105. On June 23, it decided "That the Number and denomination of the bills... be as follows, viz: 499,000 bills of 3 dollars each—392,000; 499,000 of 7 dollars each—343,000; 499,000 of 6 dollars each—294,000; 499,000 of 5 dollars each—245,000; 499,000 of 4 dollars each—196,000; 499,000 of 3 dollars each—147,000; 499,000 of 2 dollars each—98,000; 499,000 of 1 dollar each—49,000; 11,800 of 20 dollars each—236,000; 401,800—2,000,000."

This night, there arrived an express bringing a more detailed account of the battle of Bunker Hill (see June 17, 20 and 24). A broadside is issued giving the news of the battle of Bunker Hill, which had reached the city by express on the preceding evening (5 o'clock). According to Gaine's report in the Mercury (published on Monday, June 26), it read as follows:

"Last Friday Night [June 23] arrived an Express from the Provincial Camp near Boston, with the following interesting Account of an Engagement, between about Three Thousand of the King's Regular Forces, and about Half the Number of Provincial, on Saturday the 17th Instant.

"On Friday night, June 17th [16th], 1,500 of the provincials went to Bunker's Hill, in order to intrench there, and continued intrenching till Saturday morning, o'clock, when two thousand regulars marched out of Boston, landed in Charles-Town, and plundering it of all its valuable effects, set fire to it in ten different places at once; then dividing their army, one part of it marched up in the front of the provincial's intrenchment, and began to attack the provincials at long shot; the other part of the army marched round the town of Bostown, under a grand salute occasioned by the fire of the town. The provincial Centuries discovered the regulars marching upon their left wing. Upon notice of this, given by the Centry to the Connecticut forces posted on that wing, Capt. ["...""]
The Iconography of Manhattan Island

1775 Nolton, of Ashford, with 400 of said forces, immediately repaired June 24 to and pulled up a post and rail fence, and carrying the posts and rails to another fence, put them together for a brief work. Capt. Nolton gave orders to the men, not to fire until the enemy were got within 15 rods, and then not till the word was given. At the word’s being given the enemy fell back to a distance, that our men did great execution. The action continued about two hours, when the regulars on the right wing were put into confusion, and gave way. . . . The Connecticut troops closely pursued them, and were on the point of pushing their bayonets; when orders were received from General Putnam to retreat, and they were given in action two hours, to fall back, and their places to be supplied by fresh forces. These orders being mistaken for a direction to retreat, our troops on the right wing, began a general retreat, which was handed to the left, the principal place of action, where Captains Nolton, Chester, Clarke, and Putnam, had forced the enemy to give way and retire before them, for some considerable distance; and being warmly pursuing the enemy, were with difficulty persuaded to retire: But the right wing, by mistaking the orders, having already retired, the left, to avoid being encircled, were obliged to retreat also with the main body. They retreated with precipitation across the causeway to Winter-Hill, in which they were exposed to the fire of the enemy, from their shipping and floating batteries.

“We sustained our principal loss in passing the causeway. The enemy pursued our troops to Winter-Hill, where the provincials were being reinforced by General Putnam, and the battle with greater spirit, repulsed the enemy with great slaughter, and pursued them till they got under cover of their cannon from the shipping when the enemy retreated to Bunker’s Hill, and the provincials to Winter-Hill, where, after entrenched and erecting batteries, they on Monday began a fire upon the regulars on Bunker’s Hill, and on the ships and floating batteries in the harbour, when the Express came away. The number of the provincial killed, is between 40 and 70, 140 wounded; of the Connecticut troops, 16 were killed; no officer among them, was either killed or wounded, except Lieut. Groveener, who is wounded in the hand. Col. of the New-Hampshire forces, among the dead. It is also said that Dout. Warren, is undoubtedly among the slain . . . : The provincials lost 3 iron six pounders, some intrenching tools and knapsacks.

“The number of regulars that first attacked the provincials on Bunker’s Hill was not less than 2000 . . . The number of provincials was only 1500, who it is supposed would soon [have] gained a complete victory, had it not been for the unhappy mistake already mentioned. . . . The regulars were afterwards reinforced with 1000 men. . . . It is uncertain how great a number of the enemy were killed; but it was munificent, who saw the whole action, that there could not be less than 4 or 500 killed. . . . Mr. Gardner who got out of Boston on Sunday evening, says that there were 500 wounded men brought into that place, the morning before he came out.

“This account was taken from Mr. Elijah Hide, of Lebanon, who was a spectator on Winter-Hill, during the whole action.”—N. Y. Mecha. June 26, 1775. One of these handbills, which bears Holt’s imprint (“Printed by John Holt, in Water-Street, near the Coffee-House”), is owned by Mr. W. B. Osgood Field, New York. See Evans, Am. Bibl., p. 175. This broadside is often referred to as “the Bunker Hill broadside,” a name which should rather be applied to that of June 24 (q.v.).

The continental congress writes to the provincial congress: “As the Congress are of opinion that the employing the Green Mountain Boys in the American army would be advantageous to the public welfare, on account of their disposition and alacrity, they are desirous you should embody them among the troops you shall raise.”—Jour. Prov. Cong., Jl. 67. See July 4.

The provincial congress having received a letter from Gen. Schuyler, with information “that General Washington, with his retinue, would be at New-Ark this morning, and requesting this Congress to send some of its members to meet him there, and advise the most proper place for him to cross Hudson’s river in his way to New-York,” congress orders that certain members “shall proceed immediately to Newark, and recommend to Genl. Washington the place which they shall think most prudent for him to cross at.”

At the same time, “information being received that Governor Tryon, is at the Hook, and will land at about one o’clock,” Col. Lasher is requested “to send one company of the militia to Pope’s Hook to meet the Generals. That he have another company at this side the ferry for the same purpose; that he have one of the Generals or Governor Tryon, which ever shall first arrive, and to wait on both as circumstances will allow.”—Jour. Prov. Cong., Jl. 54.

There are varying accounts of the receptions accorded Washington and Tryon on this day. Pastor Sherwood, of the Moravian Church, records that he was in the Governor’s tent this time for our Governor, Genl. Tryon was expected to come in on his return from England; and at the same time General Washington of the Provincials, who has been appointed Chief Co-Commander of all the Troops by the Continental Congress. They would show some regard to the Governor too, but the chief attention was paid to Gen. Washington. At one Church the Minister was obliged to give over; for the People went out, when the General came, who was received with much ado. The Governor came on shore late in the Evening.”—The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 103.

On the same day, Wm. Smith writes: “This is a Day marked by the Singular Event of a pompous attendance on General Washington General Lee & General Schuyler & afterwards by a great Concourse on the Arrival of Govr Tryon—the former at 4 P M & the latter at 8—The New Volunteers in their Uniforms (9 Companies) received the Generals at Lispenards and made a Procession to Hills Tavern where they were received by the Band followed by a gazing Multitude—M. Tryon was only attended by a Crowd who received him at the Ferry stairs & escorted him to M. Wallace’s . . . He appeared grave this Evening & said Little. I left De Lancty there as attentive as any of Tryon’s real Friends. There was much shouting in the Procession—A Proof that the Populace esteem the Man, tho’ they at this Instant hate his Commission & would certainly have insulted any other in that Station.”—Wm. Smith’s Diary (MS.), IV.

Mrs. Richard Montgomery, a daughter of Judge Robert R. Livingston, was in New York at this time with her husband, Gen. Montgomery. She wrote that “the whole town was in a state of commotion: all the militia was paraded, bells ringing, drums beating, and in that moment the British governor Tryon arrived. As he landed he looked with delight at the general excitement that prevailed, and said: ‘Is this all for me?’ When two of his counsellors took him mournfully by the hand and led him to a house in Broadway, where he nearly fainted when he saw the great Washington pass, attended by a crowd of patriots. At a window next to the City Hotel I was so happily placed that I could see him. Here General Schuyler and General Montgomery received their commissions and inscriptions by spectators. Watching the Governor, who was a great man. He drove a sulky with a pair of white horses; his dress was blue, with purple ribbons sash, a lovely plume of feathers in his hat. All this was a most mortifying sight to Governor Tryon”—Biographical Notes Concerning General Richard Montgomery, by Louise Livingston Hunt (Poughkeepsie, 1878), 6–7. See Jour. Cent. Cong. (Ford ed.), II: 103.

Judge Thomas Jones gives the following description of the arrival of Washington and his companions: “After 12 o’clock the same day [June 25] Washington, Lee, and Schuyler, three of the first rebel Generals appointed by Congress to the command of their army, the two first on their way to Boston, the latter for Albany to command the expedition then preparing against Canada, arrived from Philadelphia, and were entertained at the house of Leonard Lispenard, Esq., about two miles out of town. Upon this occasion the volunteer companies raised for the express rebellion, the members of the Provincial Congress, those of the city committee, the Parsons of the dissenting meeting-houses, with all the leaders and partisans of faction and rebellion (including Peter R. Livingston, Esq., and Thomas Smith, John Smith and Joshua Hett Smith, the brothers-in-law and brothers of William Smith, Genl. Washington’s friend), waited upon the General, and immediately, as they landed from the Jersey shore and conducted them up to Lispenard’s, amidst the repeated shouts and huzzas of the seditious and rebellious multitude, where they dined, and towards evening were escorted to town, attended and conducted in the same tumultuous manner, as it is stated that in War, by Thomas Jones (1879), Jl. 55. As to the reception tendered the governour, Jones is not in agreement with Bancroft, who, like Shewkirs, says that Tryon received little notice—Bancroft, Hist. of the U. S. (1891), IV: 236.

Jone continues: "About 9 o'clock the same evening Governor Tryon carried a party from Sandy Hook, and landed at the Exchange, where he was met and welcomed once more to his Government, by the members of his Majesty's Council, the Judges of the Supreme Court, the Attorney General, the Speaker and Members of the General Assembly then in town, the Clergymen of the Church of England, the Mayor, Recorder and Aldermen of the City, the Governors of King's College, of the Hospital, the Members of the Chamber of Commerce, and Marine Society, with a numerous train of his Majesty's loyal and well affected subjects, who conducted him with universal shouts of applause to the house of Hugh Wallace, Esq., a Member of his Majesty's Council, where he took up his residence for the night." Judge Jones adds that the same persons who greeted the "rebels" general in the morning "now one and all joined in the Governor's train, and with the loudest acclamations, attended him to his lodgings, where, with the utmost seeming sincerity, they shook him by the hand, welcomed him back to the Colony—wished him joy of his safe arrival.

"A Provincial Convention, composed of some of these idealistic people, a thing unknown to the British Constitution, was then sitting in New York.

Washington directs Gen. Schuyler to take "command of all the troops destined for the New York department, and see that the orders of the Continental Congress are carried into execution." He requires him to "Keep a watchful eye upon Governor Tryon, and, if you find him attempting, directly or indirectly, any measures imitative to the common cause, use every means in your power to frustrate his designs."—Writings of Washington (Ford ed.), II: 495-96.

Paul Revere passes through New York on his way to the continental congress at Philadelphia.—Rivington's Gazetteer, June 29, 1775.

The provincial congress of New York gives its approval to the following address to Gen. Washington (see June 15):

"At a time when the most loyal of his Majesty's subjects, from a regard to the laws and constitution by which he sits on the throne, feel themselves reduced to the unhappy necessity of taking up arms to defend their dearest rights and privileges, while we deplore the calamities of this divided empire, we rejoice in the appointment of a gentleman, from whose abilities and virtue we are taught to expect both security and peace. Confiding in you, sir, and in the worthy generals immediately under your command, we have the most flattering hopes of Success in the glorious struggle for American liberty. By our advance on the whole, this important contest shall be decided, by (that fondest wish of each American soul,) an accommodation with our mother country, you will cheerfully resign the important deposite committed into your hands, and resume the character of our worthiest citizen."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 55.

Washington wrote, in reply: "Gentlemen,—At the same time that with you I deplore the unhappy necessity of such an appointment as that with which I am now honoured, I cannot but feel sentiments of the highest gratitude for this affecting instance of distinction and regard.

"May your warmest wishes be realized in the success of America at this important and interesting period; and be assured, that every exertion of my worthy colleagues and myself, will be equally extended to the re-establishment of peace and harmony between the mother country and these Colonies, as to the fatal but necessary operations of war.

"We came up from Sandy Hook, we did not lay aside the citizen, and we shall most sincerely rejoice with you in that happy hour when the establishment of American Liberty on the most firm and solid foundations, shall enable us to return to our private stations in the bosom of a free, peaceful and happy Country."—Ibid., II: 156-57.

"General Washington, with his Suite, attended by the several New-York Military Companies, and likewise by a Troop of Gentle- men of the Philadelphia Light Horse, commanded by Capt. Markoe, and a Number of the Inhabitants of this City, set out for the Pro- vincial Camp at Cambridge, near Boston. The General rested that June Night at King'sbridge, and the next Morning proceeded on his 26 Journey. The Troop returned to this City the next Evening, and dined here before proceeding to Philadelphia the Thursday following."—N. Y. Merc., July 3, 1775.

Robert R. Livingston informs the provincial congress that his "powder-maker, who has brought with him from Philadelphia one hundred and eighty pounds of saltpetre, will begin to work it up on Thursday. The mill consists of four mortars and twelve pounders, and is well supplied with water."—Am. Arch., II: 1166.

On this day, the Mercury publishes not only the contents of the handbills of June 21 (p. v.) and 24 (p. v.), relating to the battle of Bunker Hill, but also two briefer accounts of it which reached New York from Watertown on Saturday night, June 24. See, further, June 29.

This issue of the Mercury also contains a proclamation which was published by Gen. Gage in Boston on June 12, in which he makes the following reference to the battle of Lexington:

The Minds of Men having been thus gradually prepared for the worst Extremities, a Number of armed Persons, to the Amount of many Thousands, assembled on the 19th of April last, and from behind Walls, and lurking Holes, attacked a Detachment of the King's Troops who not expecting so consummate an Act of Phrenzy, unprepared for Vengeance, and willing to decline it, made use of their own Defence, and the whole 29, was welcomed to the King's Ships and Subjects, with Cannon and small Arms, have possessed the Roads, and other Communications by which the Town of Boston was supplied with Provisions; and with a post-potterage of Parade of Military Arrangement, they effect to bold the Army besieged; while part of their Body make daily and indiscriminate Invasions upon private Property, and with a Wantonness of Cruelty ever incident to lawless Tumult, carry Depredation and Distress wherever they turn their Steps. The Actions of the 19th of April are of such a Magnitude, as must baffle all Attempts to contradict them, and the Flames of Buildings and other Property from the Islands, and adjacent Country, for some Weeks past, spread a melancholy Confirmation of the subsequent Assertions."

Gage adds that, "to spare the Effusion of Blood," he promises the king's pardon to all "who shall forthwith lay down their Arms, and return to the Duties of peaceful Subjects, excepting only from the Benefit of such Pardon, Samuel Adams and John Hancock, whose Offences are of too flagitious a Nature to admit of any other Consideration than that of conflagrant Punishment."—Other terms of the proclamation follow.—N. Y. Merc., June 26, 1775.

The provincial congress draws up a "draft of instructions to the several officers to be employed in raising troops."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 57. These were published in a broadside the next day (p. v.).

Gen. Wooster, with Connecticut troops, arrives in the neighbor- hood of New York. The whole of his troops, consisting of one thousand men, shall have arrived, they will encamp on ground behind Mr. Haring's house in the Bowery Lane."—Rivington's Ga- zetteer, June 29, 1775. See July 3.

The provincial congress appoints a committee "for superintend- ing and employing some person in trying the experiment of casting one brass field piece."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 56. See Sept. 8.

A broadside publishes the "Instructions for the inlisting of 28 Men" which were drawn up by the provincial congress on June 27 (p. v.), and also a commission to Samuel Fletcher to raise a company of 72 "able bodied sober Men." This broadside is reproduced at p. 47, Vol. IV.

Gov. Tryon having returned (see June 25), the great seal is delivered to him. He asks the advice of the council on the present state of the colony.—Cal. Coun. Min., 505.

We hear that 3 men of war and 16 sail of transports, with 29 British troops on board, are not lying at Sandy Hook. These are part of the troops [see June 19] which at their embarkation were destined for New York. Since their arrival here, we are told Gen. Gage has ordered them to Boston—But if so, we know not why their departure is delayed. Some suppose that Gen. Halimand, who arrived about a week ago, came here to take the command of these troops.—We are told they are unwilling to go to Boston.—N. T. Jour., June 29, 1775. On June 30, the transports sailed for Boston "under convoy of his Majesty's Ship of War the Nautias."—Ibid., July 6, 1775.
In a letter to a friend in Edinburgh, a New Yorker writes: "A regular army of 70,000 men is to be immediately raised; all ranks of people are in arms. Seventeen regular companies are already formed in this city who have no pay, and provide themselves with uniforms, arms, and ammunition. Should the unhappy contest continue six months longer, it is very probable both resolute men disciplined to as great perfection as any of his Majesty's troops."—London Chron., Aug. 19, 1775.

On this day, Revington's Gazetteer and the N. Y. Jour. publish additional reports regarding the battle of Bunker Hill (see June 1, 21, 24, 26).

The Congress orders "That every gunsmith in the city of New York be requested to repair, with all possible dispatch, any arms of the troops from the Colony of Connecticut, now here, which may be brought to them by the quarter-master of the said troops, or either of them, for that purpose."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 62.

Dartmouth writes to Tryon: "It is His Majestys firm resolution to exert every power which the constitution has placed in his hands to compel obedience to the laws and authority of the supreme legislature." Orders have been given for increasing the army in America. The "Admiral will be directed to send to New York such a part of his fleet, as he shall think may be necessary to secure (as far as depends upon naval service) the Passes of Hudson River," etc.—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 589.

The Connecticut troops "marched last week to this City and encamped in the suburbs [see June 27]. This we are told," Colden writes to Dartmouth, "is done by the order of the Continental Congress, but for what purpose is kept a secret."—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 590. Tryon writes, on July 4, that these troops "were ordered here by the Continental Congress, as well to endeavor to check the four Regiments which were intended for this Province, as a mark of disgrace and punishment to New York for the conduct of her General Assembly last Session. The pay of these Troops, ... is placed to the account of this Province."—Ibid., VIII: 590.

The corporation of the city prepares the following address to Gov. Tryon: "We wait on you Sir, to congratulate you on the better establishment of your health and to bid you welcome to a people, who from the rectitude of your administration could not part with you without the deepest regret, and who must therefore receive you again with all that confidence of safety and protection which the experience of your virtues and abilities can inspire. "Would to Heaven that an event so honorable to you as this fresh mark of the Kings approbation really is and which is so acceptable to you; but be assured of this, that it is too true that all authority, power, and government (though I cannot say government, as there is none) is in the hands of the lower class of people, who are so warm in a dispute that they do not comprehend, that it would be dangerous for the Congress themselves to act contrary to the spirit of these people. In short, liberty is dearer to these people than life, and those who would nobly defend their liberties constitutionally, seek for redress of their grievances, and take off a King's head if he deserved it, are now called Tories. Too many of the Merchants who owe their all to the indulgence of the British Merchants, are now ashamed to publicly declare, on the arrival of every ship by which they receive what they call impertinent dunning letters, their avowed determination not to pay their debts [cf. July 8], and honest men dare not even despise them.—Figure to yourselves the consequences."—London Chron., Aug. 10-12, 1775.

The provincial congress having learned that the common council intends to offer the governour an address of welcome (see July 3), the following resolution is passed: "Though this Congress entertains the highest respect for his Excellency, yet it will be altogether improper for the said corporation, or any other body corporate or individual, to address this Colony, to address his Excellency at this most critical juncture." A copy of this is ordered to be delivered to Mayor Hicks.—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 66; N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 594.

In consequence of this, the members of the common council, on the following day, July 5th, ordered an address from any public body, presented at this critical juncture would occasion a dissatisfaction, not from a Disregard to his Excellency, but from the present troubles of the times." that he would excuse "their not waiting on him...as was proper" (see July 3), and that he would "waive such a public

Greenough, and officers of the Connecticut forces (see June 27) dine "at Mr. Samuel Fraunces's, in the Fields," where an "elegant Entertainment" is provided by the members of the New York Military Club (see June 12). "The Day
6 was spent in the utmost harmony, every Thing conspiring to please, being a grand Scene of Human Heart's prophesies," 1775.
At this time, Fraunces's tavern (formerly spelled "Francis") was Hamden Hall on the corner of Warren St. and Broadway.

The New York committee of 100 resolves "That all Masters of Vessels arriving in this Port from Great Britain or Ireland, are hereby requested, as soon as they conveniently can, or within twenty-four hours after their arrival, to make application to the Chairman or Deputy Chairman of this Committee...and give proper satisfaction that there are not now, nor have been in this Vessel present voyage any Goods or Merchandise contrary to the General Association of the Continental Congress. And it is hereby recommended to all owners of Vessels, or those to whom they may be addressed, to inform their Masters of the above Resolve; and that no Master do presume to discharge or suffer any thing to be taken out of his Vessel until such satisfaction has been given, and leave obtained from the Chairman or Deputy Chairman aforesaid.

Col. McDougall informs the provincial congress "that a number of men enlisted in this city, as part of the troops to be raised in this Colony, are ready to be encamped, but that tents and other necessaries for the officers, and many articles for the soldiers are yet wanting; that part of the upper barracks are ready for use; and that a master-marcher is wanted to muster the men now enlisted." Orders are given for the immediate mustering of the enlisted men; "and such men as pass master, and such others as shall be enlisted, be lodged in the barracks in this city, until their tents and other necessaries are ready, or until the further order of this Congress."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 664 4 dm. Arch., II: 1340.

A Declaration by the Representatives of the United Colonies of North-America, now met in General Congress at Philadelphia setting forth the Causes and Necessity of their taking up Arms" is published as a broadside by John Holt. This states that "government was instituted to promote the welfare of mankind and ought to be administered for the attainment of that end," but that the legislature of Great Britain has "attempted to effect their cruel and impious purpose of enslaving these colonies by violence, and for a fraudulent pretense of public advantage, and have in the last appeal from Reason to Arms.—Yet, however blinded that assembly may be by their intemperate rage for unlimited domination, so to slight justice and the opinion of mankind, we esteem ourselves bound by obligations of respect to the rest of the world to make known the iniquity of our cause.

The declaration then reviews the planting of the colonies in America without expense to Great Britain, the wealth accumulated and commerce built up by the industry of the colonists alone, the aid given freely to Great Britain in time of war, and, finally, the many unjust and coercive laws passed by parliament in the last eleven years. It cites the various petitions for redress of grievances, the temperate measures pursued by the first continental congress, and the fruitlessness of all their entreaties. The congress next describes the attack on Lexington, the harsh treatment of the British, and the cruelties perpetrated in the colonies by Gen. Gage and his soldiers.

In conclusion, it states: "In brief, a part of these colonies now feels, and all of them are sure of feeling, as far as the vengeance of God and the world declare, that, exerting the utmost energy of those powers, which our beneficent Creator hath graciously bestowed upon us, the arms we have been compelled by our enemies to assume, we will, in defiance of every hazard, with upholding freedom and perseverance, employ, for the preservation of our liberties, being with one mind resolved, to die Freemen rather than live Slaves.

"Lest this declaration should disquiet the minds of our friends and fellow subjects in any part of the empire, we assure them, that we mean no dishonor to our Queen, or King. We do not so happily subsist between us, and which we sincerely wish to see restored...We have not raised armies with ambitious designs of separating from Great Britain, and establishing independent states. —We fight not for glory, or for conquest...

"In our own native land, in defence of the freedom that is our birthright, and which we ever enjoyed till the late violation of it—for the protection of our property, acquired solely by the honest industry of our forefathers and ourselves, against violence actually offered, we have taken up arms. We shall lay them down when hostilities shall cease on the part of the aggressors and all danger of their being renewed shall be removed, and not before.

"With a humble confidence in the mercies of the supreme and impartial Judge and Ruler of the universe, we most devoutly implore his divine goodness to conduct us happily through this great conflict, to dispose our adversaries to reconciliation on reasonable terms, and thereby to the peace and permanence of civil war."—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library; of Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), II: 128-57. The original draft, in the handwriting of John Dickinson, is preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc; the first page of the same, as well as the published broadside in 1776, is reproduced as an insert in Avery, Hist. of U. S., V: 284. This was answered by Dr. Samuel Johnson, of the ultra-Tory party in England, in a diatribe entitled Taxation no Tyranny (London, 1775); 55-87.

The provincial congress appoints a committee to "converse all the Blacksmiths in this Town, and inquire whether they can make Gunbarrels, Bayonets, and Iron Ramrods, and what number any of them can make in a given time."—Am. Arch., II: 1342.

On the motion of Col. McDougall, he and three others are appointed a committee "to write [to Great Britain] for four set of good locksmiths, to make gun-locks, and to engage to pay the expense of their passages from Britain to this Colony. "—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 674 4 dm. Arch., II: 1342.

The provincial congress resolves "That Ten Shipwrights shall be allowed to every Soldier that shall enlist in the Continental Army in this Colony, for the present campaign, and shall furnish the good muskets, to be supplied by the Master-Master and Armourner for each Regiment." It is ordered "That Mr. Gerard Baucker, the Rack-Master [see June 23] deliver to Colonel McDougall all Such Beds, Blankets, and other utensils for Soldiers, now in the custody of the said Rack-Master, and belonging to this Colony, as Col. McDougall shall call for, or the Troops now raising in this Colony."—Am. Arch., II: 1342-47.

The captains appointed by the provincial congress to enlist men in the New York battalion under the command of Colonels McDougall and Ritzema (see July 3) give notice of their places of rendezvous. Volunteers are to receive 1. 11d. per day, and, in addition, a dollar a week until they are encamped.—N. Y. Jour., July 6, 1775. The first division of the battalion sailed from New York on Aug. 8 (?-?).

In spite of the corporation's action (see July 3), Gov. Tryon sends to the members of the common council the answer he has prepared to their address of July 3 (?-?). After thanking them for their good wishes, he continues: "I confess my disappointment at the change of Circumstances in this Government and feel the weightiest distress at the present unfriendly aspect of the Times. I was induced to embark in this Government, to maintain the pleasing hope of being able to contribute, in some small degree, the hastening the General wish of the Nation for a speedy and happy reconciliation between Great Britain and her Colonies. "If there can be a Time when it would be wisdom and Humanity to listen to the calm and dispassionate voice of reason and moderation it surely must be at present. At present the moment were America to liberate the restraints she has laid on her Commerce & constitutional authority, and through her Provincial Assemblies, grant, suitable to the case of their circumstances, supplies to the mother Country for the protection of the whole 1775 British State. I am confident in my own mind the controversy July would fall to the Ground and that many Acts of conciliating Grace 7 would be extended to America by Great Britain, which National hecor cannot suffer to have torn from her by violence . . . the Petition to the King [see March 23] has been presented to his Majesty who was pleased to receive it with the most gracious expressions of Regard . . . and I am authorized to say that nothing can give greater satisfaction to the Royal Breast than to see us again a happy & united People."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 595-96; 4 Am. Arch., II: 1354-55. This was the beginning of the "paper campaign" and to "avoid the insolence of a inflamed Mob," makes overtures to Dartmouth about returning to England.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 592; 599. This permission was granted by the king on Sept. 6, but Sec. Powel11l, in writing him this information, persuaded him to remain.—Ibid., VIII: 615. See Dec. 1.

8 A letter from London to Philadelphia contains the following news: "Your salvation depends on your firmness and assiduity. If you submit, sixty of you are to be hanged in Philadelphia, and the same number in New York; five hundred Pounds is offered for Captain Sear's head in particular—a secret order."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1607.

9 A gentleman in New York writes to a merchant in London: "Since my arrival here, which is about six months, I have met with surprising success, for I have got in most of the money due to me, and for others who empowered me to settle their affairs; and also, I have not been in six months, that every shilling will be paid me. They are stigmatized on your side the water with being a set of crafty, designing, unprincipled people; but I affirm, that I never was among any Gentlemen of stricter honour and veracity than the New York Merchants are."—London Chron., Aug. 17-19, 1775. Cf. July 4.

A Londoner writes to a friend in New York: "The present Struggle between this Country and North-America, I have heard old People 50 Years ago predict . . . I have always been of Opinion, that the Measures pursued here since 1765, were mistaken and unjust; this Country should have been content to take the West Indies by Trade, and not by Revenue Acts, imposed on a People unrepresented . . . The greatest Part of the Nation wish well to America, and detest the present Politicks; so that it is a War of Administration only . . . the Ministry I think are sick of the War in America, yet I see not the least Trace of their relish, except that I hear of no Preparations to send more Troops; but probably they will cover the Coast with Ships of War, and suffer no Trade, and truly I think that would be a Blessing to America instead of a Curse. The eyes of Government are fixed on the Congress and their Resolutions . . . I think the Rupture will be much greater before the Wound is healed; some more Blood must be drawn, and then they, when cooled, will heat, and perhaps agree for some Time, but when settled, I imagine America will carry some Points towards the Establishment of their Liberties."—N. Y. T. Merc., Sept. 11, 1775.

10 Most of the principal inhabitants of the city," sensible of the advantages derived from the trade of the Province of Connecticut, and desirous of giving their Bills of Credit a Currency equal to those of the other neighbouring Colonies," sign an agreement "to receive the same in all Payments whatsoever." On July 11, the city committee passed a resolution urging all of its citizens to subscribe to this "first and greatest extas" of those who wish to encourage their own manufactures."—N. Y. T. Merc., July 10, 1775.

11 It is reported in London that "The Patty" has arrived at Liverpool from New York, and "has brought back the cargo she took from hence in November last, not being suffered to land it at New-York."—London Chron., July 8-11, 1775.

Gen. Wooster (see June 27) writes to the committee of safety: "Every thing that has happened to me since the last night the man who was overheard on board the Asia man of war one of the prisoners sent here by the Continental Congress, is now under guard at our camp. I would beg the immediate advice of the Committee of Safety concerning what is best to be done with him; his brother is willing and desirous that he should be sent away somewhere, that he be not put among the way of the enraged people; some thought there is that he be sent on board the Asia; others think it best to have him sent to Connecticut with Gov. Skeeve who will go off as soon as this matter can be determined. I hope, therefore, to be assisted with your advice as speedily as possible. Immediately on the receipt of this, the committee ordered Herring to be sent under guard to the city hall for examination.—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 71. He was found guilty and sentenced to jail in Connecticut.—Ibid., I: 75.

The committee of safety writes to the New York delegates at the continental congress: "We have formed an arrangement of the three thousand men (exclusive of the Green Mountain Boys) which the Continental Congress have ordered us to raise into four battalions, of seven hundred and fifty men each, including their officers, and would be glad to be informed what their pay is to be . . . we have reason to believe that the four battalions will be completed soon, but are sorry to inform you that we have no powder for them when raised."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1784. See July 15.

The committee of safety learns that a mob has burned a boat belonging to the "Asia," and has stolen some private property and military stores. The civil authorities are "ordered to examine strictly into the several matters . . . and to punish all persons who are guilty of perpetrated the same."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 77-78. On July 15, the committee expressed its approval of the mayor's intention to have a boat built to replace the one burned.—Ibid., I: 81.

Before the carpenters had quite finished the new barge, "some disorderly persons," one night, sawed it to pieces. Another was immediately ordered built; any who interfered with the work were to "be considered and treated as enemies to their country."—Ibid., I: 164-5. Gov. Tryon's report of this affair to the Earl of Dartmouth, Aug. 7, was as follows: "On the 11th ultimo a Boat belonging to His Majesty's Ship of War the Asia (the only King's Ship now in this Harbour) under the command of Capt. Vandecut was seized and set on Fire by the Mob. The Mayor and Corporation took up the Matter as a high misdemeanor, & attempted a discovery of the perpetrators of an outrage so manifestly contrary to the general sense and inclination of the Citizens. At the same time they sent an application to the War Office, the matter being also discussed and in that were supported by both the City Committee & Provincial Congress. The Boat when partly finished has since, in the night been secretly cut in Pieces. An other Boat I am told is to be built, and I hear it is to be secured against any attempts to destroy it.—N. Y. T. Merc., VII: 389-90." It is not likely the mention of planning another boat was made on July 18.—Richmond's Gazetteer, July 21, 1775.

12 Another letter in regard to the troops (see July 12) is sent by the committee of safety to the delegates at Philadelphia. This states that the enlisted men "grow uneasy for want of money, which prevents is continent," as "in the country, there is no powder, we have no blankets. For God's sake send us money, send us arms, send us ammunition."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1788-89. For the answer from the delegates, see July 18.
The committee of safety agrees that "Herman Zeissel shall be major, and is hereby appointed major of the first regiment of the troops now raising in this Colony."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 83; N. Y. Jour., July 20, 1775. Zeissel was later detected in traitorous acts (see Aug. 24, 1776).

The committee of safety issues this letter to the colonels of the New York regiments: "You are requested to prepare and lay before the congress of this Colony at New-York, a state of your regiment, and of the number of men ready for service in each company with all possible despatch. You will also be pleased to inform the Congress when you expect your Regiment will be completed and ready to take the field. We pray you to give all possible despatch in this business; the present circumstances are such that you cannot afford to lose time."—Jour. Prov. Cong., II: 314.

In a letter to the committee of safety, the New York delegates at the continental congress write: "We are not insensible to the distress to which you must be reduced, for the want of money, arms, and powder [see July 12 and 13]. With the first, you will soon be supplied. The difficulties attending an emission so uncommon, of which the necessary guards against counterfeit is not the least, has rendered its process very tedious. We can give you no assurances of a supply of arms and ammunition from this quarter. Every scheme which could be devised to procure them from abroad has been pursued, and on their success, and the efforts of the different colonies, we must rely for supply. Some blankets are to be had in this City [Philadelphia], which will be purchased as soon as the money is issued."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1684.

Ethan Allen, writing to the New York congress from Ticonderoga, says: "When I reflect on the unhappy controversy which hath many years subsisted between the government of New-York and the settlers on the New-Hampshire Grants, and also contemplate on the friendship and union that hath lately taken place between the Government and those its former discontented subjects, in making a united resistance against ministerial vengeance and slavery; I cannot but wish Lord Cornwallis to take the field. To promote this salutary end I shall contribute my influence, assuring your Honours, that your respectful treatment, not only to Mr. Warner [lieutenant-colonel of the battalion] and myself, but to the Green Mountain Boys in general, in forming them into a battalion, are by them duly regarded, and I will be responsible that they will retaliate this favour by boldly hazarding their lives, if need be, in the common cause of America."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1692.

Field repeatedly urges the safety, to "take possession of the Town Barracks for such of the Troops now under his command as he shall think proper to place there." Mr. Curnenius is to supply them with provisions.—4 Am. Arch., II: 1795.

The city treasurer ordered "to pay to John Watts Junr. Esqr or the order of Sum £1,000, to be employed & laid out by the Committee [see April 6] towards Building the Bridewell."—M. C. G., VIII: 99. See Nov. 2.

An advertisement informs the public that William Kambell, "Clock and Watch-Maker, at the sign of the Dial, Near the Cootien Market," carries on that business in all its branches, and "likewise the gold and silver smiths business."—N. Y. Merc, July 24, 1775.

By a vote in the provincial congress, held in New York, Ebenezer Hazard, hooker of this city, is recommended for the position of post master of the city, instead of the rival candidate, John Holt, the printer.—Jour. of the Proviv. Congress, 90. See Oct. 23. Also see the account of Hazard in A. G. Vermilye's paper on "The Early New York Post Office," read before the N. Y. Hist. Soc. on Dec. 2, 1854, and published in Mag. Am. Hist., Feb., 1885.

Field reports of the meetings of "a military committee, for fourteen days from this day, with full power during that time to order and dispose of all things whatsoever, relating to or concerning the troops raised or to be raised in this Colony."—Jour. Prov. Cong., II: 91.

A letter is sent from London to the ministry that the ministry has "at present in agitation" the following plan: "With the assistance of Governor Tryon, who is much relied on for the purpose, to get immediate possession of New-York and Albany; to fill both of these Cities with very strong garrisons; to declare all rebels who do not join the King's Forces; to command the Hudson and East Rivers with a number of small men-of-war and cutters, stationed in different parts of it, so as wholly to cut off all communication by water between New-York and the Provinces to the northward of it, and between New-York and Albany, except for the King's service; and to prevent, also, all communication between the City of New-York and the Provinces of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, and those to the southward . . ."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1755-56.

The provincial council receives instructions from Lord Dartmouth relating to the grant of charters to Presbyterian churches; papers relating thereto are referred to the attorney-general.—Col. Coun. Min., 505.

In this month, Hugh Gaine printed a poem of 114 lines entitled "Gen. Gage's Soliloquy." This represented Gage in various moods. First, he mourns the destruction he has committed, his loss of friends, and his fight against men of English blood; next, he pursues himself that it is right to attack those who defy the king, and that all such rebels should be severely punished; and finally, he is again overcome with remorse at the remembrance of Lexington and Bunker Hill, and resolves to flee to some land where he is unknown. The poem ends thus: "To wars like these I bid a long Good Night Let North and George themselves their battles fight."—From a photostat (made from an original in the Library Company of Philadelphia) in the N. Y. Pub. Library (Evans, 14th ed.).

The provincial council resolves "That every officer who has already enlisted, or who shall hereafter enlist a soldier in the Regiments now raising in this Colony, shall be entitled to a dollar for each such soldier who shall pass muster, and be received into the service, the officers paying the expense of such enlistment."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1810.

On or about this day, John Anderson started publication of The Constitutional Gazette, a bi-weekly newspaper. The last issue located is dated Aug. 28, 1776, and publication must have been discontinued soon thereafter, as the British entered the city in September. See Early N. Y. Newspapers, II: 419; and "The Bibliography of Am. Newspapers," in the Am. Antiquarian Proceedings, XXVII (N. S.): 295.

The common council orders a further issue of notes of the value of £2,000," to be applied towards carrying on the New-York Water Works."—M. C. G., VIII: 100. On Sept. 6, the mayor and the recorder were directed to be the signers of the notes of Ss. and W, and Alderman Waddell and the "Chamberlain" of those of 4s. and 2s.—Ibid., VIII: 103. The first notes had been ordered on July 21, 1774 (q. v.), and Aug. 25, 1774 (q. v.). The N. Y. Pub. Library owns a complete series of the notes, the printer is Hugh Gaine, 1774-1776. See also Emmett Coll., V, item 11304, in N. Y. See Pub. Library.

The following resolution is passed by the provincial congress: "That the Troops enlisted by this Colony shall be allowed fifteen Shillings and four Pence per month . . . one Blanket, and one Regimental Coat; ten Shillings for the use of their Arms; and that those who have no Arms shall have Arms purchased for them by the Colony."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1818.

The New York troops under Col. McDougall are ordered to march immediately to Ticonderoga.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 655.

The provincial congress requests Gen. Wooster to send four companies of his troops to Long Island "to assist the inhabitants there in preventing the stock from being taken off by the King's troops for the use of the army at Boston."—Jour. Prov. Cong., II: 169. The general set out on Aug. 8 (q. v.).

The king's stores have been frequently broken into, and some carried away.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 297. The store-keeper's report refers particularly to July 12, when "a number of men with side Arms &c, got over the Fence of the shot yard, and were breading open the several doors of the Armory, Store house and those of the Artificers shops," etc.; and also July 13 (q. v.), when various articles were taken by the Connecticut troops.—Ibid., VIII: 599-600.

The first division of Col. McDougall's "Battalions of Provincial Troops" (see July 6) sails under the command of Lieut.-Col. Ritzen (see July 3) to join Maj.-Gen. Schuyler at Ticonderoga.—N. Y. Merc, Aug. 14, 1775. The second division sailed on August 23 (q. v.).

The provincial congress orders: "That the several Committees and Sub-Committees of the different Counties within this Colony, be directed immediately to purchase or hire all the Arms, with or without Bayonets, that are fit for present Service (on the Credit of this Colony) and to deliver them to the respective Colonels in this Colony employed in the Continental Service, or their Order for the use of the Continental Army."—From a broadside preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

Gen. Wooster, with the Connecticut forces, leaves the encampment at Harlem (see July 15) and crosses the East River at Horn’s Hook to Long Island (see Aug. 7).—Rivington’s Gazetteer, Aug. 10, 1775.

He received orders from the provincial congress on Aug. 16 (p. 64).

The provincial congress resolves "That every county, city, manor, town, precinct and district within this Colony . . . be divided into districts or beats . . . in such manner that out of each may be formed one military company, ordinarily to consist of about thirty-eight to one hundred and eighties . . . men . . . The battalion commanded by Col. Lasher [see July 3], the companies of artillery, light horse and husars in the city and county of New York . . . excepted."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 104; N.Y. Jour., Aug. 16, 1775.

A proposal is made "to the Independent companies of Col. Lasher’s battalion for a certain number of each company to turn out as Minute Men." To "the honour of the whole battalion," they unaniomously agree "to act as Minute Men, and to be ready at a moment’s warning to defend their much injured country."—Gen. Cong., Aug. 19, 1775.

The provincial congress orders Wooster to remain on Long Island (see Aug. 8) until further notice, because "it is probable future attempts will be made by order of Gen. Gage to take the live stock from the east end of Long Island and the islands near it."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 108. But, on Aug. 18 (p. 65), the general received notice to return to the city.

"The Sub-Committee, appointed by the General Committee, to divide the city and county of New York into beats or districts for forming the militia [see Aug. 8] . . . request that the captains of Colonel Lasher’s battalion, the independent and associated companies, captains of light horse and husars, furnish their respective men with certificates of their being enrolled in their said companies, the better to enable the committee to form the said beats."—Rivington’s Gazetteer, Aug. 17, 1775; N.Y. Jour., Aug. 19, 1775.

A letter of this date from New York concludes: "There is very little reason to expect a speedy reconciliation between the Colonies and the Mother Country, as the former do not seem the least inclined to make any concessions on their side but expect a total compliance with all their demands on the part of that Country. In the event of the Mother Country has been long in agitation and the throwing the tea into the sea was the manoeuvre deliberately concerted to begin the attempt."—London Chron., Oct. 5-7, 1775.

The provincial congress writes to Gen. Wooster: "We desire you return to your camp at Harlem, with the utmost speed, to assist in the defence of this city and province."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 108. On Aug. 23 (p. 65), Washington wrote Wooster some news which prevented the latter’s compliance with the above order.

The provincial congress passes a resolution: "That no cattle, sheep, poultry or live stock of any kind, except horses, be exported from this Colony . . . until it shall be otherwise ordered by this or the Continental Congress."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 111; N.Y. Merc., Aug. 19, 1775; N.Y. Jour., Aug. 24, 1775.

The provincial congress passes the "Militia Bill." This consists of 25 resolutions, which relate to the organization of the militia, the choice of officers, their duties and powers, the equipment of the men, military discipline, the form of oath, the penalties for infringement of rules, and the conduct of the militia in case of invasion or insurrection.—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 114-16; N.Y. Merc., Aug. 14, 1775; See also Alden.

A shoemaker named Tweed or Tweddy is taken into custody on the dock near Beekman Slip by the populace, because he has uttered in public "many disrespectful and abusive Words, of the American Congresses, Committees, and Proceedings, in their Opposition to the Tyrannical Measures of the British Ministry . . . expressing his Desire, that General Gage, with his Forces would here arrive, to punish the Rebels; in which Service he was willing and desirous to lend his Assistance, and distinguish himself." He is released only after being tarred and feathered, and "after asking Pardon on his Knees, praying for Success to General Washington, Aug. and the American Arms, and Destruction to General Gage and his Crew of Traitors."—N.Y. Jour., Aug. 24, 1775; N.Y. Merc., Aug. 28, 1775.

Twenty-one pieces of ordnance ("nine-pounders"), "that were 23 mounted on the Battery under Fort George," are removed by the citizens to the Common.—N.Y. Col. Disc., VIII: 631-32; 641-42. The cannon were dragged up Broadway and ranged before the library—Gen. Cong., Aug. 16, 1775. The fact that the provincial congress had "ordered the Canon on Carriages at the Fortification to be removed" was communicated to the "Asia Man o’ War," which thereupon "ordered 2 Barges to Lie off the Fortieth near eno’ to inspect what was done."

On finding, about midnight, "that a Militia Compa was privately under arms & removing the Canon," the barges drew near and fired. The militia then fired on the barges, killing one man and wounding others. "Upon this some Guns were fired from the Man o’War a 74 Gun ship, and at length she discharged a whole Broadside upon the City . . . The Militia proceeded & removed all the Cannon as ordered. . . . The City was thrown into the greatest Constern^ & Distress. And next day Multitudes of Women and Children were removed."—Literary Diary of Ezra Stiles, I: 609.

During the "firing," a house next to Roger Morris’s and Samuel Fraunces’s at the corner of the Exchange, each had an eighteen pound ball shot into their roofs; some other houses suffered a little, but the principal damage was sustained by some small buildings adjoining the battery."—Rivington’s Gazetteer, Aug. 31, 1775; 4th Arch., III: 259. The statement about "Frauncis" is substantiated by French, who mentions the incident in one of his poems: "Scared by a broadside was ended till another began again—/By Jovel it was nothing but Fire away Flanagan! At first we supposed it was only a sham, /Till he drove a round ball thro’ the root of black Sam."

Gen. Washington writes to Gen. Wooster: "Yesterday I received advice from Boston that a number of transports has sailed on a second expedition for fresh provisions . . . we think Montauk Point on Long Island a very probable place of their lauding. I have, therefore, thought it best to give you the earliest intelligence, but I do not mean to confine your attention or vigilance, to that place; you will please to extend your views as far as the mischief may be probably extended." In consequence of this, Wooster did not carry out the provincial congress’s order of Aug. 18 (p. 65).—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 125. He and the troops returned to the city on Sept. 12 (p. 65).

The second division of the New York battalion, commanded by Maj. Zedewitz, sails for Albany to join the first division (see Aug. 8) at Ticonderoga.—N.Y. Merc., Aug. 28, 1775.

"Letters from New York . . . bring an account, that the principal families have left New York, and are retired into the mountains, part of that province, where they live in tents and huts, till some convenient houses can be erected for them; and that they are supplied with all necessaries of life, and that in great plenty, from the back settlers, who enjoy the fruits of their labours, being out of the reach of any ships of war."—London Chron., Aug. 22-24, 1775.

The Capt. Vandevente writes to the city officials: "After the event of last Night [see Aug. 23], I think it necessary to inform you, that having Information that it was intended by some People in New York to take away the Guns from the Battery, which, as Stores belonging to the King, it was my Duty to protect. I sent a Boat to lie near the Shore, to watch their Motion, and they began to move the Guns from the Battery, which being observed by the Officer in the Boat, he left his Station to come on board to inform me thereof, but being perceived from the Shore, he was fired upon by a great many Musketry, by which one of the Men in the Boat was shot dead. My Duty called upon me to repel an Attack of this sort. The Boat was driven away from me to fire upon the Battery. I acquaint you with this that the People of the Town may not imagine it is my Intention to do them Hurt, which I wish as much as possible to avoid; but if they will persist in behaving in such a Manner as to make their Safety, and my Duty incompatible, the mischiefs that may arise must lie at their Doors, and not mine." In another letter of the same date, 24 Vandeput reviews the actions of the people, and then adds: "this is to require at the Hands of the Magistrates, due Satisfaction for those mischiefs; and at the same time either to cause the whole Community.

On Aug. 25, he wrote again: "I have just now received yours; in return to which I am to acquaint you that the Musket fired from our Boat was at a signal ton the Ship, and not at the Battery. You are to be at a Loss to account how my Duty could oblige me to fire upon the City, in defiance of those Guns, in the Seat of civil Government; and you add, that you cannot neither account for my Inducement half an Hour after the return of the Boats and the Removal of the Cannon, for firing a Broadside at the City at large. You surely cannot doubt its being my Duty to defend every Part of the King's Stores, wherever they may be: For this Purpose I fired upon the Battery, as the only Means to prevent the Intentions of the People employed in removing the Guns. For a considerable Time I thought they had de 25 stisted from the Place; till their burning down and their firing from the Wails upon the Ship, convinced me to the contrary; this occasioned the Broadside to be fired, not at the City at large, but as the most effectual Method to prevent their persisting in their Pursuit, which it was impossible I could tell they had effected. I have showed that my Opinion was founded on what I know to be my Duty; In the doing which I shall, if possible, avoid doing Hurt to anyone."—N. T. Merc., Aug. 28, 1775.

It is resolved by the provincial congress, in session at New York, That no more cannon or stores be removed from the Battery, unless the guard be strengthened this night by an additional company, in order to prevent any insult being offered to His Excellency the Governor. And . . . that Col. Lasher be desired to strengthen the guard intended for this evening, by adding the Grenadier company to that guard . . . and that upon a message from His Excellency as they regard it, with the people of the City, and protect him from insult."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 122.

Pastor Shewkirk records in his diary: "Things were the same in the Town as yesterday, & rather worse. A correspondence was carried on between the Capt. of the Asia, & the Mayor of the City [see Aug. 34], & thro' the latter with the Committee or Congress, to adjust matters. Gov. Tryon acted as Mediator."—The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 103.

An item of London news states: "His Majesty has been pleased to prome William Tryon, Esq. Governor of the province of New-York, by order of the Assembly. You may refer to the first report from which appointment it cannot be supposed that gentleman will be honoured with any military command upon the American staff."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Nov. 2, 1775.

Pastor Shewkirk records in his diary: "The Moving out of the Town continues, & the City looks in some Streets as if the Plague had been in it, so many houses being shut up."—The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 103.

A small sloop comes down the North River from "Little Eggum," and anchors beside the "Asia," in order, it is supposed, "to supply that Ship with Necessaries." The sloop was closely watched until Sept. 3, "when she set sail and stood up the River attended by an armed Sloop and some Boats from the Asia, but she was immediately purused by a Number of Boats from this City, and soon taken."—N. T. Merc., Sept. 4, 1775.

An extract of a letter from New York to a merchant in London reads: "By the Ship which brings you this you will undoubtedly receive the New York Papers containing an account of the conduct of Captain Vandeput of the Asia, in firing on the town to stop the removal of the cannon which were carrying away by order of the Congress [see Aug. 25]. These papers speak very disrespectfully of Captain's behavior, but I assure you they have treated him with great injustice, by charging him with cruelty and inhumanity. The case was briefly and truly this: Captain Vandeput being informed that the people were removing his Majesty's cann, ox, he fired only a few shot into the town by way of intimida

30 tion, and the people retired neither being hurt by which they actually moved off near twenty pieces, and but three of the provincials were slightly wounded; whereas, had [he] been cruel or inhuman, he could soon have destroyed the whole town . . . But the Patri ots here constantly misrepresent everything; and our newspapers contain very little to be depended on."—London Chron., Oct. 21-22, 1775.

A boat, in which there are two negroes and two white men, is seen coming from the transport in the North River. When taken before the Captain of the congress, said the negroes, and had been hired to carry two women on board the transport. This they did, and then fetched the men on shore. One white man, "being a suspicious Fellow, and of a refractory Temper," was committed to the care of the guard in the barracks, but the other three were discharged. "The People that went on the Wharf, drew the Boat out of the Water, and carried it to the Commons, where they set it on Fire, and reduced it to Ashes, amidst the Acclamations of Thousands."—N. T. Merc., Sept. 4, 1775; Rivington's Gazetteer, Sept. 7, 1775; N. T. Jour., Sept. 7, 1775.

We are informed that the first description of the Provincial troops was from the regiments raised by the New Yorkers, and that it was occasioned by one of their sergeants and a few of their rank and filemen being taken into custody for a supposed insult to one of their officers;—the sergeant demanded a Court Martial, which was refused, and he and the private men were punished with a degree of severity, for having the said. This spread such a panic among the rebel troops, as they had no reproof from such treatment whenever their commander thought fit to inflict it, that in the course of two days near 300 of them deserted."—London Chron., Aug. 29-31, 1775.

The "sign of the Blue Bell," a tavern kept by one Linton, is mentioned in an order of the provincial congress.—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 129. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 977.

A sloop with dispatches from Gen. Gage, which has been lying near the man-of-war, sends her boat ashore with four men and one woman, who are immediately taken prisoners and carried to the guard-house. The woman was discharged, but the men were detained for further examination. The boat was "store to Pieces on the Beach near Greenwich, and then burned."—N. T. Jour., Sept. 7, 1775; N. T. Merc., Sept. 4, 1775; Rivington's Gazetteer, Sept. 7, 1775.

The provincial congress passes a resolution providing, that the officers of the city of New-York and the city and the county, be exempted from the military night-watch, and being called upon as minute-men, or of the militia to go out of the said city."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 135; Mon. Com. Coun. (1862), 671.

The provincial congress sends the following letter to Augustus von Corlandt, clerk of the city and county: "The alarming state of public affairs command our attention to the safety of the records under your care, and although we do not at present perceive any immediate danger to this city; yet we are of opinion that matters of such vast importance should not be entrusted to so uncertain con

30 ditions as that; for one guard, or the other, being once destroyed, it would unshackle the power of numbers in this Colony, and throw all our legal proceedings into the most fatal conclusion.

We do, therefore, request you to inquire for some place of security to deposit the records under your care, and that you inform the Committee of Safety of such place, that they may give further directions on this subject."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 135. See Sept. 5.

An anonymous letter of this date, directed to Maj. Thomas Mossafield of Boston, was found, on Sept. 7 (p.19), among the papers taken from Capt. Isaac Winn. It read in part:

"Dear Major: I wrote to you a few days ago, by the transport which sailed from hence. I hope you have received it. It is now decreed by Congress criminal to speak, and as it would be equally so to write, not knowing into whose hands this may fall before it reaches you, I am determined not to transgress, as I wish to re main in the Country as long as I can, and not to do anything that may cause a banishment, or the punishment of being sent to the mines of Simsbury, which are punishments daily inflicted on those poor culprits who are found or even supposed to be inimical. Dut to this I have not as yet written or told any thing that you will be ferreted and exposed to insults I would wish you to avoid." This letter was judged, "from the handwringing and other circum

31 stances," to have been written by Theophilus Bache, a merchant of the city. Bache was ordered to appear before the committee, but house-keeper reported that he had gone out of town. —Am. Arch., III: 884-86.

THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

An advertisement reads: "Roman's Map of Boston, Is just Sept. 15 printed, published, and to be sold By Richard Sause, At his Store near the Fly-Market, Little Dock Street, Where Subscriptions are taken in for any number."

This Map of Boston, &c. is one of the most correct that has ever been published. The draught was taken by the most skilful Draughtsmen in all America, and who was on the spot at the engagements of Lexington and Bunker's-Hill. Every Well-wisher to this country cannot but delight in seeing a plan of the ground on which our brave American Army conquered the British ministerial forces.

This was the first map of the "Seat of Hostilities" engraved in America. The author's collection contains a copy of the first issue as well as a very similar and equally rare London map of the "Seat of War," dated Sept. 2.

General Romans was at one time employed by the New York committee of safety. For an account of his life, and a list of his plates, see Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 227-229; II: 451-52. See also Green's Ten Fascimile Reproductions relating to Various Subjects (1897), 29.

Gen. Wooster, with the Connecticut troops, returns from Long Island to the camp at Harlem.—Rivington's Gazetteer, Sept. 14, 1775.

The common council resolves to give Gov. Tryon "a Peace of Ground at the lower End of Pearl Street for the Purpose of Enclosing the Batteries."—M. C. C., VIII: 104. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 968.

Because a great number of the enlisted men are not armed, and every effort to hire or purchase arms has failed to procure a sufficient number, the committee of safety passes the following resolution: That all such arms as are fit for (which the troops raised in this Colony, which shall be found in the hands or custody of any person, who has not signed the general association in this Colony, shall be impressed for the use of the said troops." All the muskets so seized are to be appraised and certificates of their value given to their owners who are to be paid by the treasurer of the provincial congress "provided the same be not returned at or before the conclusion of the present unhappy controversy between Great Britain and the united Colonies."—Jour. Provii. Cong., I: 149. Cf. Sparks' Life of Gouverneur Morris (1832), I: 62.

"From all accounts lately received from New York, there are great hopes, and not without reason, that the present rule party there, in case that place becomes the head quarters of the main body of British troops in America, the friends of government will come in, and join them in great numbers."—London Chronicle, Sept. 14-16, 1775.

Pastor Schwübel records in his diary: "The Town-Soldiers, or the Minute Men made a great Parade to-day; marching with their Baggage & Provision, &c. It was thought they went on an Expedition, but it was only a Trial. They went but 5 miles, & came back in the EY'ning; they made not only for themselves, but for the greatest Part of the Inhabitants an idle, noisy, & exceedingly ill-spent Day; & they got, most of them, drunk; fought together where they had stopt; & when they came back to Town; so that many are now under the Doctor's & Surgeon's Hands. May the Lord have Mercy on this poor City."—Johnston, The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 104.

Mayor Hicks, "attending at the door," is called in, and informs the committee of safety that Gov. Tryon sent for him yesterday, and told him "that he received a letter from Lord Dartmouth, informing him that orders had been given to the commanders of His Majesty's ships in America, that in case any more troops should be required, he was to supply them, or any of His Majesty's stores taken, that the commanders of the ships of war should consider such cities or places in a state of rebellion."—Jour. "Every thing is in the utmost confusion at New York; instead of that liberty which was the hay day of the whole nation, a State is establish'd; no person is suffer'd to be neuter, and yet none is left to their own free choice which party they will join. The ruling party carries all before them."—London Chronicle, Sept. 16-19, 1775.

An extract of a letter from London reads: "Preparations continue making here to bring the Americans under Ministerial Subjection, but as it will be some Years, if ever, before that can be done by Force of Arms, I imagine the Parliament, which meets soon, will make some Propositions to that injured Country, such as will restore its Trade, which is now lost to England."

Another London letter states: "The Ministry are determined to persevere; great Preparations are making to take the Field in the Spring, there will be a considerable Force in America from 30 to 50,000 Men; it is expected some foreign Troops will be taken in pay; am afraid you will have many in New-York, and it is supposed their landing in your Province will be opposed, [which] makes me feel for you, and my other New-York Friends; for I expect you would take in Alms to your Country.

John Simmons is paid £292:16 for "Attendances for expending the Committee of the Water Works [see Aug. 29, 1774] & other Commissions of this Corporation."—M. C. C., VIII: 105. Simmonds kept a tavern at the corner of Wall and Nassau Sts. (see Oct. 7, 1770).

A broadside warning the inhabitants against electing magistrates who are insensible to the interests of the colonies is issued. It is addressed "To the Freemen and Freeholders of the City and County of New-York," and signed "The Remembrancer." It declares that members of the common council have "countenanced, and even abett[ed], those who were supplying of General Gage," that they "have placed Sears and other persons, that they concealed the embarkation of the 18th regiment as long as possible, and that they toasted Dr. Cooper. The writer admits that these enemies have little influence at present, but he asks: "why should we honour men with our suffrages, who have done us all the injury that could, and, who are under restraint, but that of fear, from working our ruin."—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

The committee of safety resolves that "any soldier belonging to the Continental army who shall be absent from his corps in this Colony, or within a sufficiency of it, shall be deemed a deserter," and measures taken for his apprehension; and further that "if any person... shall knowingly harbour or conceal any soldier belonging to the Continental army without his having a huffing... he shall be deemed and treated as an enemy to his country, and be subject to pay all the expenses that shall accrue in apprehending and sending such soldier to his corps."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I, 155; Reivington's Gazetteer, Sept. 28, 1775.

William Namick, a "deserter from the Ministerial Army," carrying a letter from Washington's headquarters at Cambridge requesting "all Committees and officers in Pennsylvania and his journey to the Country," is given £334 by the committee of safety "to defray his expenses to Philadelphia."—From original letter in Emmet Coll., 685?, in N. On the Rhode Island delegates laying before the continental congress a part of the instructions issued by the assembly of that province. This declares that the assembly "is persuaded, that the building and equipping an American fleet, as soon as possible, would greatly and essentially conduce to the preservation of the lives, liberty and property of the good people of these Colonies, and they therefore pray their delegates to use their influence at the ensuing congress for building at the Continental expense a fleet of sufficient force for the protection of these colonies, and for employing them in such manner and places as will most effectually annoy their enemies."—Jour. Sec. Pow nell writes from Whitehall to Gov. Tryon that the packet-boats for North America have been discontinued for the present, and that "it is determined that in America from 30 to 50,000 Men; it is expected some foreign Troops will be taken in pay; am afraid you will have many in New-York, and it is supposed their landing in your Province will be opposed, [which] makes me feel for you, and my other New-York Friends; for I expect you would take in Alms to your Country.

The vessels to be employed will be those which are to be employed as merchant vessels, and they are to be employed as such for the future some means of sending your Letters to his Lordship thro' the channel of the Admiral who is instructed to give all proper facility by means of the small vessels under his command to the conveyance of letters and intelligence, in every possible channel of communication."—N. Wm. Smith writes to Gen. Haldimand, commander of the British forces in New York, regarding the "unnatural Controversy, which, if it lasts a few Years, may bring the British Empire to the Brink of Destruction." He says: "This winter will decide the great Question, whether Great Britain and her Colonies, are to be happily reconciled, or to prosecute their Animosities to an eternal Separation!... The Americans are voluntary Subjects to Congresses and Armies of their own forming, who are systematically supporting a Principle, which no Man dare any longer to consider as this Side of the Water."—Ibid., III: 453.

"As it never would be expedient for Great Britain to attempt to impose Taxes upon her Colonies, without their Consent,... to me it appears to be Madness to plunge into a War, for supporting a Claim of Right to do, what she never means to execute in Fact... What handing then the passing of an Act, which while it annex her Sovereignty to every Thing else, acknowledges that American Aids for the general Defence, shall flow from their own Spontaneity, and the devising of a Plan to open the Sluices of our Generosity, as often as the public Exigencies of the Empire, shall call for our united Assistance!—Believe me, that the Dread of being taxed by the Commons of Great Britain, is the Soul of the League, that bands the Provinces together... I am confident, that if Great Britain will declare her Intention to govern us in Future, in the very Way, which I am persuaded she would have chosen to govern... Peace will instantly succeed—Nay but for the Irritation of that unfortunate Expiration to Concord... and the subsequent Battle and Conflagration at Charles Town, which Fame says your Advice would have prevented, America would before this Day have liberated her Trade... I say if... no Blood had been spilled... we should before now have been employ'd to assist him in his frontiers... It makes me imagine... something of this Sort will still succeed, and leave Great Britain all the Sovereignty that she wants for Glory Strength or Opulence & as much as she can ever exercise, over a Country so remote."—From draft of letter among the unbound Wm. Smith MSS. (folio 206), in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

A letter from New York to London says: "Some of the most eminent Merchants in this place are very desirous of making peace with England, and have drawn up a plan, which they have sent to the Congress for their inspection."—London Chron., Oct. 5–7, 1775.

Between 30 and 40 loads of the barricade-maker's and hospital stores are taken off, and the inhabitants under orders to take them the next day on the governor's request to the mayor. The city is in "continual agitation and ferment," and this is increased by a resolution of congress to consider the expediency of seizing the crown officers. Tryon makes immediate demands upon Mayor Pickers regarding his personal safety (see above).—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., VIII: 638–40. Smith says that this removal of the stores was "the Feast of a drunken Guard in the Barracks commanded by Col. Lasher as Capt. of the Grenadiers."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

As "it is highly necessary for the sake of Liberty, that the Oct. duration of the power of all Persons entrusted with high authority, should be limited to a short period," the province was dissolved on Nov. 14, and a new one elected.—N. Y. Merc., Oct. 23, 1775. For the nominations made by the city committee, see Nov. 3.

Gov. Tryon sends the following letter to Mayor Hicks: "From undoubted authority from the City of Philadelphia in the Continent of Congress, I have recommended it to the Provincial Congress to seize or take up the officers of this Government, and particularly myself, by name. I am therefore to desire you will inform the Corporation and citizens of this City, that I place my security here in their protection; that when that confidence is withdrawn, by any design of my person, the Commander of His Majesty's ships of war in this harbour will demand that the inhabitants deliver me on board the fleet, and on refusal, enforce the demand with their whole power. Therefore, anxious to prevent, if possible, so great a calamity to this City, as well as inconvenience to myself, I am ready, should the voice of the citizens be unfavourable to my staying among them, immediately to embark on board the Asia requesting that the citizens will defeat every attempt that may be made to hinder my removal, with my domesticks and effects, should that be their wish, since I returned to this Province with every honourable intention to serve them, consistent with my, bound duty to my Sovereign."—Am. Arch., III: 1053; and N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 638 (in which the letter is dated Oct. 10).

The date of Oct. 10 appears to be erroneous, as Mayor Hicks' letter in reply, dated Oct. 14, begins: "Instantly upon receipt of your Excellency's Command to signify your letter of yesterday." As the correspondence theretofore exhibited to the citizens expressed himself as not wholly satisfied with the assurances of protection given him, and announced, on Oct. 19, that he had removed to the "Halifax Packet," where he would be "ready to do such business of the Country as the situation of the time will permit."—Am. Arch., III: 1053; and Richmond's Gazetteer, Oct. 19 and 26, 1775; N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 639-41. On Oct. 20 (q. v.), he went on board the "Duchess of Gordon."

Pres. Hancock writes to the provincial congress of New York that he has been instructed by the continental congress "to desire you will give directions for the immediate removal of all the sulphur now in the city of New York, to a place of greater safety, at a distance from the city, and you will please to inform Congress to what place you have ordered it."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 183; 4 Am. Arch., III: 1302.

John Hunter submits to the provincial congress a plan "for establishing a Linen Manufactory." After discussing the need of this, he suggests the following estimate for the work: "£100 to be appropriated by the Congress to the purpose of setting up manufactories of linen, woollen, &c., in the Province. This money to be repaid (if repaid at all) by a lottery; let the profits of the manu- factories be put into public services. It will not do to repay the £100 with the money arising from the sale of the goods, because this will very soon put an end to manufacturing."—Am. Arch., III: 1061-82; Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 167. When this is read, the congress decides "That the said petition and plans . . . lay on the table for the perusal of the members."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 178.

"Notice is hereby given, That a Constitutional Post-Office is established in this City, by the Post-Master-General of all the United Colonies on the Continent of North-America, from whence the following Posts are regularly dispatched."

"To Philadelphia on Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

"To Albany on Thursday.

"To Hartford, in Connecticut, on Thursday.

The provincial congress appoints a committee "to consider of, and devise ways and means for the safety of the women and children in this city in case of necessity."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 185; 4 Am. Arch., III: 1305.

"Reported that some evil minded persons broke and destroyed the Centry-Boxes placed on the Battery for the convenience of the City Guard."—Const. Gen., Oct. 25, 1775; Conn. Gaz. (New London), Nov. 3, 1775.

Many citizens have become suspicious that the provincial congress has "received intimation"—iniminations which it does not divulge—that the city will be made "a garrison town or Oct. 28. destroyed." Therefore the congress conceives it to be an "indis- pensable duty that the citizens be informed of the arrival of any private intelligence of any danger, and that whenever they do they will take the earliest method of informing them of it, that the citizens may provide, in the best manner they can, for the security of their families and effects."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 187; 4 Am. Arch., III: 1306.

Tryon goes on board the ship "Duchess of Gordon," under the protection of the "Asia" (see Oct. 15, with Atty.-Gen. Kempe and Deputy-Paymaster Barrow, and these vessels remain in the harbour. He reported to Dartmouth, on Nov. 11, that "the Friends of Government" came freely to him there.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VII: 643.

The committee of 100 appoints a sub-committee "to take in subscriptions to establish a Manufactory, to employ the Poor of the City and County of New-York."—4 Am. Arch., III: 1316.

The provincial council, on board the "Duchess of Gordon," takes cognizance of Gov. Tryon's reasons for leaving the city, and of his correspondence with the mayor about it. The minutes of the meeting are sent to the lords of trade.—Cal. Coun. Min., 1775.
fundamentally wrong, that the more we consider it, the more we become convinced of..." He concluded, "administration had found themselves incapable of raising the number of men required. Recruits had not offered with alacrity; officers had not made voluntary tenders of their services; they in general disbelieved the business.

Lord Lyttelton deplored the impartiality of Penn's evidence, and declared himself opposed to "those audacious rebels, who came and endeavoured to impose on his Majesty with insidious, traitorous, false expressions of loyalty to him, and of obedience to the British parliament, while they in the same breath appeal to the people of Great Britain and Ireland, abuse the parliament, deny their power, invite their fellow-subjects to make common cause of it, and thus at once endeavour to involve every part of this great empire in one general scene of rebellion and bloodshed."

The Earl of Sandwich approved of Lyttelton's speech, and added several arguments for the opposition. America is not entirely prepared," he said, "to resist our power; or if she be, is the still desirous of rendering herself stronger. Suspend your operations, and you furnish her with the very means of rising in her demands, if not of totally disclaiming all dependence on this country. Finally, he said, "Dartmouth's motion was lost: "For the motion 27; Proxies 6; Against it 60; Proxies 26."—Parl. Hist. of Eng., XVIII: 895-936.

The committee of safety receives the following letter (signed "A") from Philadelphia: "I sincerely sympathize with you in your distress, and, from the inhuman proceedings of those tyrants that infest America, I am afraid your valuable Town of New-York is in danger of being burnt. I would therefore recommend to you to prepare fire-vessels, which, properly made use of, will defend you against your internal enemies, and save your Town."—Am. Arch., III: 1531.

All of the men nominated by the committee of safety on Nov. 3 (p. 69) as delegates to the congress are elected, with the exceptions of Isaac Low, Abraham Walton, and John Marston. In place of these last, Cornelius Capper, Thomas Smith, and John Morton are chosen.—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 15, 1775.

Dartmouth informs the governors in America that they "are at liberty to withdraw themselves from the Colony whenever their personal safety shall make it necessary for them so to do."—N. Y. Col. Dict., VIII: 642.

The Sub Committee appointed by the general Committee, to consider a mode for employing the trade to carry on a commerce in New York City" (see Oct. 12), reports that a number of people have formed themselves into a company "for the promoting American manufactories," and have decided upon the following regulations:

I. That the Society shall be called, The New-York Society for employing the industrious Poor, and promoting Manufactury.

II. That the company shall continue for three whole years, commencing on the day of the first general meeting of the subscribers.

III. That a single share in the company be fixed at Ten Pounds... and after payment of their respective subscriptions, every subscriber shall be entitled to a vote in common on all occasions, and also to be elected to any office belonging to the company; and no person shall be entrusted with any office, but a member thereof.

IV. That we will begin with the manufacturing of Woolens, Linen, Cotton, and Silk, and carry on the same to the greatest extent and advantage.

V. That the General Meeting of the Subscribers, shall be called by written tickets within one week after two hundred Subscriptions are obtained, in order to choose by ballot, for the first year, twelve Managers, a Secretary and Treasurer.

VI. That the Managers and new members, be changed, annually on the day of election, by re-electing eight of the old Managers, and adding four new to their number.

VII. That the Managers carry on the Manufactury agreeable to the rules of the Company, and shall have the whole direction thereof.

VIII. That the Treasurer shall give security for the faithful discharge of his trust; and account for, and deliver up to his successor in said office, all such securities, books, writings, and effects, as shall then be in his hands..." IX. That a state of the manufactury, and of the companies accounts, shall fairly made out, at the end of every six months, and kept in the manufactury store, for the inspection of the members..." The report is thereupon unanimously approved by the general committee, as "proper to be recommended to the consideration of the inhabitants of this City."—N. Y. Jour., Nov. 16, 1775; 4 Am. Arch., III: 1424-25.

The provincial council receives from John Powell a royal proclamation, dated Aug. 23, for suppressing secession and rebellion in America, and orders that it be published.—Cal. Coun. Min., 506. It was published the next day.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 834.

John Morin Scott writes to Col. Richard Varick: "...Every office shut up almost but Sam. Jones's who will work for 6 a day & live accordingly.—All Business stagnated the City hall deserted for fear of a Bombardment—a new Congress elected.—Yesterday the new Congress was to meet but I believe they did not make a house. Who can prize life without Liberty? It is a Buoyant only fit to be thrown away.—N. Y. City during the Am. Rebellion (privately printed for The Mercantile Library Ass'n, 1861), 85-85. The letter is from "Greenwich," which is usually considered to have extended only as far north as 21st St. (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987). As a footnote states that Scott resided "in the seat since known as "The Hermitage" and "The Temple of Health," which a recent discovery, until a recent discovery of this third street, between Eighth and Ninth avenues, and as Pl. 41, Vol. I, indicates that Scott's house really was in that neighbourhood, it is apparent that the name "Greenwich" was sometimes applied to a much larger section than we generally associate with the village. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 943, and Pl. 176, Vol. I. Mrs. Lamb is evidently in error in placing Scott's residence at 53rd St., instead of 43rd St.—Lamb, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 90 (footnote). See view in Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 212.

Parsoo Seabury (see Feb. 23), Mayor Underhill of Westchester, and Judge Fowler of Eastchester, are seized by a band of Connecticut raiders led by Capt. Sears. One account of the seizure reads: On the 20th of this month, sixteen respectable inhabitants of this town, in company with Captain Sears, set out from this place [New Haven], for East and West Chester, in the province of New-York, to disarm the principal torries there, and secure the persons of Parson Seabury, Judge Fowler, and Lord Underhill. In place of the way thither they were joined by the Captains Richards, Sellick, and Mead with about 50 men—At Manettek they burnt a small sloop, which was purchased by government, for the purpose of carrying provisions on board the Asia.—At East Chester they camped all night, and the next day proceeded to Seabury and Underhill. Having possessed themselves of these three caniatts, they sent them to Connecticut under a strong guard."

The main body of the troops pressed on to New York, where they attacked Rivington's printing-office on Nov. 23 (p. 9).—Penn. Jour., Dec. 6, 1775.

In a memorial to the general assembly of Connecticut, Dec. 20, Seabury adds further details of the raid, as follows: "Your Memorialist begs leave further to represent, that he hath heard a verbal account that one of his daughters was abused and insulted by some of the people when at his house on the 22d of November. That a bayonet was thrust into her cap, and her cap thereby torn from her head. That the landerchief about her neck was pierced by a bayonet, both before and behind. That a quilt in the frame on which the daughters of your Memorialist were at work was so cut and pierced with bayonets as to be rendered useless. That the wife obliged to work her way to open his desk, where they examined his papers," and from some money was taken. In the same memorial, Seabury thus represents the charges against him:—That he... had entered into a combination with six or seven others to seize Captain Sears as he was passing through the County of West Chester, and Convey him on board a man-of-war.

That your Memorialist had signed a Protest... against the proceedings of the Continental Congress.

That your Memorialist had neglected to open his church on the day of the Continental Fast.

And that he had written pamphlets and newspapers against the liberties of America.
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1775

"To the first and last of the charges your Memorialist pleads not guilty. . . . He considers it a high infringement of the liberty for which the virtuous sons of America are now nobly struggling, to be carried by force out of one colony into another, for the sake either of trial or imprisonment on the other charges. Three days after his "spiritual memorial" had been written, "the gang who took [him] prisoner thought proper to withdraw their guard and let [him] return to his desolated home," after a captivity of about five weeks.—Dawson's Westchester Co., N. T. during the Am. Rev., 236-39.

In Oct., Dec. 12, to G. Trumbull, of Connecticut, the provincial congress of New York remonstrated against the raids on Rivington and Seabury. With regard to Parson Seabury, the letter says: "Mr. Seabury, we are informed, is still detained. If such should be the case, we must treat your friendly interposition for his immediate discharge; the more especially as, considering his ecclesiastick character, (which, as is, is a veritable by many friends to liberty,) the severity that has been used towards him may be subject to misconstructions prejudicial to the common cause."—Am. Arch., IV. 403.

Fowler and Underhill were released much earlier than Seabury, after having subscribed to depositions in which they apologized for signing a protest against the resolutions of the continental congress.—Penn. Jour., Dec. 6, 1775. Dawson, op. cit., 139, footnote, cites bitter political controversies between Isaac Sears and both Seabury and Rivington as the reason for the harsher treatment received by them.

The Connecticut "banditti" (see Nov. 22) continue their marauding expedition by an attack on Rivington's printing-office. A band of about 75 entered New York "at noon-day on horseback, with bayonets fixed, in the greatest regularity went down the main street and drew up in close order before the printing office of the infamous James Rivington.—A small detachment entered it, and [in] about three quarters of an hour, brought off the principal part of his types, for which they offered to give an order on Lord Dunmore. They then faced and wheeled to the left, and marched out of the town to the tune of Yankee do-dle. The vast concourse of people assembled at the Coffee-House bridge, on their leaving the ground, gave them three very hearty cheers."—Penn. Jour., Dec. 6, 1775; cf. N. E. Chron. (Cambridge), Dec. 7, 1775. For a fuller compilation of contemporary reports and opinions regarding the event, see Man. Com. Coun. (1668), 813-17.

The incident brings together the general committee for the city and county. They consider the act "a breach of the Association," and a motion is made "that Isaac Sears, Samuel Broome, and John Woodward, be cited to appear before this Board, in answer for their conduct in entering the City Printing Office, and the act of assault thereunto growing."—Am. Arch., III. 1526.

Losing, in his Field Book of the Revolution, and Sparks, in his Life of Gouverneur Morris, describing the affair, say that the types were melted into bullets. Dawson disputes this, declaring that Connecticut printers were too glad to increase their limited supplies of copper. "They ripped into bullets, for which common copper, cheaper lead was better adapted."—Dawson, op. cit., 135, footnote. The Journal's account says, further, that "Seabury, Fowler, and Underhill were (with the types and arms) safely lodged in New Haven."—Penn. Jour., Dec. 6, 1775.

In reporting to Dartmouth the raid upon Rivington, Gov. Tryon wrote: "Isaac Sears is evidently a tool of the Continental Army, publicly declaring he acts regarded of Congresses and Committee; and I am told by good Authority heBW received a letter he received from General Lee, recommending the seizure of my person, and that I should do it at all events, and that the Continental Army would bear him out. . . ."

The "intimation of Isaac Sears' design speedily to revisit this Province with a more numerous body of the Connecticut Roters, and to take away the Records of the Province induced me to order such publick Records as were most interesting to the Crown to be brought on board to me. . . ."—N. Y. Col. Dees., VIII: 645.

On Nov. 16, John Jay, a New York delegate to the continental congress, wrote from Philadelphia to the president of the provincial congress in New York: "The New-England exploit is much talked of, and is the talk of the numerous who to the part the Convention will take relative to it; some consider it as an ill compliment to the Government of the Province, and prophecy that you have too much christian meekness to take any notice of it. For my own part, I don't approve of the feat, and think it neither argues much wisdom, nor much bravery; at any rate if it has been done, I wish our own people, and not strangers, had taken the liberty of doing it. I confess I am not a little jealous of the honour of the Province, and in my persuasion contend against the other charges."

The correspondence between the provincial congress here is instructive, and expressed the hope that the provincial congress might "devise some expedient, to prevent, for the future, the inhabitants of any of the neighbouring Colonies coming into this, to direct the publick affairs of it or to destroy the property or invade the liberty of its inhabitants."—Am. Arch., IV. 185-86. For the action of the provincial congress, see Dec. 12.

Rivington's New-York Gazetteer (see April 22, 1775) suspends publication. This was resumed on Oct. 4, 1777 (q. t.)—See Early N. Y. Newspapers, III: 428; and the "Bibliography of Am. Newspapers," in the Am. Antiquarian Soc. Proceedings, XXVII (N.S.): 436.

The common council authorizes payment of £10 to Stephen Allen for the repair of the "new Road" for one year.—M. C. C., VIII: 117. Apparently, Allen did not get his money at this time, for we find that a bill of his, sworn to before Alderman John Brooke on Sept. 10, 1784, and paid at the same rate, was also passed by the assembly. (M. C. C., 1784-1831, I: 753, was for "keeping the road in repair from G1 George Street to sand hill road in 6th year 1775—from Jan 27th to Decem 31st."—From the original, preserved in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room. Great George Street was the name given to the extension of Broadway from about Ann St. to the present Astor Pl. (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 945, title "Broadway"). It is first shown (without name) on Pl. 50, Vol. I.

It may have been as early as this time that the arched stone bridge at the present Canal St., on Broadway, was erected, for discussion of which see Pl. 50, Vol. III and April 18, 1775.

Among these are some of the best known men of their time, including John Jay, Gouverneur Morris, and Robert R. Livingston. They appear as either "disaffected" or "loyal," and other comments about each of them have been added. The list was printed in Man. Com. Coun. (1854), 518-20.

On Nov. 22, with the intention to return to England (see July 7), he writes to Samuel Bayard, deputy-secretary, concerning the safety of the records.—Cal. Min., 506.

A broadside, printed at New York, presents "The Answer of the Congress to the King's Proclamation" of Aug. 23, which cast aspersions upon the American cause. This denies that the colonies have forgotten the allegiance they owe "to the power which has sustained and guarded" them, and refutes the allegation that they have proceeded "to an open and avowed rebellion." The delegates of the congress then add: "We, therefore, in the name of the people of these United Colonies, and by authority, according to the purest maxims of representation derived from them, declare, that whatever punishment shall be inflicted upon any persons in the power of our enemies, for favouring, aiding or abetting the cause of American liberty shall be retaliated in the same kind and the same degree upon those, in our power, who have favoured, aided or abetted, or shall favour, aid or abet the system of ministerial oppression. The essential difference between our cause and that of our enemies might justify a severer punishment. The law of retaliation will unquestionably warrant one equally severe."—

From a broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Smith, in his diary, says that he "met some of the Congress at Simmons's." It was the general opinion that an assembly should be convened "to make conciliatory Propositions." However, the support of Mr. Scott (see Dec. 8) "had not been secured unfortunately."—Wm. Smith's Diary (M.S.), V.

To the provincial congress, Mr. Scott (see Dec. 7) presents several resolutions, which declare in substance: 1. that the Lexington and the colonies were justified; 2. that it was inexpedient to ask the Governor to convene the old Assembly to give an answer to the Febry Resolve of Parliament; 3. that the governor should be protected on shore. "The Congress was thus thrown into great heats." Scott "lamented the Gov's address [see Dec. 4] with great acrimony and was joined by Hobart & McDougall who with Scott were intent upon a new Election of Assemblemen." That night, the "Answer of the grand Congress of 6 Instant to the King's Aug Proclamation arrived and the House grew more disenchanted to Peace afterwards on the news of the punishment of Stores in Canada & other Successes in that Quarter."—Wm. Smith's Diary (M.S.), V.

Gov. Tryon acknowledges the receipt of the provincial records (see Dec. 6) thus: "I do hereby certify that in Pursuance of my Directions and the Advice of his Majesty's Council for this Province I have received from Saml Bayard Jun' Deputy Secretary of this Province on board the ship Duchess of Gordon two Boxes containing Records of Patents, Records of Commissions &c & Minutes of Council—Given under my Hand on Board the ship Duchess of Gordon in the Harbour of New York this 9th Day of Dec 1775 having signed a Duplicate of this Certificate. The said two Boxes being locked with a Padlock & under my Seal at Arros and the Seal of the said Deputy Secretary.

"Wm Tryon."

The books given up to Tryon, says Smith, were:

17 Vol Fol of Records of Patents
2. Dr Grant of Am. MSS. of reduced Officers & Soldiers pursuant to the Royal Proclamation of 7 Oct 1765
3. Dr Indian Cessions to the Crown.
4. Dr Records of Commissions Patents & Charters under the great Seal of Great Britain.
5. Dr Minutes of Council in the State Department.

25 Vol: in Folio.

"These Books are of infinite Consequences to the Colony & the Seizure a Mortgage upon the People for their Return to their ancient union with Great Britain.

Had the Secret of Mr Tryon's withdrawing so Many of the Books been discovered I think Bayard would scarce have escaped with his Life & I as one of the Council should have certainly felt the popular Rage—Yet I believe there is a mistake in certifying that Mr Tryon took them by the Advice of Council—See My Minute of the Day concealed in the Hands of Jacob Blaas the Neighbour to Col P R Livingston at the Manor—I forget the Date of the Day we were consulted but well remember that Mr Tryon had some Records on the Board, that we told him it is improper to bring him to himself as to the Propriety of removing any more—I mentioned this to Bayard, who admits that there were Papers in the Duchess of Gordon when we were consulted but adds that he thinks they were those mentioned in the Certificate—See the
After taking into consideration Gov. Tryon's address of Dec. 4, Dec. (q.v.), the provincial congress, sitting in New York City, resolves: "That it is the opinion of this Congress, that none of the subjects to the people of this Colony, have withdrawn their allegiance from His Majesty. . . . That the supposed present turbulent state of this Colony, arises not from the want of a proper attachment to our Prince, and the establishment in the illustrious house of Hanover, but from the endeavours of the British Crown, or 'a spirit of opposition' to that just and equal rule to which by the British Constitution, and our ancient and established form of Government we are subject; but solely from the inroads made on [us] both by oppressive acts of the British Parliament, devised for enervating subjects both in the American Colonies, and the hostile attempts of the ministry to carry those acts into execution."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 217-18; N. T. Merc., Dec. 18, 1775.

The committee of 100 adopts the following regulations for the night watch: 1. That at least one company of guards be "at the Barracks on the Battery" from six o'clock in the evening until daylight.

2. That the adjutant of each battalion "whose tour of duty is" be notified at least 24 hours before he mounts guard, and that he make a report of the "occurrences of the night," the men on duty, and the faults committed.

3. That, immediately after roll-call, sentinels be set at all appointed places.

4. That detachments of the guard patrol the streets every two hours, beginning at ten o'clock, to protect persons and property, and prevent disordering or suspects, and to prevent the landing of goods contrary to the association.

5. That no "wanton alarm" be given to the inhabitants by firing guns or beating drums.

6. That, if any alarm be given in the night, the officer send a sufficient detachment of the guard to inquire into the reason.

7. That every officer carry out the rules of the provincial congress in regard to firing and punishing delinquents.—Am. Arch., IV: 281-82. The sub-committee, which reported these regulations, stated that "the military night watch, which has been kept for several months past [see May 19], has been found of great utility towards preserving peace and good order in this city, and protecting the persons and property of its inhabitants; . . . is become more necessary than ever, from the unsettled state of public affairs, and the recent instances of insults offered to the rights and persons of said inhabitants."—N. Y. Jour., Dec. 21, 1775.

In the course of the debate in the house of commons on the bill to prohibit all trade with the rebellious American colonies (American Prohibitory Bill), Mr. Hartley says: "By this fatal Bill of separation you now declare the British colonies to be enemies in form, therefore it is yourselves that force upon them the rights of enemies. You turn to the enemy, who you are to be responsible to your country for the events of your own war, to which they have been so reluctant and you so precipitate. When this country shall come to open its eyes, to see and to feel the consequences, they will know of whom to require an account. . . . The fate of America is cast. You may bruise its heel, but you cannot crush its heel. It will revive again. The new world is before them. Liberty is theirs. They have possession of a free government, their birthright and inheritance, derived to them from their parent states, which the hand of violence cannot wrest from them. If you will cast them off, my last wish is to them; May they go and prosper! When the final period of this once happy country shall overtake ourselves, either through tumult or tyranny, may another Phoenix rise out of our ashes!"—Parl. Hist. of Eng., XVIII: 1104-5.

Because "discontents have arisen in the minds of many of the citizens of New-York, by a practice of some of the inhabitants to visit the King's ships of war," the provincial congress resolves: "That it be recommended to the inhabitants of this colony, to refrain from going on board of any of the King's ships or vessels of war, without leave of the Committee of a county in this colony, or the Committee of Safety."

The congress are persuaded a resolution "That every person, not an inhabitant, entering into this colony, shall be furnished with a certificate from the Committee of the jurisdiction wherein he last resided, that he is friendly to the Liberties of America, or be subject to be dealt with as a person inimical thereto. This latter order is considered necessary because "unruly persons whose conduct in the neighboring colonies of which they were respectively inhabitants, has been unfriendly to liberty, and occasioned their removal into this colony; and should such removals continue, the number of disaffected persons in this colony will be increased, and the same considerations which forbid the worship of enemies to the liberties of America."—N. T. Merc., Dec. 25, 1775.

Because the king’s mails have been “taken and obstructed” at Baltimore, Philadelphia, and other places, the deputy postmaster-general informs the public that he is obliged “to stop all the post-office letters which arrive on the packets will be kept on board, and the names of those to whom they are addressed will be advertised, in order that the people may apply in person or by friends for their mail.”—N. T. Merc., Dec. 25, 1775; 4 Am. Arch., IV: 453.

...His Majesty’s Ships the Phoenix and Asia now lie in the East River; the latter opposite Murray’s Wharf, and the former near Burling’s Slip."—N. Y. Merc., Dec. 25, 1775. See Jan. 29, 1776.

An address “To the Freeholders and Freeman of New-York,” signed “A Citizen,” is published as a broadside. It reads: “I have good reason to assure you that there is a scheme in agitation to surprise and confound you in a matter of the last importance—the election of members for a new assembly. I therefore conjure you, as you value your rights as citizens, and the safety and happiness of the colony, to be upon your guard. A pit is digging, a net is spreading for you; be careful, be vigilant—suffer not yourselves to be deceived by the contrivances and intrigues of wicked men, who will court your favour to destroy you, and will cajole you to betray you. You have had abundant experience of the danger of an injudicious choice. . . . It is your duty and interest, as far as lies in your power, to fill every department with men, whose known character and situation give you full reason to expect they will be entirely devoted to your service. But it concerns your lives and properties, in an especial manner, to choose proper men to represent you in the legislature of your country. It is essential to your happiness as citizens—it is essential to your existence as freemen . . .

You have had a fair opportunity of seeing men in their true characters, you know who are your friends, and who your enemies, who will stand by and protect you in time of danger, and who will desert and betray you . . . Remember you are to choose men to be the guardians of your rights for seven years. To do you justice for so long a time, you will require men of uncommon virtue, and of a truly independent spirit, else you will have no security against their being corrupted. They should be men of abilities also, well acquainted with the constitution, and with the circumstances of the province.

“When you are called upon, come forth with that independent unbiased spirit, which becomes free citizens. Despise all the views of party. They are beneath you. They ought never to be considered as the interests of your country are concerned. All you ought to regard, is, the intrinsic worth of the candidates who submit themselves to the choice and election.”—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library. Another broadside of similar purport, signed “A Poor Man,” appeared the following day. See an original in N. Y. Pub. Library.

Just prior to the Revolution, a little Catholic congregation worshiped in the house of a devout German, in Wall St. The Jesuit Father, Ferdinand Steinmeyer, ministered to them on his trips from Maryland. To avoid arrest, he assumed the name of Farmer and entered the city in disguise. The house was burned in the fire of 1766; the congregation was broken up, and Father Steinmeyer in 1745. St. Peter’s Church, built in 1785-6, was the first Roman Catholic church erected in New York, although Catholic services were held in Fort James under Gov. Dongan as early as 1687.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 936.

Prior to this year, the house of Walter Rutherfurd was erected at the north-west corner of Broadway and Vesey St.—Dart, Reminiscences of an Old New Yorker, 38–39. It was demolished to make room for the Astor House, which for so many years occupied the block from Vesey to Pearl St., on Broadway. See Landmarks Map Ref. Key, III: 955; 976; Pl. 174, Vol. III. The following account of New York, written by William Dunlap, and published in 1813, describes some of the prominent features of the city at this period: “The new road, now Broadway, stopped at the gardens which surrounded what has since been called the Sailor’s Snug Harbour [Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947], then the country-seat of Andrew Elliot, Esq. At another spot, now the corner of Leonard Street and Broadway, stood a house and gardens, the rural retreat of our citizens, called, from a retreat of the kind near London, the white Conduit House [ibid., III: 981]. It has been since called Mount Vernon Gardens [ibid., III: 980], and had, as will be seen, a theatre attached to it, the remains of which were visible within seventeen years. Nearly opposite, on the other side of the new road, were the remains of aqueducts and reservoirs begun some time before 1775 [see April 22, 1774], for the purpose of raising water from the City Creek, the pond below, and to the east, before-mentioned, to supply the city with wholesome water from the stagnant receptacle of filth which slaughter-houses and other nuisances poured into it.

On the eastern side, the city terminated, as has been said, by the ship-yards on the line of the water, and at a small distance from the shore by a steep bank, on which was walled in a cemetery called the Jew’s burying-ground. Near this bank stood a house, now a tavern, and called from its central situation Centre House. Beyond the cemetery were orchards, gardens, and meadows, suffering decay from the effects of war.

“To return to the extreme or south point of the island and town. Below the towering hill on which Fort George bristled with cannon, lay the battery, a fortification covering a portion of that health-giving space still bearing the name. Part of the ramparts advanced to the water’s edge, and on the north, between them and Broadway, the rocky foundation protruded, until the earth of the hill on which the towering fort stood was brought down, since the war of independence, to cover them.”—Dunlap, Hist. of the Am. Theatre (1853), I: 84–85.

St. Jean de Crèvecoeur (naturalized as Hector St. John), describing New York as it was between 1770 and 1781, called it “beautiful although irregular.” He said the inhabitants were skilled in the construction of wharves, which were sometimes built in 40 feet of water. “Beaver street, today so far from the seashore was so called because it was near a lake, where these animals made a dive. I have talked with old inhabitants, who have seen the tide rise to the neighborhood of the City Hall [Wall St.]. You know that is more than four hundred fathoms from the sea.”

According to this writer, at that time several of the streets had side walks on both sides, paved with flat stones and adorned with plane trees. The architecture of the city combined Dutch neatness with English taste. The houses, most of which were of brick, were finished and painted with great care.

Crèvecoeur declared that the merchants were “intelligent, able, and rich, and the artisans very skillful, especially the carpenters, the cabinet makers and the joiners.” The New Yorkers, he said, were very hospitable, and the reception they accorded strangers was “enough to give them a high idea of American geniuness, as well as of the simple and cordial friendliness which they are to expect in the other cities of this continent.” Food was so cheap and abundant that every one lived in comfort, “the poorest not even excepted.” There were 3,400 houses, 28,000 inhabitants (cf. 1771, and 1775), and 20 churches (cf. 1767 and 1770) belonging to different sects. These figures, as well as the following references to the college, hospital, waterworks, etc., make it evident that the conditions he describes were such as existed early in 1776.

The Frenchman praised the college, with its library and great number of valuable mathematical instruments, but he regretted that it was not built “in some rural retreat,” far away from “the turmoil of trade, and the distractions and pleasures always numerous in large cities.” He mentioned also the presence of a hospital for sailors, “built at a convenient distance from New York on an eminence not far from the Hudson River;” the Chamber of Commerce (see Feb. 28, 1770); the Marine Society (see April 12, 1770), which, he remarked, had a fund of 50,000, and gave annual pensions
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND.

In 1776 and other assistance "to the widows and children of Ship Masters and other Seamen, who for a certain number of years have contributed to the funds of the Society a portion of their yearly pay;" and an insurance company, "well managed and very rich." He hoped that New York would soon be abundantly supplied with a quantity of bricks, tiles, and other building materials; and if the residents of the city were not disposed to follow this advice, the expense of building would be much greater. It was therefore decided to proceed with the work of building. If fire prevention (cf. March 11, 1776) he said: "If a fire pump is now being erected, the piston of which is eleven inches in diameter, which is to give twelve strokes a minute, and supply fifty-eight pails of water at each movement of the balance wheel. All the habitations are divided into 3,300 rooms, of which are obliged to keep suspended in the hall of their houses a certain number of leathern buckets, and a certain number of bags. They are obliged to carry these to fires with the greatest speed, to help the Firemen to preserve order, to carry water and to save the effects of the victims.

In speaking of the topography of New York, he explained that the city could be reached only by water, "except at Kings-bridge [vide contra Jan. 2, 1759] where a narrow bridge connects the island of Manhattan with the continent. Commerce with the neighboring colonies and with Europe was very extensive. Nothing, in his opinion, could give the "contemplative spectator" a clearer idea of the wealth and free trade here, than the multitude of ships of all sizes in the bay, continually going to and from the city; "this is the reason why so much business is done here without noise and without curs. After speaking of the trade, Crèvecoeur went on to show how much there was in Manhattan, on the point of which New York is built [vide contra, Van der Donck's description—see Jameson's Narr. N. Neth., 294]. The wealth and industry of the habitants have everywhere overcome nature, and everywhere vanquished the obstacles she had set. The eye of a European is agreeably surprised to see the interior of this desert cultivated and filled with farms, these rocky shores placed down, turned into delightful gardens, ornamented with elegant houses, pretty retreats, planted with fruit trees, and become meadows and cultivated fields."

A view of a scene in the park of the estate of Manhattan Island in the neighborhood of the Rutgers house, probably by Montreuxer, about 1770, is reproduced in Vol. III, A. Pl. 6-a.

A view of the "Carrying Place, New York, above Col. Rutgers', East River," also probably drawn in this year, is reproduced in Vol. III, A. Pl. 7-a.

A view of the "Hill Gate, made at about the same time as the above views, is reproduced in Vol. III, A. Pl. 7-4.

In this year, the Americans erected a small obelisk on Cooper Hill, known as the "Coop-hill Fort"; it lay on the summit of Inwood Hill, south of Spuyten Duyvil. The fort was taken by British troops in the action of November 16, 1776. See 20th Ann. Rep., Am. Soc., and Hist. Soc. Pers., 443.

The custom-house is shown on Holland's map, of this date as being on the Beaver Path, or the lower end of Broadway, facing the fort.—See reproduction in Men. Com. Coun. (1865), opp. p. 532; but see description of Pl. 44, 11: 338.

The Gen. Samuel Smith Papers (MS), preserved in Columbia Univ. Library, include an "Auto-biography of General Samuel Smith." He was a captain in Washington's army in the New York campaign, and describes the battle of Long Island and subsequent movements, including the retreat across New Jersey.

In this year, the six students of the class of '76 in Kings College received their degrees, but, as the "Matricula" states, there was no public address given, and there were no new admissions.—Hist. of Columbia Univ. (1904), 50. See April 6. For mention of some of the distinguished graduates of Kings College during its brief career of twenty-two years (1754-1776), including Alexander Hamilton, John Jay, Robert R. Livingston, Robert Troup, Henry Rutgers, Peter Ziegler, John Doughty, Stephen Lush, Edward Dunscomb, Gulian Verplanck, Leonard Lipscomb, and others, see ibid., 52-58.

During the Revolution, a tavern known as the "Cross Keys" stood on the old Kingsbridge Road, at about 16th St. According to tradition, this inn was one of Washington's stopping-places. Its landlord was David Varas (or Vara) on the Col. House and Old Slip."—See ibid., VII: 500; John Austin Stevens, in N. Y. Hist. Post, Nov. 3, 1883.

David Grim, in his remissive note, says that, in this year, a Mr. White, a loyalist, was hanged on a tavern sign-post at the corner of Cherry and Roosevelt Sts.—See Grim's Notes (MS.) in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Grim was himself a tavern-keeper, his house being known as the Hessian Coffee House.—Lauderbank Map Key, III: 978.

"By the winter of 1775-1776, after the non-importation had been effective for about a year, the upward trend of prices indicated the approaching depletion of mercantile stocks; but the radicals in general still preferred to believe that private avarice was the sole animating cause. The chief centers of trouble were the ports of Philadelphia and New York and the markets tributary to them. The dearth and high prices of West India commodities created greatest uneasiness because of their former cheapness and wide household use."—Schlesinger, The Colonial Merchants and the Am. Revolution (Columbia Univ. Studies, 1918), 586, and authorities there cited.

The sheriff gives public notice, as directed by "his Majesty's Jas. Writ," to "the Freemen and Freeholders of the City and County of New York," to assemble on Feb. 1, "on the Green near the Work-House," to choose, by a "Plurality of Voices," four freeholders to be "Representatives" of this city and county, "to assist the Captain General, or Commander in Chief of the Province of New-York, in a General Assembly."—N. Y. Merc. Jan. 8, 1776. See Feb. 1.

Christopher Colles is granted $10, which this Board agreed to allow him towards his Support for the last month." As the council recorded that "a Number of printed Notes (see Aug. 2, 1775) for carrying on the water works to the Value of $2,000 be immediately struck."—M. C. C., VIII: 120, 121. Colles received $10 more on Jan. 19 (ibid., VIII: 124), and other payments later (ibid., VIII: 133, 139). See, further, March 4.

Having learned of the fitting out of a British fleet at Boston and the embarkation of troops for a southern expedition, and believing that "it is a matter of the utmost importance to prevent the enemy from taking possession of the city of New York and the North River, as they will thereby command the country, and the communication with Canada," Washington sends the following orders from his headquarters at Cambridge to Maj.-Gen. Charles Lee: "You will, therefore, with such volunteers as are willing to join you, and can be expeditiously raised, repair to the city of New York; and calling upon the commanding officer of the forces of New Jersey for such assistance as he can afford, you shall require, you are to put that city into the best posture of defence, which the season and circumstances will admit, disarming all such persons upon Long Island and elsewhere, (and if necessary otherwise securing them,) whose conduct and declarations have rendered them justly suspected of designs unfriendly to the views of the Congress.

"You are, also, to inquire into the state and condition of the fortifications up the North River, and as far as shall be consistent with the orders of Congress, or not repugnant to them, to have the works guarded against surprises from a body of men, which might be transported by water near the place, and then marched upon the back of them.

"You will also endeavour to have the medicines, shirts, and blankets, now at New York, belonging to the ministerial troops, secured, and forwarded to this army. Captain Sears can give you particular information concerning them."—Lee Papers, 1776, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1871). William Bayard offers to lease his house and grounds at Greenwich.—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 8, 1776. This inclination on the part of 1776 some of the citizens to rent or sell their country-places, is one of the significant outcomes of the war. For later examples, see Feb. 20, 8 March 4 and 11, 1782.

9 Thomas Paine publishes anonymously, in Philadelphia (see Penn. Mag. Hist., Jan. 9, 1776), a political or propagandist tract having in the first edition the following long title: Common Sense; addressed to the inhabitants of America, On the following interesting subjects. I. Of the Origin and Design of Government in general, with concise Remarks on the English Constitution. II. Of Monarchy and Hereditary Succession. III. Thoughts on the present State of American Affairs. IV. Of the present Ability of America, with some miscellaneous Reflections.

Man knows no Master save creating Heaven, Of whose will and choice common good ordains.

Philadelphia: Printed and Sold, by R. Bell, in Third-Street. MDCCCLXVI.

This was soon followed (on Feb. 17) by another tract, and the two together constitute the ordinary editions of this work (see Sahin, XIV: 124-25). The first edition of this second tract bears the following long title: Large Additions to Common Sense; Addressed to the inhabitants of America, On the following interesting subjects. I. The American Patriot’s Prayer. II. American Independence defended, by Candidus. III. The Propriety of Independence, by De Malph.”

The greed of Tyrants, and the sole resource Of those that under grim Oppression groan.

IV. A Review of the American Contest, with some strictures on the King’s Speech. Addressed to all People in the Thirteen United Colonies, by a Friend to Prosperity and Mankind. V. Letter to Lord Dorsetshun, by an English American. VI. Observations on Lord North’s Conciliatory Plan, by Sincerus. To which is added and given An Appendix to Common Sense; Together with an Address to the people called Quakers, on their Testimony concerning Kings and Government, and the present Case of America. Philadelphia: Printed, and sold, by R. Bell, in Third-Street. MDCCCLXVI.

The first part of this famous work went through at least twelve editions and reprints in different cities and towns of America and Great Britain in 1776, one of these being a reprint by John Anderson in New York (Sabin, XIV: 125). Eras gives the following bibliographical note: “The first edition of Common sense was published in Philadelphia in January, 1776, and the sales soon reached one hundred thousand copies. The Legislature of Pennsylvania voted the Author five hundred pounds in appreciation of its value to the cause of American independence. Large additions were collected by the publisher, and are not the work of Paine except in small part.”—Am. Bibliog., V: 265. See also Frothingham’s Rise of the Republic (1872), 476 (footnote). Paine argues for the total separation of the colonies from Great Britain, and undertakes to prove the necessity, the advantages, and the practicability of independence.—Church Catalogue, 3rd Ed. N. Y., 1805, New Ser., Narc. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VII: 252, 269; Van Tyne, The Am. Revolution, in The American Nation series, IX: 61-63; Schlesinger, The Colonial Merchants and the Am. Revolution (Columbia Univ. Studies, 1918), 591.

During this year, Paine began his American Crisis.—Ibid., VIII: 498.

The king’s speech from the throne (Oct. 26, 1775), declaring that the war, on the part of the colonies, is “manifestly carried on for the establishment of an American empire,” makes its appearance in an American newspaper. He states that, to put an end to the disorders in the colonies, he has increased both the naval and land forces. He recommends the appointment of commissioners with large powers for the purpose of granting pardons to such of the unhappy and deluded multitude as may be convinced of their error by the display of arms.—Penn. Evoc. Post, Jan. 9, 1776.

From the beginning, Madison and other Federalists distrusted and feared the proceedings of committees of correspondence and the conferences of the “sailors and guns-powder.”—Bardin, History of the Making of Salt-Petre and Gun-Powder. Published by Order of the Committee of Safety of the Colony of New-York (1776). See April 17.

The committee of safety at New York orders that Peter van Brugh Livingston, treasurer of the provincial congress, advance to Branscome, as agent of New-York, 624.76 pounds sterling.

The continental congress passes a resolution “That it be recommended to the committee of safety of the province of New York, to appoint proper persons to inquire into the propriety and practicability of obstructing or lessening the depth of water in the narrows, or in any other place at the entrance of New York, or of any way of fortifying that pass, so as to prevent the entrance of the enemy; and also to enquire whether the depth of water in Hudson’s river, below the battery, may not easily be lessened, so as to prevent large ships passing up, and to make an estimate of the expense, and report their proceedings in the premises immediately to Congress.”—Jour. of the Cong. (Ford ed., 1969), IV: 44-45.

James Rivington (see May 10 and Nov. 23, 1775) sails from New York for England.—Moore, Diary of the Am. Rev., citing N. Y. Packet, Jan. 11, 1776. In satire, the Const. Gen. of May 4, 1776, remarked: “It is a strange n. of New York is appointed Cob-Web Sweeper of his Majesty’s Library.”

“There are many other prizes and rewards given to persons who have fled from the colonies, equal to the above mentioned.” For Rivington’s return to New York, see Sept. 25, 1777.

Among the names printed in the Middlesex journal (London) as “American informers” who have deceived Lord North are “William Smith, an attorney at New York, and a counselor James Delancey, a captain in the army; . . . Auchmuthy, a priest.”—Moore, Diary of the Revolution, I: 192-93.

Twenty-one prisoners, including Edward Bardin, confined for debt in the “New-Goal,” give public notice of their intention to petition the “House of General-Assembly” for “An Act for the relief of insolvent debtors within this colony, with respect to the imprisonment of their persons.”—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 15, 1776.

There is offered for lease “All the lands to the south of the road leading from the commons to Hopper’s land, being part of the farm known by the name of the Hermitage, with part of the barn, stables and other outhouses: There is on it a good bearing orchard and garden, with the best of fruits, such as early pears, English cherries, pearmins, &c. It is in good stone fence, near the road, and but three and one half miles from New-York. Enquiry of John Leake.”—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 15, 1776. The Hermitage farm is shown on Pl. 176, Vol. III, lying west of Broadway between (approximately) 40th and 45th Sts. For view of the residence called the “Hermitage,” which was on this farm, on 43 St. between 8th and 9th Aves., see Man. Com. Coun. (1838), 212.

Hugh Gaine publishes the following advertisement: “Just Published, And to be Sold at his Book-Store and Printing-Office, in Hanover-Square, [Illustrated with a beautiful and accurate Copper Plate Plan of the City of New-York.] Gaine’s Universal Register, or American and British Kalendar, For the Year 1776.”—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 15, 1776. There is a copy of this Kalendar in the N. Y. Pub. Library. It is a small handbook (260 p.), containing a great deal of miscellaneous information regarding the history, government, etc., of the various American colonies or provinces, as well as of foreign countries. The first issue appeared in 1773 (p.c.).

William Leary, the town major, reports to the committee of safety that the night before the attack of the lautzenburgers, having found his “good Nature is imposed upon; that the more they do, the more seems to be required at their Hands,” and that they will be compelled “to desist, unless their Fellow Citizens will step forth and aid them in the common cause.” He also mentions “the danger to which this City is nightly exposed, not only from the attacks of External and internal Wretches, but from the Malice and Intemperance of any Individual who monts Guard; and he lays before the committee “particular threats which he has heard from some individuals of those unaly Guards . . . such as firing upon his Majesty’s ships now in the Harbour; an act that must unavoidably bring unspeakable Distress upon the Inhabitants of this City.”—Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 214. Leary’s pay was discontinued on April 10.—Ibid., I: 280-81.

The New York committee of safety publishes a series of essays in a pamphlet on the manufacture of saltpetre and gunpowder, with an introduction bearing this date. It is entitled Essays upon the Making of Salt-Petre and Gun-Powder. Published by Order of the Committee of Safety of the Colony of New-York (1776). See April 17.

John Holt writes to Samuel Adams: "Happening lately to be in Company of a Worker in Metals and speaking of the Cannon lately shipped up at Philadelphia, I asked him if he knew how to
"The Portsmouth, a 74, is her house, & is much more ready to "The City, that they now dare venture to, but on every Occasion Menace the Town with a Cannonade. And if we do not improve the Time before the Spring, or the arrival of Troops and Ships of War from England, I have not the least doubt but they will take possession of the Shores below and adjacent to Hell Gate, fill the Sound with their Small Ships of War & of Course stop all our Navigation in it, keep possession of long Island & make Excursions at pleasure upon the Mainland in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut & Rhode Island.
[See Dec. 25, 1775.]

All this might be efficiently prevented by our immediately erecting one or more strong Forts at & near Hell Gate and others on each Side below at the Narrows, with some Floats near them to obstruct the quick passing of Ships. Some floating Batteries would also be of the utmost importance. These Matters are absolutely necessary, & no Time ought to be lost . . . The Treasures of the Continent are in your Hands, all its Force under your Direction. If these Forts were only begun, with Vigour, in all probability the men of War would immediately decamp . . . One Thing more I would mention.

The Post Office. Under the British Administration, the Primary End which is the augmentation of the Revenue for the public Conveniency, was but a secondary Consideration. With us, at present, and I hope it will always be so, the Care is reverse; the public Conveniency, is the first Object. In comparison of this, the Revenue it produces, is hardly worth the least Notice, and in Order to give it all the Usefulness that might reasonably be expected from it, the Post Masters, from the highest to the lowest should be industriously enjoined to exhibit all the Riders to carry and deliver at the proper places on their Respective Roads, all the News papers that should be brought to the post Offices for that purpose. In what I shall say upon this Subject, I am not in the least influenced by my own private Interest as the Printer of a News paper, but solely by a Regard to the public good. I propose, perhaps in one Week more, to discontinue the printing of a Newspaper, one great Reason of which Intention is, that I cannot get my Papers carried with any Regularity by the Post . . . As a mere Conveniency, the Carriage of News papers is of Importance to more than twenty Times as Many Persons as the Carriage of Letters is . . . But the great Use of News papers is that they form the best opportunities of Intelligence, that could be devised, of every publick Matter that concerns us, besides communicating many Useful Discoveries in Arts and Manufactories & many moral & religious Truths &c. It was by the means of News papers, that we receiv’d & spread the Notice of the tyrannical Designs formed against America, and kindled a Spirit that has been sufficient to repel them . . . The Experience I have had, both as a Printer of a News Paper, and as a Post Master, which I was for Many Years, convinces me that what I have now mentioned to you concerning News papers, is just, and a Matter that should be caretfully watched . . . It is the business of the Continental Congress alone who can put this Matter upon a proper Footing . . .—From the original letter preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library, and printed in John Holt—Printer and Postmaster, by V. H. Paltius (1820), 10–15.

An equally divided vote, for and against, is taken by the officers of the Battalion of "Colonel Thomas L.,” as to whether the "Colonel’s pensioners” on the question whether they are willing that the battalion shall engage, as a battalion, “in the Cause of this Country on the Terms and Conditions offered by the Committee of Safety.”
A list is made, however, of the commissioned and non-commissioned officers, and some of the privates (showing their names, offices, and independent companies, who “are willing to Enter in the service of their Country.” These include Col. John Laisher, and
Maj. Sebastian Bauman.

The next day, certain non-commissioned officers of the first Battalion of Minute-men of the City of New York” petitioned the provincial congress, in behalf of themselves and the privates of this battalion, expressing their willingness to remain in the service, but asking for back pay, and that their duties might be confined to this city only, where their friends and relatives are.

In this petition, the original organization of this battalion was thus described: "That the Militiamen for the defence of their invulnerable Rights and Privilegites, formed themselves into different Companies under different officers . . .

"That sometime after . . . the Companies to which they severally belonged were formed into one Battalion by the style & name of the New York. . . .

"That after they had so formed themselves into a Battalion, Field officers were appointed. That after the appointment . . .
pursuant to an order or Recommendation of the Honourable the Continental Congress and of the Honourable the Provincial Convention for this Colony, they jointly and severally became Minute Men.

"That agreeable to their orders as Minute Men, they have at all times been ready, and have actually turned out to do their duty as such both by day and night when so required to do by this

CHRONOLOGY : THE REVOLUTIONARY PERIOD : 1763-1776 913

The "principal People in and out of Congress were privy," wearing only "a mask of union with the other colonies till Troops should arrive in the Spring," Gen. Lee, when he came from Cambridge to Hartford, "published a Cull upon the People of that neighbourhood to join his Colours for a month to suppress a dangerous conspiracy." Waterbury's men believed their mission was "to burn New York and thus cut off communication between the traitors and the army at Boston." Lee had been carried ill of the Gout," but their regiment of light horse had proceeded to Kingsbridge, only to find a dispatch from Gen. Lee to the effect that "the Congress approved the Sentiments of the New York Committee," and so the light horse were dismissed. Seymour imputed the scandal "to Gent. Sears, Samuel Bromson, &c. Whittward, New Yorkers who had removed their effects to New England and were of that Party who some time since came down on Horse back and carried off Rivington's Types manu forti at noon day" (see Nov. 23, 1775). When the firing of New York was being planned at Stamford, Sears had expressed himself as eager for it despite the inevitable loss of a house he claimed to own there worth several thousand dollars. Therefore, when Seymour learned that Sears did not own a house or "an ounce of moveable property" in the city, he went back home "highly enraged at the Cheat which had put their Colony to a vast Expence & with a resolution to prevent Seymour's Committee and Command of a crafty amalgamation for the Continental service."—William Smith's Diary (M.S.), Feb. 2 and 3, 1776, preserved in N. Y. Pub. Library. See also June 8, 1775.

The committee of safety, meeting in the "Committee Chamber," are of opinion that "lesseasing the number and quorum of the Committee of Safety at 4 or 5 Members" will be a "great Expedient" for the building of the Continental service."—Smith's Diary (M.S.), Feb. 2, 1776.

In the morning arrived General Clinton [Sir Henry Clinton, who was on his way South to join Admiral Parker in his movement on South Carolina] in the Mercury Man of War from Boston & transport Brig the same day arrived General Lee White [with] 500 men it is impossible to Describe the Convusen that this City was in on account of the Reglers Being Com some said ther was 15 sail Below & would Be up the Nex day."—From letter of Garish Harian, op. cit., 85-86.

"This afternoon Mr. Lee, a General of the New English [New England] troops came to town; ... The men of war here took a merchant ship coming in, &c; all which made commotions in the town."—Shewkirk's Diary, in Johnson's Campaign of 1776, Part 4.

Gen. Charles Lee, who came to town from Boston, was escorted by a company of riflemen, a body-guard, and a regiment of Connecticut men.—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 667; Penn. Exq. Post, Feb. 8, 1776. A letter from New York states that Gen. Lee "was escorted into town by Capt. Learcy's troop of light horse, and a great number of our principal inhabitants."—Penn. Exq. Post, Feb. 6, 1776. He lodged at Mrs. De La Montaigne's, who kept a public house on the Common. While he had command in New York, about 200 pieces of heavy cannon, which were mounted in Fort George and on the Battery, were placed on the Common in front of his quarters; but lest, upon the arrival of the British army, they should be retaken, he later ordered them carried to Kingsbridge.—Jones, Hist. of N. T., during the Revolution, II: 82. In connection with Jones's work, see Johnston, Observations on Judge Jones' Loyalist attitude, Topography, in the spring, Gen. Lee, and Dickerson, People had taken it into their Heads that we had come with positive Orders from the Congress to Gen'l Lee to attack the Men of War lying here, which would have introduced the Destruction of the Town. In consequence of this they were all in Motion moving out their Household Goods & Families. With Difficulty we quieted their apprehensions by Assurances that the Purport of our journey was directly the Reverse. No sooner was this Matter accomplished than their [the father as surveyor] with greater Probability of Reason, by the Arrival of Gen'l Clinton [see Feb. 4], who we had Intelligence, sailed from Boston with some Men of War & 600 Soldiers destined as was supposed for this Town. The Troops which accompanied him are not yet arrived but are supposed to be left behind him. My Father, with Sandy Hook, & we have every Reason to conclude are intended to make an Attack on one of [the southern colonies], most probably Virginia . . . I assure you that when Ml Clinton arrived I fully expected that Hostilities would immediately have commenced & the Scene which would then have ensued was sufficient to storm the Southern Coast, and blow the Town to the Ground. However thank God the Storm has at present blown over & the Town begins to recover its Calmness."—M.S. letter preserved in N. Y. Pub. Library.

On the same day, Pastor Shewkirk, of the Moravian congregation, wrote: "Soldiers came to town both from Connecticut and the Jerseys, and the whole aspect of things grew frightful, and increased so from day to day. The inhabitants began now to move away in a surprising manner. The weather was very cold, and the rivers full of ice, which proved a great obstruction to the People's moving . . ."—Pastor Shewkirk's diary, in The Campaign of 1776, part 4, 105.

The committee of safety made no attempt to "ease the Inhabitants chusing to urge their Flight that the empty Houses might be used as Barracks for the Soldiers they had sent for."—Wm. Smith's Diary (M.S.), Feb. 5, 1776.

Gen. Charles Lee writes to Washington: "We are to erect enclosed batteries, on both sides of the water, near Hellgate, which will answer the double purpose of securing the town against piracies through the Sound, and secure our communication with Long Island."—Lee Papers, I: 272, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1871).

Trevor Newland writes to Benjamin Franklin outlining a plan for building battery coast defences. It is not intended for any specified locality.—Lee Papers, I: 286-92.

At a conference held at Major-Gen. Lee's headquarters in New York, the committee of safety decides upon making "a secure fortified lodgment for the troops" in New York, wherever Gen. Lee or other commander shall think best, "for preventing the ministerial troops from taking possession of this City." They also decide that such an entrenched encampment and other works should be made on Nassau Island, wherever Gen. Lee or other commander shall think best; also that such works should be erected at Hell-Gate.—Jour. of the Com. of Safety, I: 284.

"Lord Stanley arrived wht 1000 men from the Jerseys."—From letter of Garish Harian, op. cit., 86-87. This was William Alexander, Earl of Stirling, who was born in the city of New York in 1716, and succeeded his father as usual to the title of Lord of New Jersey. He was appointed a brigadier-general in the continental army on March 1, 1776.—Ibid., 86, footnote. Another authority gives Feb. 6 as the date of his arrival.—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 667. See also reference to him in N. Y. Packet, Feb. 15, 1776; and "Life of William Alexander, Earl of Stirling," in N. J. Hist. Soc. Collections (1847), Vol. II.

Gen. Lee writes to Gov. Trumbull, of Connecticut: "It is determined to take strong possession of the city, as well as of its most important environs, in short to put the Province in such a situation as to render any attempt of the enemy to establish themselves in it ineffectual. For this purpose some additional Battalions are ordered to be levied in this Province. But from the great scarcity of men & greater of arms, I apprehend it will be a considerable time before they can be completed & equipped in such a manner as to be formidable in whom they can be placed. The enemy may perhaps very soon appear and we ought immediately to be ready to receive them. I could, therefore, Sir, wish that if Col. Ward's regt is not already disbanded and your Colony can spare them, that they be immediately detached for this place. But if it is disbanded that you may send a sufficient number of volunteers, equal in number to that regt completely armed and accoutred." He adds in a postscript: "Gen'l Clinton arrived almost in the same instant with myself: he has brought no men with him, at least that we can discover & has given his word of honor none are coming. Says it is only a friendly visit to Ml Tryon, but the fact is, I suppose he came only to reconcile whether the Coast was clear and his friends the toys ready for his reception."—A. S. Brown, Ward, C. Lee, Kirkwood, Harris (1765-80), 68-69, in Harvard Coll. Library.

"The Governor sent for the Mayor, and desired him to assure the public, that General Clinton was only come to pay him a visit on his way, and that the troops should not land here; nevertheless it was thought necessary to keep a sharp look out, for fear they should land by surprise, in consequence of which half of our battalion kept guard all night, the other half the next, the second battalion doing the same. Nothing hostile has yet commenced, but God knows how soon it may. The ice obliges the ships to warp closer to land. This day the ice is breaking from side to side, and many people upon it."—Penn. Evoc. Post, Feb. 10, 1776.

8 The committee of safety issues a statement, signed by Henry Remsen, chairman, and addressed to the inhabitants of the neighboring counties and colonies, that "this city is now become a scene of confusion and distress, occasioned by an apprehension, that unmerited hostilities will shortly be commenced by the ships of war lying in this harbour; under the influence of this belief many of our poor are abandoning their habitations, and flying for protection into the arms of their brethren in the neighboring counties and provinces. This Committee therefore earnestly intreat all those among whom such poor may come, to exercise great kindness and lenity towards them, by furnishing them with habitations and other necessaries of life, for their present subsistence, on the easiest terms, and accommodating them in any other way, which their present duty to the poor, as Christians, may direct."—N. Y. Packet, Feb. 15, 1776.

"This day the Freemen and Freeholders are to meet at the City-Hall, at noon, to nominate and elect fifty persons, whereof twenty-one to make a quorum, to serve as a Committee for six months."—N. Y. Packet, Feb. 8, 1776.

8 The 8 Instant added New Life to the moving for about 3 o'clock arrived a ship Whit 200 Souldiers from Boston it is impossible to Describ the Consternation the Woman Where in as a Report pravail that 19 ship where Below however ther was no moor."—From letter of Garish Harris, in N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 87. Tryon wrote to Dartmouth from the "Dutchess of Gordon": "This City is in Terror and confusion: One half of its inhabitants have withdrawn with their effects, hundreds without the means to support their families."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII, 687.

9 Gen. Charles Lee writes to the president of congress: "A transport is this instant arrived in this harbour with troops, although it is said that General Clinton gave his honour that not a soldier was destined for this place. As we have, sir, a great deal to do, many works to throw up, Long Island to secure, and a considerable deal of duty necessary for the safety of the city, . . . it is requisite to provide for the same, and that is to be taken redactus; it is true, the Committee of Safety (whose zeal and alacrity seem most fervent) have ordered three regiments of Minute-Men into the city; but I apprehend even this addition will not enable us to accomplish the measures resolved upon . . . the Congress would do well, to establish an Hospital in this Colony,"—Lee Papers, IV, 279-80, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1871). See also Addenda.

After noting the arrival of the British transport "Ketty" with 200 soldiers, a news report states: "In Consequence of the above Maneuver, his Excellency the Earl of Stirling, arrived here from New-Jersey, with about 1000 Mense 2000 are daily expected from Pennsylvania; 1000 from Dutchess-County in this Province, and 2000 from Connecticut; so that we may this Week have an Army here of near 8000 effective Men."—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 12, 1776.

The 9 & 10 Instant Nothing materiel hapen pepol movong as if it was the Last Day as General Lee was to Begin to brech the 12 Instant."—From letter of Garish Harris, p. 367, 87.

A British man-of-war, transports, and tender, go from New York Harbour on this day to the "Watering-place" (near the present Quarantine), with 200 marines on board. It is reported that they intend to construct fortifications on Staten Island, and supply themselves with live stock. "General Livingston, in his march forth to prevent this, but learning that the fleet had left the Hook the day before, the troops were ordered back, leaving a detachment to guard the coast."—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 19; N. Y. Packet, Feb. 22; Penn. Evoc. Post (Phila.), Feb. 23, 1776.

The Dutchman troops seize the king's artillery and military stores in Fort George and on the lower battery, and carry them off without opposition,"—(the same day that General Clinton sailed out of this Fort [Port], . . . Cap. Parker [of the "Phoenix"] finding it impossible to interrupt this outrage otherwise than by firing on the City. The ice keeping the ships of war so near within shore that he was of opinion he could not bring the Ships under his Command to lay off the Fort in which Battery, the Chief Part of the stores were deposited without great risk to the King's Ships from the Ice at that severe season. The destruction therefore of the City where there were so many friends to Government, with the loss of all their property, & the consideration of preserving the town for the King's army was thought to be too great sacrifice for that purpose; but ordered the removal of the Artillery and Stores, which even after such sacrifices could have been carried off by the Jersey and the Connecticut Troops; who came into town with full expectations, and the declarative purpose of sharing in the plunder of the effects of the Inhabitants as soon as the King's Ships should fire on the City."—From Tryon's letter of April 6 to Lord Germain, N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII, 674. See also Garish Harris' letter in N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 87; Smith says:

The whole Town was alarmed with the Removal of all the Cannon from the Fort and Battery to the Field—Carts now imployed for the Stores & ammunition & the Cannon drawn by Hands with an astonishing uproar & shouting & the work continued all Day long with an almost intire neglect of all public worship. The multitude expected every Moment a Firing from the Ships. . . . About midday Lord Stirling went into the House & publicly apprised the Governor of his having the Conduct of this Business & appalled himself for transacting in open Day as less alarming to the Inhabitants but I withheld my Confidence . . . let off no Reprosses for distressing the Town at such an Intermperate Season because I found the Attempt to persuade People to continue at Home taken by the Committee."—Wm. Smith's Diary (M.S.), Feb. 11, 1776.

Gen. Charles Lee writes from New York to the president of congress: "As the North-River is now entirely clear of ice, I thought it imprudent to suffer the cannon and other stores to remain any longer upon the Battery, and in yards at the very waterside, from whence the ships of war might have conveyed them at their pleasure. . . . I ordered the whole to be removed to the ground before the Upper Barrackts; it was effectuated without the least opposition, or show of opposition from the ships; indeed, I even consider their menaces to fire upon the town as idle gasconades."—Lee Papers, I, 285.

"Last Lord's day [Feb. 1] we were in much confusion; people in almost every street were loading carts with their goods. Our churches were nearly empty, and those who went could scarcely hear the Preacher's voice. In short, all was trepidation and confusion. The greatest part of the inhabitants, with their moveables, were taken reluctantly, particularly the women and children. What aggravated the distressing scene was, the poor were flying with their children and little all, to the country, many of whom could scarcely pay their ferriage, and did not know where to get shelter. It is worthy of observation, that though many were taking advantage of the distresses of their brethren, by charging exorbitant prices for cartage, freight, etc.; there were some who acted a worthy part, and came from a considerable distance in the country, to carry the goods of poor people, gratis.—An example worthy of imitation."—N. Y. Packet, Feb. 15, 1776.

Pastor Sherwick's report for this day says: "The carts went all the day with the goods of the people that are moving; moreover, in the forenoon the Soldiers began to take away all the guns from the Battery and the Fort, and continued till late. This caused an hourly expectation, especially in the afternoon, that the men of war would fire . . . The Campaign of 1776, Part II, p. 192.

The committee of safety, "observing that the cannon and military stores, on and near the battery, are now under removal to other parts of the city; and knowing that this transaction, both in its design and execution, is without the consent of this committee, . . . and as perhaps such removal may bring on a firing from the city, have requisite 200 militiamen to march forth to prevent this, but learning that the fleet had left the Hook the day before, the troops were ordered back, leaving a detachment to guard the coast."—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 19; N. Y. Packet, Feb. 22; Penn. Evoc. Post (Phila.), Feb. 23, 1776.
there securely kept, under such guard, until the further order of the provincial congress of this colony, or of this committee of safety; and the said guard are hereby expressly required to prevent the said Samuel Bayard, Esq. to have continual access to, and the direction of the said records, except that he and every other person be prevented from removing them, or any of them, from the place where they are hereby ordered to be deposited,

On the same day, the same appointments, taken by the said Nicholas Bayard. The deputy secretary was taken with them, as directed in the order of the committee of safety; but, upon giving his “parol of honor,” he was permitted on Feb. 14 to attend a council meeting on board the “Dutchess of Gordon,” as deputy clerk of that board, and deliver or give the general resolutions and the resolution of the committee—Report to the Sec. of State, relative to the Records, &c. in his office (in senate, Jan. 5, 1820). Cf. Col. Coun. Min., 507, which gives Feb. 14 as the date of the removal of the records.

With the capture of New York City by the British these records started on a peripatetic career. Whenever the capital of the state was moved the records were moved. Whenever was heard the cry “the enemy are coming” the sacred documents were the first articles to be seized and hastily conveyed to a place of safety. Upon the approach of the enemy to Kingsport, the archives of the county were sent to Hobart and, a small town in Ulster county. After Burgoyne’s defeat, the archives were returned to Kingston, where they were guarded by a special detail of 200 men.—Pub. Papers of Geo. Clinton, 10: 1–11.

13 Mayor Whitehead Hicks tells the provincial congress that Gov. Tryon has communicated to him that “His Majesty’s Council, and some of the magistrates of this city, may have occasion to wait on His Excellency.” It is therefore ordered “That the Honble. Cadwallader Colden, Lieut-Govr. and the Hons. Danl. Horsmanden, Oliver De Lancey, Chas. Ward, Aephorpe, William Smith, Salem Wallack, William AXtell and John Harry Cruyger, Exors. of His Majesty’s Council for this Colony, the Worshipful Whitehead Hicks, Esqr. Mayor of the city of New-York, and Saml. Bayard, Jnqr. Esqr. Deputy Secretary, and Deputy Clerk be permitted to go on board His Excellency’s ship, until the further order or direction of this Congress or the Committee of Safety.”—Jour. Propin. Cong., I: 296. Smith, in his diary, recites his difficulty in passing the sentinels thus: “We proceeded to the Dock [to embark for the council meeting on the Dutchess of Gordon] apprehending no difficulties from the Guards—A sentinel forbid the Clerk of the Council to set his Foot in the Boat upon which we retired and I wrote home,—The Congress took the Alarm apprehending that if we did not meet the Governor there would be no Prorogation & a Dissolution would follow—within Half an Hour their Clerks sought for the dispersed members & assured us there would be no further Obstruction & imported us to repair again; but—what he Smith writes is as follows—Feb. 14.—I went home and was informed that the whole machinery of the Senate and Assembly was in disuse and the Congress of this city was to repair at midnight to the vessel Dutchess of Gordon. On that vessel we landed and returned to this city.—Jour. Propin. Cong., I: 301.

14 “Application being made by some of the master carpenters employed in building the continental frigates, to some members of this house, informing, that about fifty of their journeymen and apprentices had engaged as volunteers to march with the battalion of associates for New York, and that their zeal for the public service is such, that they cannot be persuaded to desist by any arguments or influence of said builders,” it is resolved “That the spirit and zeal of the said journeymen and apprentices is highly approved of by Congress; but, nevertheless, it is the opinion of this Congress, that the public will be more essentially served by the said associates continuing at their work on the said continental frigates; and that, therefore, all the carpenters, journeymen, and apprentices, employed as aforesaid, be requested to remain in that service, as there is no doubt but other associates will compleat the number wanted.”—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 147–48.

The Congress orders that John Van Cortlandt, Mr. Roosevelt, and Capt. Rutgers act as a committee to examine the lists of empty houses in this city, made by sundry citizens at the request of the Committee of Safety, and to ascertain such as they may think most proper for the use of the troops.”—Jour. Propin. Cong., I: 301.

Mayor Whitehead Hicks resigns office, having been appointed on this day to be justice of the supreme court in place of Robert Livingston, deceased (Col. Coun. Min., 506–7); and Alderman David Mathews is appointed by Gov. Tryon to be mayor.—M. C. G., VIII: 177; N. Y. Merc., Feb. 19; N. Y. Jour., Feb. 21, 1776. Smith, in his diary, quotes Gov. Tryon as saying to the council that Hicks was “tired of the mayoralty & desirous to retire from the Town.” He further says: “I then knew Mr Tryon did intend to the Board as at this meeting. He thought as he had no Instructions he could constitute Judges without us but he chose nevertheless to consult us, and then he nominated Mr Hicks for a Judge.—This occasioned the Silence of the Rest of the Board on these appointments, and the Board was of opinion in giving no opinion, especially as there was indeed no Objection to be made since the principal Characters of the Country were in open Opposition to Gov.s.—Wm. Smith’s Diary (MS.), Feb. 14, 1776. Royal artillery ordnance are removed from the fort and lower battery.—Col. a copy of the Board.”

Gen. Charles Lee writes from New York to Washington: “My intention is to pull down that part of the fort on the town side to prevent its being converted into a citadel for the enemy, and to erect a battery on a traverse in the street, to prevent their making a lodgment in it.”—Lee Papers, I: 249 See Feb. 23, 29, March 14.

The alarm and confusion in this city, for some days past, was truly distressing, occasioned chiefly by the unexpected arrival of Gen. Clinton in the Mercury frigate [on Feb. 4], and two other vessels, a ship with troops, and a brig, from Boston. They sailed from hence three days ago, it is said, for North-Carolina, since which we have enjoyed some small degree of quiet but how long it will continue, is hard to tell.”—N. Y. Packet, Feb. 15, 1776.

The provincial congress passes the following resolution: “Whereas a large body of troops are daily expected from the neighbouring counties and Colonies, for the defence of this city against the ministerial army and navy, in which case it will be necessary (as the barracks are already filled with those already arrived), to provide proper houses for their reception: It is therefore Resolved and Ordered, That the general committee of the city and county of New-York, be requested forthwith to cause a return to be made to them herein of all empty houses in their city, and, they, or a sub-committee of their body, select a sufficient number of said houses for the accommodation of the troops that shall, from time to time arrive. That in the choice of the said houses such be taken as are least liable to be injured by the troops. That the said committees, or their sub-committee, be careful to take a survey of the condition of the said houses, at the time they shall be taken possession of, and at the time such houses shall be left by the said troops, to the end that proper satisfaction may be made to the proprietors for any injury the said houses may receive by reason of quartering troops therein.”—Jour. Propin. Cong., I: 301.

“Col. McDougall informed the Congress that he understood that the floors were laid in the hospital lately erected in this city.” Congress orders “That Col. Swartwout be authorized to demand the keys of the hospital lately erected in this city and open the same for the use of the troops, and that the sub-committee, he thinks them proper for quartering troops in, that he be authorized to make use of the same for his regiment of minute men.”—Jour. Propin. Cong., I: 301.

Gen. Charles Lee writes from New York to the president of congress: “I think it my duty to inform you, that the Phœnix and Governor Tryon’s ship are already out of the harbour, and that the Asia is under sail. They most probably, have had intelligence of the danger which threatens their comrade, the Mercury, and General Clinton, from your fleet, and are sailed with an intention of attacking her. The Asia ran aground opposite the Exchange; as the tides are low, we were in hopes she would not have been able to have got off this flood. In these hopes we were preparing cartridges for some pieces of cannon, (which is not here from want of method, a very short operation,) and had slighthed ourselves that we should have been able to have destroyed or much damaged her, but she is now, unfortunately, afloat.”—Am. Archives, IV: 1179–80.

Under the same date, Smith recorded: “The Phœnix fell down this morning to the Narrows & the Asia ran aground opposite to Whitehall in the afternoon in retiring with the Dutchess of Gordon below the Town. She got off before the Preparations were compleat, for Lee & Stirling had no resolved & many of the Citizens were hastened in their Flight to the Country.”—Wm. Smith’s Diary (MS.), Feb. 17, 1776. “Capt. Vandevent of the ‘Asia’ is stationed in North River, and takes the Dutchess of Gordon under his protection with Governor Tryon on board.”—N. Y. Col. Diary, VIII: 674.
A debate is held in the house of commons on a motion for an inquiry into the causes of the ill success of the British arms in America. Mr. Fox declares "that our ministers wanted both wisdom and integrity; that our representatives in parliament were weak and disunited; and that our commanders by sea and land, who were the more probable, had acted under orders that prevented them from executing the great objects of their command." He moves "that it be referred to a Committee, to inquire into the causes of the ill success of his Majesty's Arms in North America, as also into the causes of the defect of the peace of the province of Quebec.

All the speakers except the solicitor-general, who "insisted that the war was just and expedient, that the ministers abounded in wisdom, and the army and navy in military prowess," agreed that the war had been poorly managed and executed. Some, however, objected to the motion as premature, and impracticable, because the witnesses and principals were on the other side of the ocean, or because an enquiry "would produce a fatal procrastination."

Lord Mulgrave defended the naval operations; Gen. Burgoyne those of the army; Mr. Hey, chief-justice of Quebec, the Quebec Bill; and Lord North the ministry.

"Mr. Burke shewed from the records of parliament and from history, that nothing was more frequent than enquiries of the kind now proposed; and observed that, at no time within the course of his reading, did he ever recollect a period at which such a proceeding was more absolutely necessary than the present."

The common council authorizes the payment of £12,176:6 to Isaac Mead, "for the doors of the hall where the Arms was taking out Sundry Articles for the New goal & Repairing the Sentry Boxes." —Original voucher in comptroller's office; M. C. G., VIII: 127.

Alexander Moncreiff is paid £60;09, "in full of his Accs for sundry Expenses attending the Bridewell including a Quarters Salary." —M. C. G., VIII: 129. Moncreiff's account includes 2,413 days' subsistence for vagrants, at 5 shillings per day.—Original voucher in comptroller's office.

Dawthuyn produces the following in the common council the resignation of Mayor Hicks, dated Feb. 14 (9.), which shows that it is entered in "Lib: No D of Commissions page 184," in the secretary of state's office; and informs the board that Gov. Tryon has appointed him to the offices of mayor, water-bailiff, and clerk of the market. His commission is published, and he is "condemned to the Common Council Chamber, and placed in the Chair." —M. C. G., VIII: 127. Regarding the subsequent career of Mayor Mathew's, see ibid., VIII: 147-49 and June 21.

Samuel Loudon announces that his circulating library now amounts to over 2,000 volumes, and that a supplementary catalogue is about to be issued to subscribers.—"N. T. Packet," Feb. 22, 1776.

Frederick Rhemlander writes from New York to Peter Van Schaack: "General Lee is taking every necessary step to fortify and defend this city. The men-of-war are gone out of our harbor; the Philadelphia; the New York; the Lancaster; and they are now in a state of perfect peace and security, was it not for our apprehensions of future danger. To see the vast number of houses shut up, one would think the city almost evacuated. Women and children are scarcely to be seen in the streets. Troops are daily coming in; they break open and quarter themselves in any houses they please. We are going to raise a new battalion; Colonels Lasher and Governor Morris are candidates for the command."—Life of Peter Van Schaack, 53.

In the course of a debate in the house of commons on American measures, Mr. Hartley says: "I frequently hear the terms of rebellion and rebels made use of, which I shall never adopt: not only because I would avoid every term of acrimony which might increase the ill-blood between us and our fellow subjects, in America, but likewise, thinking it likely that the ministry of this country have been in every stage the aggressors; I never will, as a Whig of Revolution principles, confound terms so fundamentally the reverse to each other, as defensive resistance in the support of our rights and liberties. Dr. Trist has taken every measure to find out some proper place for a hospital, the only two obtained being Mr. De Lancey's house in the Out Ward, and three houses in and near Maiden Lane, near Walton's brewery. Congress is of opinion that the place in Maiden Lane will not answer the purpose, and that Mr. De Lancey's house in the Bowery is the most proper. A committee is appointed to seek for the house of John de Lancey for the use of his house.—"Jour. Prov. Cong.," I: 723.

The committee reported in March, however, that they "had viewed the house on Freshwater Hill, where John Fowler lately dwelt, with two barns adjoining. That Dr. Treat hastily approved of said house and barns for a hospital; that they had contracted for the said house and barns, &c. for the rent of £50 from the 1st day of May next." This action congress ratified.—Ibid., I: 356. See also April 6.

Col. McDougall informs the provincial congress "that some works will be necessary to be erected on some ground on the bank southwest of Trinity church; that three small houses there (one of them tenanted) will necessarily be taken down." Mr. Roosevelt, Capt. Rutgers, and Mr. Beekman, "who are judges of buildings," are appointed a committee to examine and determine the value of the three buildings.—"Jour. Prov. Cong.," I: 343.

Gen. Charles Lee writes: "I have pulled down the interior 29 part of the fort, lest it shou'd be converted into a Citadel by Mr. Tryon and his Myrmidons."—"Lee Papers," I: 334.

John Murray, in the 7th Regiment from Edinburgh, engraves all manner of plate, seals, coats of arms," etc., From an advertisement in Rivington's Royal Gaz., Feb. 28, 1776; Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 187.

Gen. Charles Lee writes to Gen. Washington from New York: "Waterbury's and Sterling's Regiments are quartered in the City; the former in the Upper barracks, the latter in the Lower. Two hundred minute men are likewise lodged in the town. Drake's regiment of minute men, and one company more (in all about two hundred) are stationed at Horn's Hook which commands the pass at Hell Gate. They are employed in throwing up a redoubt, to contain three hundred men. As to the town, having few hands, and the necessary duty being hard, I have been able to effect little. I have indeed thrown down the side of the fort next the town, to prevent its being covered [converted] into a citadel for the use of the enemy. It was absolutely impossible to be moulded into anything which could annoy their ships. I have likewise thrown a traverse or barrier, across the Broadway two hundred yards in the rear of the fort, with four pieces of cannon to prevent the enemy lodging themselves in the remains of the fort and repairing it. It is likewise my intention to barricade all the streets leading into the Broadway both on the right and left, to secure us against being taken in reverse. Batteries are to be erected on the eminence behind Trinity Church, to keep their ships at so great a distance as not to injure the town. As we are surrounded by navigable waters I consider enclosed works as rather dangerous; it was therefore my intention to throw up a great number of small Redoubts or redan, in a 'coordinate' distance, one behind another, so as to render it a disputable field of battle against any force. King's Bridge being a most important pass (without the command of which we could have no communication with Connecticut) I had resolved to make as strong as possible. Such were my schemes; but as the Congress have not furnished the force which I was taught to expect from Philadelphia, we have not had it in our power to effect more than I have related. Governor Tryon and the Asia still continue betwixt Nutten's and Bedloe's Islands."—From Lee Papers, I: 337-38.

Those ministers who have so madly driven them on to an unavoidable resistance, must be answerable to their country for all future consequences. I wish to enter my protest once for all, that I shall always think the present measures, so foolishly and wantonly, is a great danger to their existence in their own defence, and in support of those very claims [for] which we ourselves have successfully taken up arms in former times, to rescue us from the violence and tyrannical pretentions of the House of Stuart."—Provinc. Jour., 1774 (MS.), N. Y. Pub. Library.

Ninety Cannon, of various Sizes, have been taken from Fort George in New-York, and that Part of the Fort next to the City is demolished.

"Numbers of Cannon are mounted on different Wharves in that Port.

"We learn that all the Cannon near Kingsbridge, which had been spiked, are now cleared, and fit for Use."—Conn. Gaz., (New London), March 1, 1776.

A correspondent in London writes: "Lord Howe is to go [as first commander, in the new, idle, ridiculous commission that is to be made out, to treat with America. His Lordship is not to be, nor to act as commander of any force, but in a civil capacity only. "Discerning men already say this commission scheme will not succeed. America will not treat with those men, nor with any persons (however otherwise respectable) sent by those who advise it."

"First remove Lord Mansfield, and the tools of Lord Bute, and then, and not till then, America and England will believe the court are truly desirous of peace."—Moore, Diary of Am. Rev., I: 211, citing Const. Gaz., March 2 and 6, 1776.

Information is given to the provincial congress that sentries near the wharves frequently fire at boats and sloops containing the inhabitants of this and the neighbouring colonies as they enter or leave the docks and slips, "whereby the persons on board are in danger of losing their lives." Information is also given to this congress that "all communication with, and the supplies of necessary provisions to the ships of war, and Govr. Tryon’s ship, in the harbour or in the bays near this City, is interdicted; and Mr. Roosevelt informed the Congress that Col. Waterbury has lately declared that the other United Colonies ought to crush this Colony of New-York; and that Mr. Isaac Sears had spoken of this Congress, and the general committee of the city of New York, in the most base, disrespectful and abusive terms . . . ." A committee is appointed "to wait on Major-Genl. Lee, without delay, and request of him the reason of his interdicting the communication between this city and the ships of war and Govr. Tryon’s ship, in or near the harbour of this city, contrary to the resolution of this Congress; and also, to request the occasion of the firing by the soldiers of this city on the inhabitants . . . ."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 333.

The following notice is published: "The Fire Engine of the Wall Street Company has entirely finished, Mr. Colles proposes to keep it going for several Days successively, to give every Gentleman an Opportunity of seeing it; and in order that they may more easily know when it is a working, a Flag will be display’d in the Middle of the Road, which may be seen from any Part of the Broadway."—N. Y. Merc., Apr. 4, 1776. There is an illustration of this engine in Wilson’s Mem. Hist. City of N. Y., II: 478. For a description of the works, see March 11 and April 17.

Capt. Archibald Robertson, an engineer in the 47th Regiment of foot and an officer on Howe’s staff at Boston, writes in his Journal: "It is now Eight o’Clock in the Evening. Went to Head Qrs.—after waiting some time Capt. Montresor came down from the Genl told me He had been in Council & bad advised the going off altogether—that Lt. Percy & some others seconded him & that the Genl said it was his own Sentiments from the first, but he thought the honour of the Troops Concern’d—so it is agreed immediately to Embark every thing."—Robertson’s Private Jour., 1775 (MS.), in N. Y. Pub. Library. Five MS. journals kept by Capt. Robertson, and a series of 54 American views made by him (see July 12), have recently been purchased by the N. Y. Pub. Library from three of his descendants. The journals are legibly written and full notebooks. The sketches are almost entirely dedicated to Martineau in 1761; the others are valuable as contemporary records of Revolutionary War happenings. They extend from July 17, 1775, to the end of 1780 (during most of which time Robertson was in America).

Howe announced to his officers on the next day (q.v.) his decision to evacuate.

The common council orders the further issue of notes to the value of £2,000 for carrying on the Water Works." (see Jan. 5).

A "middle size gun," taken from the guard house on this day, is described as "a Cannon of brass mounted with a brass rib over the barrel from the breach to the sight, and one on each side about 18 inches long, the plate of the lock brass, fixed for a bayonet."—Const. Gaz., March 27, 1776.

The following letter, signed by Pierre van Cortlandt and others, is written to Major Malcom: "The Provincial Congress of this Colony having appointed us a committee to concert measures for carrying into execution their resolve of the 5th inst. for the dismantling of the light-house at Sandy-Hook, we . . . have made choice of you for the execution of that important enterprise . . . . Upon your arrival at Sandy-Hook you will endeavour to take the glass out of the lantern, and save it if possible; but if you find this impracticable you will break all the glass. You will also endeavour to pump the oil out of the cisterns into casks and bring it off; but if you should be obstructed by the enemy, or not be able to procure casks, you will pump it out unto the ground. In short you will use your best discretion to render the light-house entirely useless."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 142.

Gen. Howe informs his officers that he intends to evacuate Boston and to go to Halifax. Robertson says: "The Great motive for our leaving the Town is want of provisions not having a month’s in store; what the Navy can assist us in."—Robertson’s Private Jour., 1775 (MS.), in N. Y. Pub. Library. The final evacuation took place on Mar. 17 (q.v.).

The news reaches New York that a number of troops are evacuating Boston, and embarking on transports; "it is thought they intend visiting N. Y. very shortly."—Penn. Ezr. Post, March 9, 1776.

The "Selectmen" of Boston send a petition to Gen. Washington "acquainting him that Genl Howe was to leave the Town [see Mar. 6] that they bad as’d the Genl if He intended to burn the Town. wv He told them He did not unless the Rebels fired upon him & anno’d His Retreat in that Case He did not know what He might do." They ask Washington not to allow "The Rabble to come into town, but only the People to take possession of their own houses &c. . . ."—Robertson’s Private Jour. 1775 (MS.), in N. Y. Pub. Library. See Mar. 18.

The provincial congress resolves that "A letter be written to the Delegates of this Colony, informing them the Governor and Representatives of the Colony of Connecticut have not as yet given any answer to the letter from this Provincial Congress [see Dec. 14, 1775] on that subject [the inroads from Connecticut] nor resolved nor made any restitution for the persons or property taken away from James Rivington."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 346. See June 10.

Agreeable to a "resolution" of the continental congress, of this date, an appraisement is taken of the arms, etc., taken from the "disaffected persons" in New York City. The list of these is printed in Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 359.

William Temple, of Boston, brother of John Temple, lieutenant-governor of New Hampshire, arrived in New York yesterday [Oct 6], and went on to Philadelphia where he conferred with the members of the provincial congress, asserting that he had messages to the continental congress from the Marquis of Rockingham and the Duke of Grafton, to the effect that if the colonies could "keep their ground the ensuing Summer" the administration would be overthrown and ruined.—Wm. Smith’s Diary (MS.), March 11, 1776.

James de Lancy, who had fled to England via Quebec after the Lexington skirmish, and there joined the party of opposition to the Tory administration, writes to his friends in New York urging the adoption by the continental congress of Burke’s "Bill for a Reconciliation," in order to overthrow the Lord North government. "This confirms me," says Smith, "in my opinion that the Government fhows upon the Fugitives from America and that the Opposition aim at rendering the great controversy useful to themselves."—Wm. Smith’s Diary (MS.), March 11, 1776.

Gov. Tryon informs the council that he has received three letters from the new secretary of state, Lord George Germaine,
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1776  "announcing his [Germaine's] Appointment, asserting the Determination to insist on the Dependence of the Colonies, informing us that Commissioners were speedily to come out to grant Pardons and confer with the Colonies for restoring Peace."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), March 11, 1776.

11  "We can with Pleasure assure the Public, that the Fire Engine of the Fire March: and was work'd many Days last Week, greatly to the Satisfaction of vast Numbers of People who went to see it. This Engine carries a Pump of 11 inches diameter, and 6 Feet Stroke, which contains 29 Galls. Makes 10 Strokes in a Minute

In one Hour, 174 Hogheads
In 12 Hours, 20880 dito.
In 24 Hours, 4176 dito.

The Well is 30 Feet diameter, and 30 deep, contains 8 Feet depth of water.

The Water is inestimable, for the Pump, tho' continually worked, cannot lower the Water more than two Feet.

A Cord and 1/2 of Wood will work the Engine for 24 Hours.

"It is proposed to work the Engine for some Days longer, for the further Inspection of the Public, of which Notice will be given by hoisting a Flag. W. Smith, March 11, 1776. For another description of the works, see April 17.

12  "At New York we have a founder who has already cast 14 or 15 excellent brass field-pieces" (see Feb. 27).—The Remembrancer (London, 1776), Part III, 51. See Apr. 12.

13  Washington, writing from Cambridge to the president of congress, during the evacuation of Boston, says that he considers it "of the last importance in the present contest that we should secure New York, and prevent the enemy from possessing it." He conjectures that the British have embarked for the purpose of attacking it. In accordance with a consultation of general officers, he states, "I shall detach the rifle regiment to-morrow, under the command of Brigadier-General Sullivan, with orders to repair to New York with all possible expedition." Others are to follow. Then he intends to send forward Major-Gen. Putnam, and to follow himself with the remainder of the army.—Writings of Gen. Washington (Ford ed.), III: 46–69.

14  "Six regiments of the American army, via. Grea.ton's, Stark's, Patterson's, Bond's, Webb's, and the rifle regiment, were put under orders to march for New York [from Boston]. . . . A detachment of artillery was also ordered to march with this brigade."—Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath, 42.

A "Return" or account is made of the number of troops at New York, under the command of Brig.-Gen. The Earl of Stirling, showing where the regiments are from, where they are stationed, and the number of officers and privates on this day. It enumerates 181 companies, 86 corporals, 89 drums and files, and 1,700 privates.

—From the original MS. with the Stirring Papers (Vol. IV), at N. Y. Hist. Soc.

Regulations are agreed to for the defence of New York, between Lord Stirling, general of the continental troops, and a committee of the provincial congress of the colony of New York.—From a contemporaneous manuscript copy of the agreements, in the Stirring Papers (Vol. IV).

15  The Duke of Grafton, in the house of lords, moves that the king be authorized and requested by parliament to issue a proclamation "declaring, that in case the colonies, within a reasonable time before, or after the arrival of the troops destined for America, shall present a petition . . . setting forth . . . what they consider to be their just rights and real grievances, that in such case his Majesty will consent to a suspension of arms; and that his Majesty has authority from his parliament to assure them, that such petitions shall be received, considered, and answered."

The Earl of Dartmouth speaks against the motion. "I ever was," said he, "and ever shall be of opinion, that this country cannot, with propriety, concede, nor can we, consistent with the essential interests of this country, consent to lay down our arms, till the colonies own their legislative sovereignty . . . . I was anxious to treat them with tenderness, and even to give way to their prejudices, so far as it could be done with safety. What has been the consequence? They have treated those marks of favour as so many indications of national imbecility; they have abused this lenity in proportion as it has been literally and affectionately exercised. I am of opinion, that the only sure and solid way of averting the evils of civil war, will be to send such a force as will awe the Colonies into submission."

The Duke of Manchester states that "The very great expense with which the present measures must necessarily he attended; the uncertainty of the real disposition of foreign powers; and the present state of the navy . . . all united, give just cause for considering the present question, and the consequences which may follow, in case your lordships should be inclined to give it a negative."

The Earl of Sandwich, head of the naval department, denies the weakness of the navy, mentioned by Manchester, and adds: "the present measures, if steadily pursued, will, to every substantial purpose, answer the ends of humanity, and be the most effectual means of preventing the effusion of human blood."

The Earl of Hillsborough expresses himself as "perfectly convinced, that if the right of taxation be surrendered, every other beneficial right of sovereignty will soon follow, and America in the end be totally separated from this country."

The Earl of Shelburne can see but one objection to the motion, that "it would operate as an encouragement to America to rise higher in her demands. . . . Granting every thing which may be built on this argument to have great weight, I would only oppose to it this one consideration, that if this turn out to be true, it would give the friends of government such a superiority, such a concurrence of hearts and hands, as would be more than a sufficient counterbalance for any inconvenience that might arise from the suspension of arms proposed by the present motion."

Lord Lyttelton asks the house to "Consider . . . what a figure you would cut in the eyes of all Europe, in those of your own subjects, in the opinion even of the very people for whose sake the benefit is intended. Would they not all unite in pronouncing it the summit of folly, of cowardice, and national weakness . . . It will only be," he adds, "to give the colonies time to prepare for more vigorous resistance."

The Bishop of Peterborough ventures to speak in the interest of humanity. He does not believe that the Americans want independence and would not listen to conciliation. "Should it, however, appear that nothing short of independence will satisfy America . . . it will let us all into the real ground of the quarrel, concerning which we so widely differ at present."

Lord Abingdon declares that "the present war to compel her [America] to an unconditional submission, is a war of conquest, and, if successful, must terminate in the absolute slavery of the vanquished."

Lord Camden is "desirous the present motion should succeed," and is curious to learn "the real intentions of administration, to know whether they mean at all to recede from their full demands, or whether they intend to risk every thing to pursue war for the purpose of compelling the Americans to a complete conquest in one event, or unconditional submission in the other."

Lord Mansfield opposes the motion, as "nagatory, ill-times, and ineffectual," and the Duke of Grafton closes the debate by urging the members "to reflect, that the honour of parliament, the prosperity and dearest interest of both countries, the lives of thousands of British subjects are at stake, that the present is probably the only moment you will ever have to snatch from them the ruin which will otherwise inevitably await them, and that the consequences of neglecting this opportunity, will be the source of endless mourning and lamentation to ages yet unborn."

The motion is lost by a vote of 91 to 31.—Port. Hist. of Eng. (1813), XVIII: 1427–86.

The continental congress recommends that "all persons . . . who are notoriously disaffected to the cause of America" be disarmed.—Journ. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 203. This resolution was complied with in New York City.—Cal. N. Y. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 259.

The committee of the continental congress appointed on March 11 to confer with Gen. Charles Lee, and devise the best ways and means for the defence of New York," makes its report. Gen. Lee states, among other things: "As the City of New York is almost environ'd by navigable waters it is undoubtedly very difficult to fortify it against a powerful sea armament; but still I am of opinion that although Troops cannot easily be prevented landing under the Guns of their shipping, they may be prevented lodging themselves in, or converting it into a great place of arms as they have done Boston. The East River, I am almost persuaded, may be said in such a manner that their Ships will scarcely venture into it, or at least they cannot keep their stations when in position, which is the only thing they can do... (See note to the foot of the Jews burying ground [on the present New Bowery—

"...The fort cannot...be defended, but as it is not possible in any human artifice, or fortification of offence against the Enemy, it might to their possession be converted into a Citadel to keep the Town in subjection. These considerations have induc’d me to throw down the North East and North West Bastions, with the communicating Curtain, so that being entirely open behind, and a commanding artery thrown across the Broad Way with three Guns mounted, it is impossible for the Enemy to lodge themselves in and repair the Fort... New York from its circumstances can with difficulty be made a regular tenable fortification, but it may be made a most advantageous field of Battle, so advantageous... it must cost the Enemy many thousands of men..."

The streets must be traversed and barricaded, so as to prevent their coming on our Flanks. These redoubts thrown up on the three eminences Judge Jones, Bayards Hill, and either Lie-penards or Haldemans house on Hudson River, but these measures are not to confound to the Town, the whole Island to be reduced in a form that produces similar steps.

Washington replied on March 14, writing from headquarters in Cambridge, and expressed satisfaction with Lee’s plans for the defense of New York. As Lee had been sent south, Washington informed him he would order the commanding officer at New York to complete the preparations for defense. Ibid., IV: 356. See also cations on Manhattan Island at this time, see Johnston’s Campaign

tween this city and New Jersey, by the Kills, is become quite safe."

"...The committee of the continental congress appointed to confer with Gen. Lee regarding the defense of New York reports, and commands 10,000 men be called out of this colony; and that certain specified troops of Pennsylvania and New York be ordered to march immediately to New York, and put themselves under the direction of the commanding officer there.

New York and New Jersey be held in readiness for the same pur-

Washington writes from Cambridge to the commanding officer at New York that, while it is given out by the British that Howe’s army is bound for Halifax, he suspects their destination is New York. It is the object worthy of their attention, and it is the place that we must use every endeavor to keep from them. For should they get that town, and the command of the North River, they can stop the intercourse between the northern and southern colonies, upon which depends the safety of America." Washington sends regiments to New York from the camp at Cambridge, and a Battery for this purpose is placed and a fort is built on New Jersey and "the militia of the country called in." —Writings of Gen. Wash-

Gov. Tryon sends to Mayor Mathews for publication, addressed to be appointed, haveing also Power to enquire into the State and Condition of the Colonies for effecting a restoration of public Tranquility." This address Tryon requests the mayor to publish, and transmits a copy to the Corporation of New York.

It appeared in the N. Y. Packet, March 24, and N. Y. Merc., March 25, 1776. On the 21st, William Smith recorded in his diary:
"Notwithstanding our assurances at the last Council Mt Tryon put a Paper into the Hands of the Mayor last Tuesday which I saw at Gaine’s for the Press, informing that Commissioners were coming over & encouraging the Friends of Government to expect speedy Relief from Oppression. It shocked me and threw the Tories into Consternation as it held them up to the wrath of the Populace who now carried about his Effigy with the Paper at Noon. He was followed by several Hundred of the lower Class exclaiming the Governor."—William Smith’s Diary (MS.), March 21, 1776. The effigy was labelled: "William Tryon, late Governor of This act of the governor was the more unfortunate because he had begun to make the charges brought against him, "and the congress of purchasing a boat to cruise in our Rivers and seize Provisions to be sent to Boston." The committee of congress appointed to investigate reported "a full conviction that the Charge was groundless." Smith goes on to say: "And yet such was the Malignity of the Times that the Scandal was propagated. No measures were taken to make the Governor’s Innocence known to the Town.

Frederick Jay writes to his brother, John Jay: "...This Day all our militia turned out with great spirit. They are throwing up entrencheds at the Hospital, Bayard’s Mount, at the Furnace, Peck’s slip, Beekman’s slip, Ten Eyck’s wharf, Back of the Governor’s House, & several other Places. Never did People in the world act with more Spirit & Resolution than the New Yorkers do at this present time." —Corresp. and Public Papers of John Jay, I: 47.

"General Washington by a Letter of the 19th advises General Lee of Mt. Howe’s abandoning Boston on Sunday 17 Instant [1776] &

THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1776 and number of Men requisite to man them, as made to General Mar. Thompson." The names and locations of the batteries are as follows:

"Grenadier's Battery, . . . Near the Air-Furnace, on the bank of the North-River."
"Jensen's Battery. . . . A little to the northward of the first."
"McDougall's Battery, . . . To the westward of Trinity Church, and very near it."
"Broadway Barrier, . . . Very near the Bowling-Green, or the King's Statue."
"Conde's Battery. . . . On Ten Eych's Wharf."
"Stirling's Battery, . . . On Long-island, and nearly opposite the Fly-Market (In the rear of this there is to be a citadel, which will take up about five acres, and called The Congress)."
"Waterbury's Battery, . . . At the Ship-Yards."
"Badlam's Battery, . . . On Rutgers first Hill, just above the last mentioned."
"Thompson's Battery, . . . At Horne's Hook."
"Independent Battery, . . . On Bayard's Mount."

Besides the foregoing, there is a breastwork or barrier at Peck's, Beekman's, Burling's, and Fly ships, as also at the Coffee-House, Old Slip, Counties Market, and the Exchange, and one about midway of Broad Street of this Construction; and the same was made in several of the streets leading from the North-River to the Broadway. There is also a line of circumsallation to be drawn from river to river, taking in the Independent Battery, on Bayard's Hill, or Jones's where there is also a fortification to be erected, called Washington, to which may be added a redoubt round the Hospital; as also a work to be erected on the Common, near the Liberty Pole."— Am. Archives, 4th series, V. 480. A description of these batteries, with an indication of their location on the plan of the modern city, and the extent of their armament, was published by Mr. Henry P. Johnston, in The Campaign of 1776 around New York and Brooklyn (1875), 84-90. In this connection he prints the following note of explanation:

"In locating the batteries in New-York, I have taken the list of batteries reported March 24th, 1776 (Force, 4th Series, vol. V. p. 480; Putnam's order of May 22d [p. vi], naming the several works; Knox's artillery returns of June 10th, giving the number of guns in each; and Hills' map of the fortifications, drawn at the close of the war. The first list shows the works as they stood at about the time the Boston troops came down, and which Lee had planned. There are alterations and additions in Putnam's and Knox's lists, which are to be followed where they differ from the list of March 24th. Although many other works were erected, no names appear to have been attached to them, those only being designated by the most important points and were provided with guns and garrisons.

The Hills map is indispensable in this connection. John Hills, formerly a British engineer, surveyed the city and island . . . as far as Thirty-fourth Street in 1785, and in 1785 made a careful map of the same, which John Loney, Esq. presented to the Common Council in 1847 [now in the N. Y. Hist. Soc.—see Man. Com. Coun. (1875), frontis.]. In addition to giving all the streets, blocks, docks, and squares, Hills added all the works thrown up in an around the city during the Revolution, giving their exact location and shape. Part of the lines have a confused appearance, but they become clear on referring to the following memorandum on the map: 'All the works colored yellow were erected by the Forces of the United States in 1776. Those works colored Orange were erected by D0 and repaired by the British Forces. The works colored Green were erected by the British Forces during the War.' (See also British Headquarters MS. Map, Pl. 59). A map of New York accompanies Mr. Johnston's work, in which Hills' "yellow" line has been followed, showing all the American forts. He explains that "by projecting the present streets over Hills' map, it is possible to ascertain where they stood in the plan of our modern city."— Ibid., 84-85, foot-note.

Johnston also notes that Lossing gives a full list of the Revolutionary works in and around New York, differing in several particulars from Johnston's own list, which is based on Hills' map—Ibid., 95, foot-note, citing Field Book of the Rev., II: 393. For other lists see Appendix B.

Regarding Thompson's Battery at Horn's Hook, erected by Colonel Drake's Westchester minute-men soon after Lee's arrival, Johnstone makes the following note: "This work stood at Mar. the foot of East Eighty-eighth Street. . . . Some ten years after the war, Archibald Gracie occupied this site, and it became known as Gracie's Point. The writer of a city guide-book in 1840, Dr. Samuel Mitchill, refers to the "Gracie Mans-tenant and appurtenances."—Ibid., 95, citing The Picture of New York. This fort is shown in one of the series of 54 fine drawings made by Archibald Robertson now owned by the New York Public Library, Spencer Collection. For location of fortifications built in the lower part of the island at this time, see also the Ration Map with MS. additions by Montresor, described on Pl. 42, Vol. I, and now in the Map Room of the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Congress orders that proper mechanics be employed to take the leads out of the windows of the city hall and the exchange; also that an account be kept of the weight of lead taken out of each building separately.— Jour. of the Com. of Safety, I: 394.

"Brigadier-General Baron De Woeldke, the Hon. Benjamin Franklin, and several other gentlemen" arrive in New York from Philadelphia.—N. Y. Merc., April 1, 1776. They left on April 3 for Albany on their way to Canada.—Ibid., April 8, 1776.

About 1,000 riflemen arrive from Boston.—N. Y. Merc., April 25, 1776.

Washington writes from his headquarters in Cambridge to Maj.-Gen. Putnam that he has "detached Brigadier-General Heath with the whole body of riflemen and five battalions of the Continental army, by the way of Norwich in Connecticut, to New York." These, he believes, have arrived in New York. Six more battalions, under Gen. Sullivan, start this morning by the same route. The rest of the army will immediately follow in division.

He directs Putnam to go to New York at once, and assume the command, "and immediately proceed in continuing to execute the plan proposed by Major-General Lee, for fortifying the city and securing the passes of the East and North Rivers."— *Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), III: 500-1. See March 30.

On this day, Brig.-Gen. Heath, with Stark's, Webb's, Bond's, Patterson's, and Gretton's regiments, numbering in all about 3,000 men, arrive at Turtle Bay. Here the troops disembarked, and marched into the city at noon. "The transports fell down to the city wharves, and landed the baggage, etc. Gen. Thompson and Lord Sterling, with some New York and New-Jersey troops, were in the city; and works were constructing, in and around the city on Long Island, and at Horn's Hook . . . The British fleet has been moved war, then lay off in the Lady Cage, of 20 guns; but, on the arrival of the brigade, the Asia moved further down, just out of shot. Our General put a stop to the intercourse between the inhabitants and the ships, which had, until then, been kept up" (see April 8).— Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath, 44; N. Y. Merc., April 1; Penn. Hist. Soc., Appendix to April 2, 1776 N. Y. Packet, April 4, 1776.

On this, the day of Heath's arrival, William Thompson writes to the committee of safety: "A number of troops are arrived, and more are hourly expected, who must be quartered in the City; and as I understand that many of the inhabitants who have quit the town have left part of their furniture in their houses, I must request that you will give such directions as you may judge best for securing the property of those people, whose houses are, or shall be, occupied as barracks for the troops."— Am. Arch., V. 8, 1876.

During this week, part of Col. Drayton's battalion from Elizabeth Town and several companies from Connecticut also came to New York so that by April 1 there were about 8,000 men in the city under arms.— Penn. Jour., April 3, 1776. See April.—Gen. Sullivan arrived on April 10 (p. 2).

The New-York committee of safety issues a notice, stating that "The Provincial Congress of this colony having impowered this Committee to contract for a number of Muskets (to be manufactured in this colony), they are ready to receive proposals from any persons for making "good muskets, or the locks, barrels, or any other parts thereof," and refer those who may think it "to be done in their proposals."—N. Y. Packet, April 11, 1776.

The following orders are issued from the “New York Head Quarters: "As the buildings in which the troops are barked are very good, particular care must be taken to prevent their being damaged; and where there is furniture, it must be carefully preserved—Each Regiment in the City, at rest, to proceed to mount picket guards, consisting of a Captain, 2 Subalterns, 2 Sergeants, 2 Drums & Fife & go Rank & File.

"The Regiments lately arrived in the City, from the Eastward, will do duty after this day, both on guard & fatigue

"His Excellency General Washington having some time since, ades, Captains yellow, & Subalterns green—The Officers will conform to this order, & all others are forbid wearing any of those colours."—Glover Correspond. (MS.), 100.

Jno. Varick, Jr. writes to Capt. Richard Varick that the First Battalion “have founded a Breast Work round the Hospital & amphitheatre composed of Sand & Dirt—The Thickness of it about 10 Feet, & about 7 Feet high, with a Ditch of 12 Feet wide, & 7 deep, surrounding the whole. This will afford a safe Retreat, from the Fire of small Arms. I have had the Honor of working at it 3 or 4 Days, since I entered the Fisiller Comp’y under the Command of Capt. Livingston. The Fortification originates its Name from the Founders of it, to wit, the 15th Batt.

There is another Structure erected on what formerly was called Byard’s Mount, but now is mostly term’d Buckner Hill [near the present corner of Broadway and Grand St.] & which when finished will be a most complete Fort, and will command the whole City.

I am told, every Slip is, & every Avenue leading from the Water will be strongly fortified, to prevent our worst of enemies from landing; & possessing themselves of the City, if they should ever tempt it. But the Number of Continental Troops that are to be stationed here, will I hope prove sufficient to deter them from such an Attempt. There are great Numbers daily arriving here, from all Quarters; and it is universally thought, we will in a short Space of Time, have an Army of 15,000 Men collected here for the Preservation of this City. The People here do not seem now so apprehensive of the Soldiers landing, since the Account of the happiness of our Enemies exterminating the Town. The News of this happy Event seem’d to inspire the Breaths of every Friend to America with new Hopes of Conquests & with greater Ardor to rescue this once flourishing Country from the Shakles & Oppressions of a British Parliament. The Ships of War are the only Tools we now apprehend any great Danger from, since it is out of our Power to cope with those thundering Hell Hounds.

There is some private Report that the ministerial Mercenaries are now fortifying Bedloe’s Island, assisted by many Countrymen—if this can be relied on I doubt but we will have a small Shields there soon."—N. Y. City during the Am. Rev., 89-91.

There are about 6000 men in New York under arms.—Penn.

Jour., April 3, 1776.

"Tuesday evening last [April 2] a number of our troops went and set fire to all the buildings on Bedloe’s Island, where the men of war were entrenching and fortifying it for an asylum for the Troops, and there some probability that the New York Fire in the furnace, but they were timely discovered before much damage was done.”—N. Y. Jour., April 4, 1776, citing the Const. Gaz.; N. Y. Merc., April 8, 1776.

Gov. Tryon was an eye witness, from his position on board the "Duchess of Gordon," which lay in North River, of "the burning of the hospital on Bedloe’s Island by four hundred Rebels in Seven Pitigaus" (pitiugas). He wrote an account of it to Lord

Grenville on April 6.—N. Y. Col. Docys., VIII. 675.

The provincial congress passes this resolution: "Whereas barracks are necessary for the troops now arrived and daily arriving in this city, and cannot be obtained without placing them in houses much too the injury of the inhabitants remaining in the city, as well with great detriment to the service: And whereas it appears to the Committee of Safety that the hospital in this city is a proper situation for troops, and that a number of troops must necessarily be placed there for the defence of the works there and of the city in general. Therefore, give directions to have the hospital put in a proper state for the reception of troops."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I. 396. See also April 3. Later, "the house was occupied by British and Hessian soldiers, as barracks and occasionally as an Hospital."—Account

N. Y. Hosp. (1820), 4. When the war was over, and affairs had begun to be a little settled, the New York legislature, as before

(see March 24, 1772), appropriated money for the support of the hospital (see March 1, 1788).

Five battalions of the continental troops are reviewed by Gen.

Col. Milfin, quartermaster-general of the American army, arrives from Cambridge.—N. Y. Merc., April 8, 1776.

As it is thought imprudent to keep all the powder in any one place in the city, the provincial congress acts upon a suggestion that has been made to the committee of safety, that a second repository be prepared, and that "the warehouse called by Mr. Henry Cruger’s sugar house will be a proper place for that purpose." It is ordered "That whoever has the present care and direction of the said sugar house be directed to place the utensils and materials therein in such proper or convenient places in the said sugar house as may allow the upper part thereof to be used as a magazine."—Col. McDougall is authorized to execute the order. The building shall then "be used as a magazine, for such purposes as the commander-in-chief of the continental troops . . . shall at any time

In order to prevent "the breaking out of fire in the city," it is ordered that "the chimneys must be kept clean. Particular care must be taken that the sweepers are not obstructed in sweepings and when the chimneys of any barracks are swept, the Officers in such barracks will give the sweeper a certificate of his having performed that service."—Glover Correspond. (MS.), 100. This order was repeatedly renewed with emphasis after the British occupied the city.—See Feb. 24, 1777.

Wm. Leary, the town mayor, issues the following order: "As the army is considerably reinforced, by the troops lately arrived, the General returns his most sincere thanks to the officers and soldiers, of the city militia, of the several corps of the Continentals’ regiments, for their assiduity and vigilance in assisting in the fortifying the city."—N. Y. Packet, April 4, 1776.

to New York with his brigade, lodges for the night at Kingsbridge.

All those who "effected burning the buildings, defacing the works, & bringing off the entrenching tools, last night, on the Island, under the guns of the Asia Man of War" are formerly thanked by the general in command at New York.—Glover Correspond. (MS.), 101.

Erasmus Williams has fitted up his house and garden, on the North River bank, for a gun factory, "where the most perfect modelation of Gentlemen, and Ladies of reputation, and character . . .

His advertisement states that, "as this town is now become the abiding-place of and through which many gentlemen pass, who do most undoubtedly meet with very great inconvenience in procuring suitable lodgings for themselves, on account of the great course of concourse of people going on at this hospital in this city, and at his lodgings are "very spacious, and in a most healthy situation," he "hopes for future good encouragement."—Const. Gaz., May 22, 1776.

The committee of safety is informed by Col. Milfin, the quartermaster-general, that "in the course of 8 or 10 days, at

John Planton, and Patrick McQue.—Ibid., I: 288-89. Mary Montague (or Montagne) was at the present Nos. 253-254 Broadway. See April 10, 1769. John Taylor was proprietor of the Glass House at "Newfoundland" in 1768 (May 9, p.), but had evidently removed, before 1776, to a site near the present City Hall Park. In 1768, at the same time [i.e.], on the same street, opposite the new "Brick Meeting." We have no other record of James Length, Jr. "Mr. Welch," in 1769, was near Whitehall. John Planton is unknown, although his tavern stood, according to another list of tax-payers in this year, "near Liberty Pole." Patrick McQue (probably McHugh) is unknown. If Haunders Hall still existed as a tavern, and dispensed liquors, one of the above mentioned dealers was probably its proprietor.

The dealers at the "Head of the Broadway" were William Williams, Erectty Lafey, Agnes Vanderhoof, Andrew Hopper, and William Lintnworth. Of these, Andrew Hopper only was a licensed liquor-seller, and his name is the only one familiar to us. In 1772, Hopper had a smith's shop on the corner of Ann St. and Broadway, where the American Museum afterwards stood. Apparently he combined this business with that of a "vintner." In later years he was listed in the directories as a dry-goods merchant. Duer, in his reminiscences of the city in 1783, speaks of the little shop of Andrew Hopper.—Recollections of an Old New Yorker.

Washington writes from Cambridge to Richard Henry Lee: "... I am upon the point of setting out for New York, (by the way of Providence and the Connecticut) and it appears to me that the troops are at different stages, on their march from hence to New York; nor is it possible for me, till I get there, as the Congress have annexed conditions to my sending the four battalions to Canada, to tell whether they can be spared or not, as I am unacquainted with the number of men, or strength of the works at that place. No time shall be lost in forwarding three battalions if there is a possibility of doing it with safety; as no person can be more sensible of the importance of securing Canada than I am..."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 13-14. Regarding his journey to New York, where he arrived on April 13 (p.), see ibid., IV: 17-19.

The following general orders are issued from head-quarters at New-York:—"The Soldiers are strictly enjoined to retire to their Barracks and Quarters at Tattoo beating, and remain there until the Revellie is beat.

"Necessity obliges the General to desire the Inhabitants of the City to observe the same Rule, as no Person will be permitted to pass any Century, after this Night, without the Counter-signal. "The Inhabitants, where Business requires it, may know the Counter-signal, by applying to any of the Brigade Majors."—N. Y. Army, April 15.

Gen. Putnam, in New York, writes to the committee of safety that, while the continental congress imagines the new levies in this province "to be in great forwardness," he finds "that none of the four regiments to be raised in it are properly regimented and commanded." He requests the committee to exert itself "to the utmost to accomplish this necessary service, and that the troops already raised be ordered to the city without delay."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 401.

Tryon writes to Lord George Germain: "The whole North Front of Fort George is dismantled and Merlons erected on the Faces of the Fort that look to the North and East Rivers. Also Merlons are constructed on the lower battery. I am told they [the rebels] purpose to intrench and fortify upon the Banks of the Narrows, that is on Staten and Long Island, and wherever else that they think they can obstruct the approach of the King's Fleets and Armies."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 673.

In another letter to Germain written on the same day, he sends "Gazettes and other Papers" which, he states, give "much information of the unhallowed vigor and desperate excesses with which the efforts of the enemy are carried on in Opposition to His Majesty's Government Military Plans."—Ibid., VIII: 674.

"The Streets in the City of New York are barricaded with Breast Works, and every head land and commanding Spot of ground in its Environ, are fortified, or to be fortified, with Intrenchments, Redoubts, and Batteries."—Ibid., VIII: 674-75.
A Captain's Company from General Heath's Brigade, properly officered, is ordered to march to Horn's Hook to relieve the two Regiments of Minute Men now on that station. Capt. Baidham is required "to examine the Fort at Horn's Hook, and make a return of what Artillery & ammunition is wanting for that fortress, & to order the two field pieces now there, into the City." —Glover Capt. (MS.), 102.

The treasurer of King's College receives a message from the committee of safety asking the governors of the college to prepare the building for the reception of troops. The students were accordingly scattered, the books, apparatus, etc. deposited in the city hall, and the college building converted into a military hospital. Many books, and almost all the apparatus, were thus lost; six or seven hundred volumes were recovered thirty years afterward, having been deposited in a room in St. Paul's chapel, where they had remained unknown to anyone except the sexton of the church. This action against the college was regarded as a blow at the crown, the college being considered as a "hotbed of Toryism." —Moore, Hist. Sketch of Col. College, 61-63. Until May 15, 1784, the college was closed to students. —Pine, King's College, 16.

A boat from the "Viper" goes ashore on Staten Island to get water. A party of riflemen attack her and take all hands prisoners. The riflemen return the fire from the man-of-war. —Penn. Ev. Post, April 9, 1776. Another account of this event explains that the king's ship "Savage" and the pilot-boat "James," on this Sunday morning came in a thick fog to take in water at the watering-place on Staten Island. They each sent a boat on shore. Capt. Stevenson, hearing of this, prepared to attack them. The ship, being informed of the approach of the patriots, fired a signal gun for the boats to retreat, and this they attempted to do, "under a brisk and constant fire from the Savage, but being fired on by our men, and closely pursued, they left one of their cutters behind with thirteen men. ..." —Ibid., April 13, 1776. Still another account of the skirmish is found in The N. Y. Packet, April 11. See also Major Fish's letter of April 9, in Hist. Mag., 2d ser., VI, 203.

The "Dutchess of Gordon" conveys Gov. Tryon down the River to the "Phoenix," which lies below the Narrows. On the way, he sees, "by the help of a Spy glass,—the enemy firing upon the Seamen that were landed for water at the watering-place under cover of the Savage Sloop of War." Tryon gave an account of this in his letter to Germain on April 15. "All Communication between the Ships and the Shore," he states, "is now cut off. Even the Element of Water is denied us, which cannot probably henceforth be procured but under the fire of his Majesty's Ships." —N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 675-76, 677.

Major Gen. Israel Putnam, commander-in-chief at the forces at Greenwich, no longer finds it necessary to fortify the place, which has become absolutely necessary, that all communication between the Ministerial fleet and shore, should be immediately stopped. He has given orders that "the ships should no longer be furnished with provisions.\" Persons who go on board after this date, or are found near any of the ships, "will be considered as enemies, and treated accordingly.\" The order announces that "All boats are to sail from Beekman's Slip; Capt. James Alner is appointed Inspector, and will give permits for oystermen: It is expected and ordered, that none attempt going without a pass.\" —N. Y. Packet, April 11, 1776.

The notice is published as a broadside proclamation. —See one of these in the N. Y. Pub. Library. Cf. Smith's Diary under this date, where the statement is made that Putnam's order made impossible a meeting of the governor's council that had been called for the 11th. The "Ships quitted the Harbor," he adds, "gofell down below the Narrows" (see June 6). —Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V. 3, March 24.

"Monday night [April 8] 1000 of the Continental troops stationed here, went over and took possession of the Governor's Island, and began to fortify it; the same night a regiment went over to Red Hook, and fortified that place likewise." —N. Y. Packet, April 11, 1776; Penn. Ev. Post (Phila.), Apr. 15, 1776.

On or about this day (see April 17), the following secret intelligence was sent from New York, presumably to the British War Office, describing the defenses erected by the American patriots in and around the city. The document is without date, but bears the endorsement, "State of the Fortifications at New York &c. No 11."

"The above where the Letter E stands are Batteries with Guns mounted as stands in the Columns. The Letter S is Breast Works for small Arms only. That Breast work on the Hill by the Jews Burying Ground will contain near 400 Men, it is made in an Angular form, with a large Trench all round; The Entrance into it on the back part facing Mf John's House on the Hill going to Conleys Hook. The Breast work around the New Hospital is in Squares with a Trench all round, to feet wide at the Top, and at Bottom one foot and half, this Breast Work will contain about 500 Men, and as they intend to Line the Hospital with Men to Fire over the Breast Works I know not how many Men it will contain.

There is one thing I shall remark that their Embrasures are so narrow and confined, that should any ship pass, there is no one gun that cannot fire on any Damage to any Ship. That Battery on Long Island is so narrow and confined that it will not contain above 300 Men.

I need not give the Names of the Streets in the Town that is blocked, as every Street facing both North and East Rivers has wooden Trunks made across to feet thick filled with Earth, in Order to intercept any Troops that may attempt landing. I cannot see any Cover for the Rear, only Mf Byrads Hill, it will contain near 500 Men, One Gun points across to Greenwich and one over Mf Delancy's House, Two directly up the Road to Kings Bridge, and four Guns over the Town, but I never saw any Works worse Plan'd on under a Spot of Advantageous Ground. The Numbers placed in the Total Column has not yet their Guns placed, but are to mount the Number as above Marked. In the Total Column, the half moon Battery on Black Sama Hill will contain about 400 Men; This Battery is Open on the Side next to the New Hospital as the Hospital Covers it.

"The Cock Pitt Battery behind Mf Harris's Brew House will contain about 300 Men. The Battery behind the Governors House, it may contain about 200 Men or more. The Battery at the Ship Yards may contain 500 Men; they have begun a Redoubt about a quarter of a Mile behind the Battery on Long Island, which appears to be pretty large, but as they have not done any work at it for this two Days, I imagine they are going to alter the Plan of it. As to Fort George, they have pulled down all the Square, fronting Broadway and the Embraasures on the Ramparts not finished I shall leave that 'ill another opportunity.'" —From manuscript, in Library of Congress (box 45, pp. 339-40), from Public Record 1776 Office (London), Admiralty Secretary (cited "In Letters") 484, in April vol. lettered "North America Admirals John Montague, Molyneux 9 Shuldam 1771 & 1777". See also May 22.

Gen. Putnam issues an order from head-quarters, stating that, "As the city records are of the greatest consequence and, it being necessary that particular attention should be paid for their preservation, the following is declared to be the first city battalion of Independents, commanded by Colo. Lasher, will undertake this guard."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 402. Another order of the same date reads: "The party this day sent on Governor's Island must send for provisions &c, as they will not be relieved till tomorrow morning. The Federal Boats playing between New York, Powell's Hook & Long Island, are to pass unmolested from their usual places."—Glover Corresp. (MS.), 101.

A printed handbill, signed by Joseph Winter, secretary of the general committee, is distributed from the committee chamber; it contains a transcript from its minutes citing the order of "the late Provincial Congress of the colony of New-York," on March 12, for a new election of deputies to represent the province in the provincial congress, and appointing April 16 for the voters to meet at the city hall, to elect by ballot 21 such deputies to serve 12 months from the second Tuesday in May.—From original handbill, N. Y. Pub. Library.

Maj. Nicholas Fish writes to Richard Varick: "... picture to yourself the once flourishing City evacuated by most of its Members, (especially the fair). Business of every kind stagnated—all its Streets that lead from the North & East Rivers blockaded, and nothing but military operations our present Employment;... The redoubt about the hospital, which was completed on April 2, is considered "the best work of the kind in the City." The hospital "is made an Arsenal for Provisions." On "Bayard's Mount, now called Montgomery Mount, as a Monument to that great Hero, ... there will be a Fortification in Strength to any my Imagination could ever have conceived. Several hundred Men have been daily employed there for upwards of four Weeks. The Parapet of the old Battery is raised to a proper Height, with a sufficient number of Amuberases—as also the Parapet on the Fort Wallace. There are two fortifications on Long Island opposite this City to command the Shipping, one on Govr's Island, one at red Hook, and the City itself and Suburbs filled with them. ... We have Gen' Putnam, Sullivan, Heath, Thompson, &c. Sterling among us, with I believe about 14 thousand Troops; fresh arrivals from Cambidge. Daily. And Washington hourly expected with many more ... Our Conq now Guards the Records of the Province which are removed to M' N. Bayards Farm."—Hist. Mag., 24 ser., V: 203.

Peter Elting writes to Capt. Richard Varick: "This day came to town five or six Betalions of Cont troops from Boston, I Reconn the Army in & about the town must now Consist of near twelve thousand men, they are fortifying on every side, night before last they began at Noten [Governor's Island], I hear they be Bussy at Staten Island, &c the Asia is moved down as low as Robens Reef, the more westward have allowed No Boats to pass of late, tho I think they Doate feel Quite so hold as heretofore, and would be glad of moving out of the way of our two & thirty pounders."—Hist. Mag., 1st ser., X: part 2, 119, citing Tomlsson MS, Mercantile Lib.

Alexander Scammell writes to his brother, Dr. Scammell: "After a very fatiguing and merry march, we arrived at New York, the tenth of April. A very elegant City. But deserted by the Tories .. Our men are bilited in very elegant Houses ... I expect to set out for Canada, with Gen. Sullivan and six Regts. under his Command ... we have got our works in great Forwardness here and a fine train of Artillery. New York will soon be rendered almost imprisegnable."—From autograph letter, sold in the Jolime sale (Lot 15) at The Anderson Galleries, New York, April 28 and 29, 1915.

Col. Rudolph Ritzena writes to Capt. Richard Varick: "... General Washington is expected here to Morrow. ... The Fortifications are nearly completed & I doubt not the Enemy if they should get here will meet with a warm Reception."—Hist. Mag., 1st ser., X: part 2, 112.

The famous or rather infamous Joshua Barns, from Philadelphia in West Chester county, has lately been very busy in in-listing men for Gov. Tryon's service, who were to be called the Governor's Life Guards."—N. Y. Packet, April 11, 1776.

After this day Head Quarters will be opened at Col. Morris' House, near Fort George, till the arrival of General Washington."—Glover Correspondence, (MS.), 105.

A case of small-pox having broken out, the committee of safety suggests that "the island with the buildings thereon, commonly called Little Barn Island, belong to Mr. Montresor," he being used for the isolation of such cases. It orders "That Doctor Malachi Treat, and his Attendants do, as he shall employ to attend the sick sent to the said island, he hereby authorized and empowred to set apart and make use of such parts of the house and other buildings on the said island, as he or they shall think most proper and best calculated for the reception of all such persons as now are or shall be seized with the small pox."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 401.

"... New York is deserted by its old inhabitants, and filled with soldiers from New-England, Philadelphia, and Jersey ... They have been employed in erecting fortifications, in every part of the town; and it would greatly to see the place so changed: the old fort walls, are demolished in part, although that is an advantage to the Broadway. There is a Battery carried across the street, erected partly at Lord Abingdon's expense, for the Fascines were cut out of the wood that belonged to the Warren estate: it was a beautiful wood—Oliver De Lancy had been numbering them when he heard the troops were to come. You remember Bayard's Mount, covered with cedars; it commanded a prospect exceedingly extensive! The top of it is so cut away, that there is room enough for a house and garden; a fortification is there erected, as well as round the Hospital—In short, every place that can be employed in that way, is or will be, so used. You may recollect a sweet situation at Horn's Hook, that Jacob Walton purchased, built an elegant house, and greatly and beautifully improved the place; he was obliged to quit the place; the troops took possession, and fortified there. Oh, the houses in New York, if you could but see the inside of them! Kennedy's house, Mallet's, and the next to it, had six hundred men in them ... The merchants have raised their goods to an enormous price; many articles are scarce indeed. ... Common rum, 6 to 7 shillings per gallon; poor sugar, 41 a hundred; molasses none; cotton 45 per lb."—Hist. Mag., 1st ser., X: part 2, 111.

"There were 18 pieces of brass cannon [see Mar. 12] in the American Park, at New York, which were viewed with no small degree of pride and wonder."—Memoirs of Maj-Gen, Heath, 45.

Gen. Washington reaches New York from Cambridge, with William Palfrey and Mr. Moylan (his aides-de-camp), Horatio Gates (the adjutant-general), and a score of officers and other Gentlemen of Distinction."—N. Y. Mercer, April 15, N. Y. Packet, April 18, 1776; Mag. of Am. Hist., I: 127-28; Jones, Hist. of N. Y. During the Rev. War, II: 85; Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 160, 273, 325.

Loosing states that Washington occupied, as his headquarters, a house at 180 Pearl St., until summoned to Philadelphia by congress near the end of May; and that on his return [June 6, q.v.] he went to the Kennedy house, No. 1 Broadway, where he remained until the British entered the city on Sept. 15.—Pictorial Field-Book of the Rev., II: 594. See, however, reference to the Kennedy house under April 12; also items of April 17, and May 19 and 22. Mrs. Lamb says he went to the Mortier house on this day, and that Mrs. Washington joined him there on her arrival, April 17 (q.v.).—Hist. City of N. Y., II: 70. Washington's headquarters were in April 17, in the "Oyster Battery" on May 22 (q.v.); he was at the Mortier house on June 20 (q.v.); and went to the Kennedy house on July 20 (q.v.).

Rev. Charles Inglis, the assistant rector of Trinity Church, in a review of events written on Oct. 31 of this year (q.v.), stated that "Soon after Washington's arrival, he attended our church; but on the Sunday morning, before divine service began, one of the rebel generals called at the rector's house (supposing the latter was in town), and, not finding him, left word that he came to inform the rector that 'General Washington would be at Church, and would be glad if the violent prayers for the King and royal family were omitted.' This message was brought to me, and as you may suppose I paid no regard to it.
CHRONOLOGY: THE REVOLUTIONARY PERIOD: 1763-1776

"On seeing that general not long after, I remonstrated against the unreasonable of his request, which he must know the clergy could not comply with, and told him further, that it was in his power to shut up our churches, and if he held his power to make 'the clergy depart from their duty.' This declaration drew from him an awkward apology for his conduct, which I believe was not authorized by Washington . . . ." — Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), III: 641.

"The 'Asia' goes to Sandy Hook—N. Y. Merc., April 15, 1776. Adj.-Gen. Horatio Gates issues the following order from headquarters at New York: 'Whereas the Asia having quit her station, and left the harbour, the navigation between this city and New-Jersey, by the Kiils, is become quite safe; the troops upon Staten-Island and Bergen Neck, are to leave their present quarters, and proceed to New-York, or returning to Jersey, to pass and repass without molestation.'—N. Y. Merc., April 15, 1776. See also De Voe, Market Book, 119.

"The following order is issued from the New York headquarters: 'All persons infected with the Small-pox are to be immediately removed to a secure place to be provided for by the Quarter Master General, who will consult the magistrates of this city thereupon. A proper guard, composed of men who have had the disorder to be fixed at this Hospital, to prevent any intercourse but such as the manager shall licence.'—Glover Correspond. (MS.), 105-6.

"We hear his Excellency Mr. Green's Ships Phoenix, Savage and Nautilus now on this Station, will fall down to Sandy Hook this Day or To- morrow.'—N. Y. Merc., April 8, 1776.

Washington writes to the president of congress that he arrived in New York 'on Saturday last' (April 13, p. 1). All the British ships of war have left the harbour, 'some of them flying the "Asia"' are now below the Narrows, and the rest gone to sea.' He finds "many works of defence begun, and some finished," and he reports on the disposition of the troops.—Writings of Gen. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 175-179; Memoirs of Gen.-Major, Heath, 45.

"A Poll" is opened at the City Hall by the following Twenty- one Deputies, to represent this City and Country in the next Pro- vincial Congress. It was continued by adjournment till April 18, when the following persons were elected for that purpose: William Denning, Abraham Braister, Jacobus van Zandt, John van Cortlandt, James Beekman, John M. Scott, Evert Banker, I. W. Van Borsel, Josephallet, Anthony Rutgers, John Broome, —N. Y. Merc., April 22; N. Y. Packet, April 25, 1776.

"The General, in presence and according to their order, "to use every possible dispatch in completing them," as the British troops may soon arrive at New York.—Glover Correspond. (MS.), 107.

17 Apr.

The following order is issued from headquarters at New-York: "The General being informed that many of the houses taken up for barracks are much abused by the soldiers, which is a grievance which might be prevented by the officers paying a proper attention to their duty, and more carefully observing the conduct and behaviour of their men, the Barrackmaster is therefore ordered to place a proper proportion of officers in the same houses with the soldiers, who are to be answerable for any mischief done, to prevent any noise put upon the floors, or any water or flint thrown out of the windows, as all damages wantonly committed must be paid for out of the pay of the men quartered in the house where such damage is done. The offenders must also expect to suffer a severe corporal punishment for any breach of these orders." The Colonels and commanding officers of Regiments are to exert their utmost influence to complete their companies to the establishment."—4 Am. Arch., V: 893; Glover Correspond. (MS.), 107.

On April 30, Washington repeated the order that the officers and soldiers were not to injure the buildings they occupied, requiring "All Damages wצותly done to the Houses, where the Troops are quartered, to be paid for by the Troops quarter'd in them."— April Orderly Book, cited in Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 571-4 Am. Arch., V: 1112. See also Sept. 22, 1776.

"The 'Lady of his Excellency General Washington' arrives in New York from Boston.—N. Y. Merc., April 22, 1776. She occupies the Mortier house (later known as Richmond Hill).—See April 13.

Washington writes to the committee of safety urging that communication be no longer kept up between the inhabitants of the colony and the enemy's ships of war (see April 8), and gives his reasons.—Writings of Geo. Washington, (Ford ed.), IV: 21-25, 56. On the next day, the committee forbade such intercourse.—N. Y. Merc., May 6, 1776. See April 29.

The following "Secret Intelligence," regarding recent preparations to defend New York, is sent from this city, presumably to the British War Office. The document bears this date, and is the second anonymous one of the kind, the first, as here stated, having been sent on April 9 (p. 5):

"Since my last of April 9th I have endeavour'd to collect the number of the Brigade which arrived from Boston the 9th and 10th Instant commanded by one Sullivan, which is Six Regiments, about 550 Men in each Regiment, and on the 11th Instant the following brass field pieces arrived here from Green's Hamlet, Sixty Four Pounders, two of which are the King's, Four 3 D" and Two 4 D," Total Ten. Eight 6 Pound's belonging to New York, which were cast at the Forge on Greenwich Road—those Six belonging to New York are joined in a Park with the King's, by the Liberty Pole. The total in all Eighteen.

"From Philadelphia the 12th inst arrived here 40 Artillery Men—Mf Washington arrived here the 13th as a private Gentle- man the 14th and 17th arrived from Boston 120 Men and from the last Accounts I can get from them, they left in Boston Six Regi- ments which may be expected as well as the remainder of Washington's Troops left in or near Boston. But if any attempt should be made by the King's Troops there, they wholly depend on the Assistance of the Country Militia. The two Privateers fitt'd out here has not met with such good success as they expected, they cannot get Men to man them as yet—One that carries Six 4 Pounders is to have 40 Men, and the other that carries Four 4 Pounders is to have 50 or 35 Men. They have now mounted on Fort George Seven Guns 32 and 12 Pounders; and on the lower Battery under Fort George have mounted Ten 32 Pounders—the Embraouris on this last Battery, are not asyet finished. They have three 32 Pounders mounted on the Cock Pit Battery, behind Mf Harrison's Brew-house near the Forge.—There is no alteration in the rest of the Batteries since the Account given the 9th April, only the redoubt on Long Island is entirely left off which was all the care they had for their rear, they have made one small work between Breast Work and Battery the last Battery on the Bank, forty paces round and open in the rear. The works on Governors Island and red Hoo, they are now work- ing at. I have not seen, but am made to understand, that on the Governor's Island is to have nine Four Guns, the works are about 400 Yards round—Red bank is to mount Three Guns. I am infor- med they are throwing up some works on each side of the Nar- rows, but cannot affirm it for a certainty.

"I can say no more at present, but will do everything in my power to serve his Majesty's Arms. I am &c,

NB. Since I wrote the foregoing part of the above, two Brig's and three Sloop's, are come down the Sound, with the remaining part of Washington's Army about 300 Men. It is a great pity that some method cannot be taken to stop the communication down the Sound to the Town; as it would certainly prevent the Rebels from receiving any supplies but by Land.

NB. This Letter is from a Man whose Information has proved he may be depended upon. No 1 is from the same person.

Agreeable to the recommendation of the provincial congress of Feb. 23, the committee of safety appoints a committee "to erect Works for manufacturing of Salt-Petre, in every considerable Town or Village in the several Counties . . ." Isaac Stouten- bargh, Samuel Prince, and Evert Bancker are named for the city and county of New York.—"N. T. Merc., April 22, 1776. See Jan. 17.

"Lieut. Isaac Bangs, a physician who served in the Revolutionary army, comes to New York with the New England troops, and re- mains here. Some copies of the New-England Journal during that time are these! (Apr. 17) For about 10 miles below New York the Passage between the Maine & Long Island was very Narrow. On both sides many very elegant Country Seats, & at Hell Gate a handsome & well-constructed Fort lately built for the People. At Turtle Bay are a large & beautiful Stables made for the Use of the King's Stores & Ammunition, &c. From this Place the Yorkers took a very large Quantity of Bombs & Shot; but the Enemy had conveyed the Powder away before. Near this place are several elegant & beautiful Country Seats, Several evacuated by the Tories. A visit to the Garden of one Gentleman in which was a Summer House which the Gardener shewed me in which were many curious Flowers, &c.; but the greatest Rarity was Orange, Lime, Pomgranet, & Citron Trees all Bearing Fruit. The Lemons were the largest & best that ever I saw, as also the Oranges, both sweet and sour. One Lime tree had 5 different Sorts of Lemons growing at once beside Blossom."

"1764 I spent the greatest part of my Time in viewing the City, which I found vastly surpassing my Expectations. The City is nearly as populous as the Town of Boston; the Publick Edifices greater in number, yet not in general so grand & Magnificent as those of New York. The PERFECT City, when the Town was last visited by the Water almost stopped with Breast Works built by Genl. Lee [see Feb. 29] on his arrival in this Town, to prevent the Enemy from landing to set fire to the Towns. On the South west part of the Town, which is a Point between the two Rivers, is a very strong & costly Fort built by the King's Troops & many masons men for the Protection of the City from the Enemy."

"On the outside of the Fort at the Edge of the Wall was a Battery, erected at a vast Expense to the King, built of hewn stone, the outside about ten feet high, the inside filled up to form a plane that the Wall was not more than a foot and a half high. From the above mentioned Fort a spacious street going east northerly in a right line, reached without the Town about 1 mile. In this, near the Fort, is the Equestrian Statue of King George 3d [see Aug. 16, 1779], a Present from himself to this City. (I have since been informed it was bought by the subscription of the Gentlemen of this City.) The design was in imitation of one of the Roman Emperors on Horseback. The Man George is represented about 1/3 larger than a Natural Man; the Horse, in proportion, both neatly constructed of Lead gilt with Gold, raised on a Pedestal of white Marble, about 15 Feet high, enclosed with a very elegant Fence, &c., the 3 lowest steps of open wrought Iron; the inclosure was oval, containing about 1/4 of an acre of beautiful green. This, with several Churches and other Elegant buildings on either side of the spacious street, form a most beautiful prospect from the Fort. Opposite the Town on the south is the Town of Brooklyn on Long Island, at about 1 mile distance. The Town of Brooklyn with the adjoining Hills, on which are several elegant Country Seats." [April (29) I visited, and took a full view of the Waterworks [see March 4 and 17] that are making to convey Water through the City (that from the Pumps being very bad & unwholesome to that degree that the Inhabitants buy water for Coffee, &c. from Carts that are employed to carry it about the City). These Works were begun about 12 Months since at the City Expanse, to defray which they issued Bills that are current as other Money. A Dutchman undertook the Job for a certain sum, & hath already performed a part of it, but a difficult part of the Work, tho not with that success that was expected by the Citizens, as they say. He saith he hath done as well as he promised. The Work that is already done (the most difficult part) is to convey Water from the side of an Hill nigh a Pond to the top of the Hill, which being higher than any part of the City, the Water is to be conveyed in Pipes through the City. About 200,000 Feet of Pipes have been taken. The Machiene was not at Work, it was with great Difficulty that I understood the Construction of the Machiene; & to pretend to give a particular discription of this Work would be folly in me, as I could by no means do it Justice. The first part of the Work was the greatest difficulty."

"The preferences in the Waterworks at New York have been made to the purpose of conveying the Water not to be used to the surface of the Water. In this Well was the Engine, which forced the Water almost to the Top, & from thence through a Apr. Wooden Tube up to the Top of the Hill, which was about 5 Rods 17 distance and about . . . Feet perpendicular above the Top of the Well. At the Top of the Hill was an artificial Pond, whose superficies was about 1/4 of an Acre, and when filled, the Water stood in a Beech from the Beech. This Pond was to be conveyed (as I before said) in Pipes through the City. All of this I could easily understand; but the grand Question was how was the Machiene in the Well first actuated & continued its motion? This I was surprised to find was wholly done by the Power of Boil- ing Water."

"It was a long time before I could discover even by seeing the Works how this could be effected, & the Man who shewed the Works could give me no satisfaction as to this till at length I found that by Means of a large Copper (which is kept boiling when it is requisite for the Works to be set in Motion) the Steam or Vapour of the Water is conveyed from thence into a strong Copper Tube of about 18 Inches Diameter & about 10 Feet Long, which stands per- pendicularly. The lower part or end of this Tube is tight; but the upper End hath in it a moveable Stopper which may move upwards or downwards with as much ease as possible, and at the same time keep any of the Air from escaping into the Tube & to keep it as tight as possible another part of the Works constantly supply the Top of the Tube above the Stopper with a small stream of Water. The Steam of the Hot Water (as I take it) entering into the Tube rarifyeth the Body of the Air contained therein to a great degree, and the Stopper is only let loose and flyeth upwards with great Rapidity to the upper End of the Tube, when the Pressure of the Air from without throweth [it] back to the Bottom of the Tube with as great Force as it came upwards, when it gets to the bottom it again drove upwards by the same cause, & repelled when it arrives at the Stopper is kept in constant Motion by the Means of Steam or Vapour, & to this Stopper is fastened a stout Wooden lever by a bar of Iron. The Lever is Fastened in the Middle upon an Axis; and as the Stopper of the Tube moves upwards and downwards, it moves the Lever, which worketh the Engine in the Well, which forceth (as I before described) the Water into the Pond at the bottom of the Hill. The Engine hath been tried & generally throweth . . . Gallons in a Minute into the Pond. Thus have I given as particular discription of this curious Engine as I possibly could, having viewed it but about 15 Minutes. I hope soon to see it at Work, when I can give a more particular discription of several small parts of it for which I could see no use . . . [Under date of June 21, Dr. Bangs mentions such an engine at the cedar swamp of a Mr. Schuyler in New Jersey, which cost £5,000."

"These works, he said, "were greatly superior in magnitude to those in the city," the remaining works, &c." [May 4] Took a survey of the City Goal, which the Guard shewed us. The Prisoners here are as well treated as in any Prison I ever visited. The Goal itself is a very Magnificent Building (upon the North side of the Common), having more the appearance of an elegant Mansion House than of a Common Jail; the inside is regularly built, and it is convenient, both for the Prisoners & Jailer, as I can possibly imagine any could have been."—Jour. of Lieut. Isaac Bangs (Apr. 1 to July 29, 1776), ed. by Edward Bangs (Cambridge Univ. Press, 1890).

Tyron writes to Lord Germain: "The general Assembly of this Province is now dissolved. The Council, by whose advice it was prorogued to the 17th Instant not having been permitted to wait on me agreeable to my Summons in Order to advise concerning the further prorogation of it. A strong evidence of the little attention that is now paid even towards preserving the Form of a legal and constitutional Representation of the people . . ."

"The governor states that he has ordered a detail of men "to act as night guard at the Light House on Sandy Hook, to prevent the Seamen from insults when watering at the well near the Light House. . . . The Pilot's house adjoining to the Light house is burnt down to prevent its being made a lurking place to the enemy, when the soldiers or four handen English guards near the Lattus of the Peninsula where the Light house stands."—N. T. Col. Dist., VIII: 677.

"A considerable number of troops have arrived here from New-England. As great numbers of the inhabitants have been ordered of house about the shipping of the War, to be soldiers. The behaviour of the New-England Soldiers is decent, and their civility to the inhabitants very commendable: They April attend prayers, with the Chaplain, evening and morning regularly, in which their officers set the example. On Lord's day they attend public worship twice, and their deportment in the house of God is such as becomes the place."—N. Y. Packet, April 18, 1776.

"Though the season is so far advanced, yet the number of troops that have lately arrived, and the uncommon severity of the weather, have occasioned such a demand for fuel, that oak wood sells for $170 per cord, and for $200. — N. Y. Packet, April 18, 1776.

Gov. Tryon, sends a letter from the "Dutchess of Gordon," which is at Sandy Hook, to Mayor Matthews, stating that, it has been found "expedient for his Majesty's service, to burn down the Pilot-house at the Hook," but that care has been taken of Adam Dobbs, the keeper, and his property. He states that if the mayor "will send down a sloop to the Hook, it will be suffered to bring up to New-York, Mr. Dobbs, his servants and effects."—Penn. Jour. (Phila.), May 1, 1776.

The common council orders that John Moore be paid $1815.51 "in full for the Balance of his Account for Work done at the Bridewell &c."—M. C. C., VIII: 136. After the war, Moore declared that his account had not been settled (see Jan. 19, 1785).

The common council authorizes the payment of £1315 to Christopher Colles, "on Account of the Water Works."—M.C.C.
VIII: 136. For the labor of men at the water works from March 15 to April 18, as shown by three accounts submitted by Colles, each inscribed: "The above account kept p [per] me Christ Colles."—From the original vouchers in box 1, comptroller's office. See May 24.

Henry Brevort is paid $320 for "Iron Monger's Ware sold to this Corporation." His account includes references to the city hall, workshop, the house at Bedloes Island, the house in Chatham St, the goal, the barricades, ferry House, Fly Market, the house of Milldollar, and the sentry boxes at the Battery.—Original voucher in box 1, comptroller's office; M. C. C., VIII: 176.

Washington proposes "to establish out of the Continental Forces, good lookouts on the Heights and Head Lands at the Entrance of the Harbor, who, upon the appearance of a Fleet shall make such signals as being answered from place to place shall convey the earliest intelligence to Head Quarters of the success and approach of the Enemy."—These signals for greater Certainty to be followed by Expresses," etc.—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 33.

Col. Rufus Putnam, Washington's chief engineer in 1776, states in his memoirs: "On my arrival at New York, I was charged as soon as possible with laying out and overseeing the works which were erected during the campaign at New York, Long Island and their dependencies with Fort Washington, Fort Lee, King's Bridge, etc., most of which, but not all, appear in a plan of New York island etc., and obstructions in the river, which accompanies M. de Paris's map of the Hudson River. His "whistle time was taken up from daylight . . . until night . . . besides going in the night by water from New York to Fort Washington."—Campaign of 1776, part 2, 136, citing the original in the archives of Marietta College, Ohio.

22 A list of persons, with their addresses, "who have paid Duty of Excise for 1776 to Evert Bancker" bears this date. It is printed in Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 287, followed by a "List of Liquor Sellers in New York City," with their addresses (ibid., 287-92). See also April 4.

25 The following order also is issued: Complaints having been made to the General, of injuries done to the farmers, in their crops and fields, by the soldiers passing over and trampling upon the young growth, in a wanton and disorderly manner, he expressly orders the officers commanding, either upon duty or in quarters, in the country, to take especial care to put a stop to such practices, and also to take care to have their men that they come to protect, not to injure the property of any man."—4 Am. Archives, V: 1071.

The following order is issued from "New York Head Quarters:" "The Quarter Master General, assisted by Colp Putnam, Chief Engineer, ordered Major & Quarter Master Sergeant & two men from each Regiment of the 1st, 2d, 4th & 5th Brigades are at sunrise to marry mornning to be at the Redoubt on Byard's Hill, to mark out encampments for the four Brigades."—Glover Corresp. (M.S.), 110.

The following letter, from Abraham van Dyck, commander Apr.
of the "Grenadier Company," is sent to Lord Stirling, "after completing the Grenadier Battery," "to the Circumstances with which the Grenadier Company under my command had for some Time past been employed about, is now compleated, and I am requested to acquaint your Lordship therewith . . ." Stirling replied to this with complimentary sentiments on the 30th, referring to it as "to the North-West of this City."—N. Y. Merc., May 6, 1776; Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 55; Glover Corresp., 112-13. See April 29.

The general in command at New York (Washington) condemns the "riotous behaviour of some of the soldiers of the Continental army, yesterday & the evening before," and issues a warning that hereafter the "author" of similar actions "will be brought to the severest punishment."—Glover Corresp. (M.S.), 111.

Jane Wiedenburg, writing to Capt. Richard Varick, states: Apr.
"Our City in A Short time Will be Very Well Fortified the Streets are so Blocked up there is hardly any Passing. They are Erecting A Fort on the Governors Island, they have A Very fine one they Say on Long Island & several in town I hope they May Be of Service to us if Occasion Requires."—Hist. Mag. (1869), 2d ser., VI: 166.

Enclosed in a communication from Gov. Tryon to Lord Geo-

Dr. Isaac Bang's records in his diary: . . . I tried the Church of England in the afternoon. But the satisfaction I received from the substance of an excellent sermon was greatly abated by the pedantic behaviour of the priest, the irreverent conduct of the people and the foolish parade of ceremonics. I am determined next Sunday . . . to attend worship with the Dutch priest, whom I heard last week, choosing rather to worship where I understand nothing, than to hear and see such folly."—Hist. Mag., 2d ser., IV: 306.

The troops in New York are formed anew into four brigades, Apr. and assigned to their respective camps. "Heath's first brigade was posted on the Hudson, just without the city above the Canal Street marsh and about Richmond Hill; Spencer's second, on the East River, around the Rutgers' farm and Jones' Hill; and Stirling's fourth, in the centre, near Bayard's Hill and the Bowery Hill; while Greene's third brigade was assigned to 'the ground marked out upon Long Island.'"—Campaign of 1776 around New York and Brooklyn, by Henry P. Johnston (1878), 61-64.

Washington writes to John Augustine Washington: "We have already gone great lengths [see April 27] in fortifying this city, and this will be a very respectable posture of defence. The works we have already constructed, and which they found we were about to erect, have put the King's ships to flight; for, instead of lying within pistol-shot of the wharves, and their sentries conversing with ours, (which they have gone down to the Hook, near thirty miles from this place, the last harbor they can get to . . ."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 56; Glover Corresp. (M.S.), 112-13.

In a published order, Washington states that "An Intercourse and Correspondence with the Ships of War, and other Vessels belonging to, and in the Service of the King of Great-Britain [see Apr. 17], is highly detrimental to the Rights and Liberties" of "the United Colonies," and that such intercourse was forbidden by order of the committee of safety on April 18; but, nevertheless, "there is with us a desire to believe that some future Lord or Statesman, who is not yet acquainted with our necessity, will consider the energy with which we have put our hands to the work, and the expense that we have incurred in thepurchase of their own present private Emolument to their Country's Weal, have continued to carry on the same, particularly some who under Pretence of coming to the Market of this City by Water, have put themselves, their Vessels and Effects in the Way of the Ships of War, for the Purposes of giving Intelligence and furnishing them, with Provisions or Provisions. He therefore orders that if in future anyone carries on such intercourse, "or any Kind of Correspondence whatever, or furnish and supply the said Ships of War, and other Vessels in such Service, with Provisions and Necessaries of any Kind, that he or they so offending will be deemed and con-

Gen. Washington, writing from New York to Gen. Lee, says, in answer to a great deal of work at this place. In the first fortnight more, I think the city will be in a very respectable posture of defence. Governor's Island has a large and strong work erected, and a regiment encamped there. The point below, called Red Hook, has a small, but exceedingly strong barbette battery; and several new works are constructed, and many of them almost executed at other places."—5 Am. Arch., I: 97.

The ferry to Pawlus (Paulus) Hook, of which Abraham Mesier is ferry-man (see May 1, 1774), is abandoned.—M. G. C. (MS.), VIII: 243. It was not renamed until after the Revolution.—See Nov. 26, 1783.

Cornelius Bradford announces that he has engaged in the Merchant's Coffee House, where he intends collecting "interesting intelligence," and will note the arrival of all vessels, and endeavour to carry all the public papers, as well as supplies of all kinds of liquors, etc.—N. Y. Merc., April 18, 1776. His first order was executed by Mary Farrara in 1772 (April 27, q.v.). Bradford changed its name to the New York Coffee House.

Dr. Isaac Bangs records in his diary: "... took a view of the furnace ... In this furnace have been cast many excellent brass field-pieces (six pounders), besides iron cannon equal to any made in any part of the world."—Hist. Mag., 2d ser., IV: 396.

The first, second, and fourth brigades are ordered to encamp on May 3 on the ground laid out for them (see April 25).—Glover Corresp. (MS.), 114. On May 4, it was chronicled: "The weather proving wet & cold, the Regiments that did not encamp yesterday are to remain in their present quarters until Monday morning."—Ibid., 115.

The following order is issued from headquarters at New York:

"The Officers commanding in or near the encampment are to be particularly attentive to prevent waste or depredation being committed upon the fields, fences, trees or buildings about the Camp. Turf is not permitted to be cut, unless by the express order of the Chief Engineer ... The Quarter Master General will supply a quantity of boards for flooring the tents of every Regiment, which are upon no account to be converted to any other use."—Glover Corresp. (MS.), 115-16.

The statesmen at New York were ordered to hold themselves in readiness, to march at a moment's notice. Several soldiers were taken down with the small-pox, and some of them died.—Mem. of Maj.-Gen. Heath (1778), 46.

Mrs. Eve Providence, of New York, writes an appealing letter to the committee of safety in behalf of her son, David Providence, "a passenger on board the Brig America lately taken by the Men of war at the Hook," and who "is detained a Prisoner on Board the Asia Man of War." She asks the committee to use its influence with Gen. Washington "to permit some Person to go on Board of the Asia in order to treat about my dear son's Release, as it is peculiarly hard upon him who had nothing to do with the Vessel or Cargo to be detained a prisoner almost at my own Door." The letter is endorsed: "We can't take the Asia yet."—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng. (Rev. Pap.), I: 301.

The provincial congress orders "That every male inhabitant of the city and county of New-York, above the age of sixteen years, and under the age of fifty years, who has withdrawn himself from the same since the first day of June last past, be required, and he is hereby required, to return without delay with his arms and accoutrements, and that every male inhabitant between the said several ages be henceforth prohibited, and is hereby prohibited, from departing this city and county, and assembling himself from the same for more than twenty-four hours, without leave of the Colonel, or commanding officer of the battalion or regiment to which he belongs; and that the committees in the neighboring counties and Colonies into whose district such inhabitant of this city and county have so withdrawn themselves, be, and they are hereby requested, to take effectual means to compel the said inhabitants who have so withdrawn themselves to return to their usual places of abode in the said city and County."—Joun. of the Pror. Cong., I: 498. For exemptions from this draft order, see June 15.

As I have not a doubt of my last letters to administration convicing them that this city and province is the only spot in America for carrying on the war against the rebels, I think the consequence the efforts expected this spring as well as those now under your command, will be ordered hither: It may be necessary and advisable to send the army thro' the Sound, between Connecticut and Long-Island. ... The [Long] Island has a plain on it, at least 20 miles long, which has a fertile country about it, is 20 miles from the city of New-York; Connecticut opposite to it; New-Jersey about 30 miles distant; Philadelphia 110; Maryland 150; Rhode-Island 150; so that in this fertile island the army can subsist without any succour from Britain or Ireland and in 5 or 6 days invade and destroy a part of the 12 Colonies at pleasure. Add to these great advantages that the possession of the Narrows, and Nutton-Island would be the destruction of this city, but of this I think there would be no need, for all the principal inhabitants are at heart with the crown particularly all my brethren the members of the assembly but as the mob now commands prudence forbids them to declare without a military force. You have many with you who are acquainted with the navigation of the Sound. The spot which I advise you to land at is Cowbay."—Ind. Chron. (Boston), Sept. 26, 1776. Cow Bay was the modern Manhattan Bay.—See Simeon De Witt's map of N. Y. State, 1802.

"The Carpenters, Boat-Builders, and Painters, who were selected for the publick service this morning by Major-General Putnam, are to parade to-morrow morning, at sunrise, in the street opposite to General Putnam's, where they will receive his orders."—4 Am. Arch., VI: 491.

A convention in Williamsburg, Va., with 112 delegates present, resolves unanimously "That the Delegates appointed to represent this colony in General Congress be instructed to propose to that respectable body to declare the United Colonies free and independent states, absolved from all allegiance to, or dependence upon, the crown or parliament of Great Britain; and that they give the assent of this colony to such declaration, and to whatever measures may be thought proper and necessary by the Congress for forming foreign alliances, and a confederation of the colonies, at such time, and in the manner, as to them shall seem best: and that a committee be appointed to procure, for the benefit of the United Colonies and such a plan of government as will be most likely to maintain peace and order in this colony, and secure substantial and equal liberty to the people."—From Jefferson's printed copy of the Proceedings of the Convention of Delegates (1776), p. 52 (preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library). Conn. Gaz. (New London), June 5, 1776. Richard Henry Lee, one of the delegates in congress from Virginia, presented such a resolution on June 7 (p. v.). A correspondent from Williamsburg to the N. Y. Journal, of June 6, declared that this resolution was "the result of most mature deliberation ... It was followed in the afternoon by such military expressions of gladness and exultation, as the condition of our troops here would admit, and the evening was closed with illuminations, &c. The procuring of foreign assistance was the immediate object of this Resolution, as the alternative of separation or submission was the assigned ground of it. But a political connection on any terms, with a people who have exerted against us every species of barbarity and inimitable vice, would have had few advocates."—N. T. Journ., June 6, 1776. See May 30.

Congress, which assembled in Philadelphia on the 15th, passes a resolution recommending "to the respective Assemblies and Conventions of the United Colonies, which have not yet adopted such a Declaration, or have not sufficient to the exigencies of their affairs has been hitherto established, to adopt such Government as shall, in the opinion of the Representatives of the People, best conducive to the happiness and safety of their constituents in particular and America in general." 15 In accordance with the order of the continental congress, the commander at New York declares that "the Battalion of the Militia of this city are dismissed."—Glover Correspond. (MS), 121.

16 This day (Friday) having been "appointed by the congress as a day of public fasting, prayer and humiliation," a sermon is preached [probably at Trinity] by Rev. Dr. Ingris on the subject of "peace and repentance." He discalms, however, "having any thing to do with politics."

17 Captain Paul Jones arrives in New York from his first naval cruise. On the following day he wrote a letter to Joseph Hewes of the continental congress, sitting in Philadelphia. Hewes was a member of the congressional committee on naval affairs. He was very friendly to Jones, who secured through him his first appointment, as first lieutenant of the "Alfred," Bag ship of the first American squadron. The fleet had just returned from its foray against the British in the West Indies, and Jones’ letter to Hewes is a report of some of the events of the cruise. He writes from on board the sloop "Providence," in New York harbour, having been assigned to command in its place that had been left in the New York harbour marited. He says: "I now enclose you the Minutes of two Court Martials [Whipple and Hazard] held on board the Alfred."

18 In consequence of the last trial I was ordered to take command of this vessel the tenth curr. I arrived here yesterday afternoon in 36 hours from Rhode Island with a return of upwards of 120 men besides Officers which Gen. Washington lent to the Fleet in N. London." He refers to the sickness of the men in the fleet, and expresses the opinion that "the unfortunate engagement of the Ganges [British man-of-war] seems to be a general reflection on the officers of the Fleet, but a little reflection will set the matter in a true light."—Letters and Biographies by John Paul Jones, by Mrs. Reginald de Koven (N. Y., 1913), 102-7.

19 The following signals are given to alarm all the troops, as well regular as Militia, & the inhabitants of the City—that is— in the day time, two cannon fired from the rampart of Fort George, and a flag raised on the top of the Head Quarters. In the night time, two cannon fired as above, from Fort George, & two lanterns hoisted on the top of Head Quarters, as aforesaid.—Glover Correspond. (MS), 122.

Washington, summoned by congress to Philadelphia, leaves military instructions with Gen. Putnam to guide his conduct in the event of congress deciding to seize "the principal Tories and disaffected persons on Long Island, in this City [New York], and the country round about."—Am. Arch., VII: 533-34. See also Van Tye, The Loyalists (1902), 223.

He also leaves instructions with Gen. Putnam regarding the completion of the works at Long Island, Governor’s Island, New York, Paulus Hook, and the Narrows; also the placing of alarm signals along the Long Island shore, the repair of fortifications in the Highlands, and the proper placing and securing of powder magazine.— Ibid., VI: 57.

20 Towards the end of the month, Gen. Washington, and on the Batteries are to keep a sharp look out towards the narrows, Staten Island, Red Hook, &c.—to observe if any signals are given from thence, and acquaint the Officer of the Guard immediately therewith.—Glover Correspond. (MS), 125.

This is the last date, until after the Revolution, of the recorded minutes of the common council.—M. C. C., VIII: 138.

Christopher Colles is granted £6 for his attendance in taking Care of the Water Works for one month due to him the 19th day of May last," and one Hornblower is granted £12 "in Consideration of the trouble he was in, in inspecting & examining the Water Works in this City and making a Report of the State of the Same."—M. C. C., VIII: 139, 140. This is the last entry to the Minutes concerning the water works prior to the Revolution. At the outbreak of the war the enterprise had to be abandoned.—Man. Gen. Coun. (1865), 799. The condition of the work at about this time is perhaps best explained by Lient. Bangs.—See April 17.

The common council authorizes the payment to Robert Andrews of £60(1776), "in full for the Balance of his Account against this Corporation." The account originally amounted to £49819, and was for "the whole weight of Iron Delivered... and weighed on the workhouse Schales and Used at the New bride-well."—Original voucher in box 1, controller’s office; M. C. C., VIII: 138.

Abraham van Gelder is paid £39156, the balance due to him according to his "Settlement 1776 for the City Lamps."—Original voucher in box 1, controller’s office; M. C. C., VIII: 138.

An account of Gerard Bancker, city surveyor, against the corporation for £3150 is ordered paid.—M. C. C., VIII: 139. Bancker’s itemized bill of 57 items (see June 14, 1774), covering a period from Aug. 28, 1772, to May 11, 1775, is preserved in the controller’s office, in box 1, 1750-1815. It has peculiar topographical value because so many landmarks are mentioned and because so many actual or proposed city improvements are shown. Among items other than those to which reference has already been made (see Jan. 14, 1774) are: (Aug. 28, 1773) "To Surveying Col. Moore’s Lots &c at the White Hall, & making a plan of the Lots 5 in Number." (Sept. 16, 1772) "To levelling White Hall Slip when to be filled in." (Oct. 24, 1772) "To levelling the Broad Way from the Lutheran Church to Verlebben." (Oct. 24, 1772) "To a Survey and plan of the Negro burying Ground." (March 25, 1773) "To a large Map of the Corporation Lots containing the New Goal, compiled by order of Mr. V. Cortlandt, from Sundry Maps he furnished me with." (May 25, 1773) "To levelling Broad Way from Verlebben towards the Bowling Green, with a Plan for digging it down and Report." (July 1, 1773) "To Survey and plan of the Ground next to the Meeting when going to purchase it from Col: M’Dougal." (July 2, 1773) "To levelling & staking out the Battery Pond when about filling it up." (Sept. 2, 1773) "To levelling from Pitt’s Statue down to Aug’ Van home." (Sept. 26, 1773) "To attaining a Committee & Staking out the Street past judge Horsmanden’s as now to be altered." (Feb. 14, 1774) "To 1 Day at M’s McGowen’s meeting the Committee of Harlem respecting the Line." (Mar. 4, 1774) "To a Survey & Plan to Mr. H’s Ellison’s Lots and the Battery & Street Contingents (by Order of Mr. Hicks Mayor) when the Governor was about purchasing it." (April 20, 1774) "To levelling and Staking out the Street fronting the College." (June 14, 1774) "To a Survey & Plan of the Corporation Land contiguous to the New Goal, Barracks & Poor House, made to enable the Committee to fix on a Suitable place for the Water Works." The General! (Washington!) thanks the provincial congress and general committee "for their care in endeavouring to prevent the spreading of the small-pox (by inoculation or any other way) in this City, or in the Continental Army," and he orders that strict inspection of the troops be made. "Any officer in the Continental Army who shall suffer himself to be inoculated, will be cashiered and turned out of the Army, and have his name published in the Newspapers throughout the continent as an enemy and traitor to his Country."—Am. Arch., VI: 655-56.

The committee of Mechanics in Union, of the city and county of New York, present an address, dated "Mechanic-Hall," May 29, to the representatives of this province in the provincial congress, stating that if these representatives "think proper to instruct our most honourable Delegates in Continental Congress, to use their utmost endeavours in that august assembly to cause these United Colonies to become independent of Great-Britain," it would give the mechanics "the highest satisfaction," and they "thereby sincerely promise to endeavour to support the same with our lives and fortunes." The provincial congress replied, on June 4, that "the Continental Congress alone, have that enlarged view of our political circumstances, which will enable them to decide upon those measures which are necessary for the general welfare." They therefore cannot instruct the delegates to the continental congress, as desired in the address.—N. Y. Merc., June 10, 1776. A second address was presented by the mechanics on June 14 (p. 96).

Charles Loosley and Thomas Elms, of New York, paper makers, petition the provincial congress for exemption from military service, owing to the need of keeping their business in operation for the public good. They claim they have carried the art of paper-making to higher degrees of perfection than ever it arrived before. And they "have been the means of increasing the number of Paper Mills, improving their construction, and moderating the price of paper." Their work, they say, is "being carried on at a great expense no less than $20 per day for rent and a number of hands who require constant oversight and direction . . . ." They have been supplying paper for "provincial money," and for "Weekly publications."—Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 310.

A Virginian writes to a London correspondent: "The original Plan of Lee, Henry, and others of the Faction, has at length taken Place; The Convention of this Colony have declared themselves 'independant of Britain' [see May 15], and have passed some Resolutions for confiscating the Estates of the Deserters of their Country's Liberties, (as they call those Gentlemen whom they obliged to leave the Colony)."—St. James Cleren. (London), Aug. 3-6, 1776.

The continental congress authorises Washington "to direct the building as many fire rafts, row gallies, armed boats, and floating batteries as may be necessary, and suitable for the immediate defence of the port of New York, and the Hudson's river."—Jour. of the Cont. Cong. (Ford ed., 1906), IV: 400-7.

The vestry of the city and county of New York present a petition for a final express for a large sum of £5000 to the city for the support of the poor. There are now about 400 poor in the almshouse and adjoining buildings. The most opulent of the May inhabitants of the City "have retired to the Country." The poor include all classes of dependents.—Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 311 and see ibid., I: 465; Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 467. In response to this appeal the provincial congress passed a resolution, on June 8, "That the sum of £300 be . . . lent to the Justices and Vestrymen of the Day respecting the City and County of Great Britain, for the sole purpose, to be repaid at such time and in such manner as this or some future Congress or Legislature of this Colony shall direct."—Am. Arch., VI: 1391.

General Washington has wrote to General Putnam in the most pressing terms, to give orders to all the Colonies to have colours immediately completed for their respective Regiments.—Glover Correspond. (MS.), 131.

The provincial congress adopts the following resolutions:

"Whereas the present government of this Colony by Congress and Committees, was instituted while the form of government under the Crown of Great Britain existed in full force, and was established for the sole purpose of opposing the usurpation of the British Parliament, and was intended to expire on a reconciliation with Great Britain, which it was then apprehended would soon take place, but is now considered as remote and uncertain . . . ." And whereas the great inconveniences and difficulties which tend the said mode of government by Congress and Committees, as of necessity in many instances legislative, judicial and executive powers have been vested therein, especially since the dissolution of the former government by the abdication of the late Governor and the execution of this Colony from the protection of the King of Great Britain . . . . "And whereas doubts have arisen whether this Congress are invested with sufficient power and authority to deliberate and determine on so important a subject as the necessity of erecting and constituting a new form of government and internal police, to the exclusion of all foreign jurisdiction, dominion and control whatever [see June 7] . . . . Therefore Resolved, That it be recommended to the electors in the several counties in this Colony by election in the manner and form prescribed for the election of the present Congress, either to authorize their present Deputies, or others in the stead . . . to take into consideration the necessity and propriety of instituting such new government as . . . is described and recommended. And if the majority of the counties by their Deputies in Provincial Congress, shall be of opinion that such new government ought to be instituted and established, then to institute and establish such a government as they shall deem best calculated to secure the rights, liberties and happiness of the good people of this Colony, and to continue in force until a future peace with Great Britain shall render the same unnecessary. And, Resolved, That the said elections in the several counties of Great Britain ought to be had on such day as shall be fixed and determined by each of the committees of each county respectively shall be determined . . . ."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 468-69. William Smith refers to this resolution in his diary, under June 8 (q.v.).

The Examination of Candidates for Admission will be held in the same Place the first Week in the Month of June."—N. T. Merc., May 30, 1776. See June 3, 1777.

Nineteen twentieths at least of the inhabitants with their families & effects had left that city [New York] between the latter part of the year 1775 & the month of June 1776, & these persons may be distinguished under the following heads.

First. Rebels or persons in opposition to his Majesty's govt. & in civil or military capacities.

Second. Those who feared the consequences of remaining in a besieged town.

Third. Those who were loyalists & availed themselves of that opportunity to avoid military duty (which without distinction all the male inhabitants between sixteen & sixty [see Aug. 24, 1775; 1st Addenda] years were subject to) & retired into different parts of the Country—and

...A guard is ordered to be posted at Kingsbridge, "in order to prevent any soldier of the army passing that way, unless they have it in writing from the Commanding Officer of their respective Corps;" and "All masters of Vessels, Ferrymen &c are strictly enjoined not to carry any soldier of the army, without leave in writing from the Commanding Officer of their respective Corps, as above..."—Ibid., June 17, 1776.

...in the continental congress, Richard Henry Lee, of Virginia, introduces these resolutions: "Resolved, that these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States, that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved. "That it is expedient forthwith to take the most effectual measures for forming foreign Alliances. "That a plan of confederation be prepared and transmitted to the respective Colonies for their consideration and approbation."

...From original in Lib. of Congress. See reproduction in Hazen's, Decl. of Independence: Its History, insert between pp. 108 and 109. These resolutions were in conformity with the instructions of the Virginia convention, of May 5 [4 Jun.], to her delegates. Committees were appointed by Congress, to consider these matters, on June 10 (g.2).

...The New-York committee issues the following statement and appeal: Whereas doubts have arisen in the Provincial Congress [see Jour. 24, p. 464] What had been invested with sufficient power and authority to deliberate and determine on so important a subject as the necessity of erecting and constituting a new form of Government and internal police, to the exclusion of all foreign jurisdiction, dominion, and control whatever, agreeable to a late resolve of the honourable the Continental Congress [see May 31];...The General Committee of the City and County of New-York, . . . earnestly request and entreat all the freethinkers and freemen, and also all the other inhabitants of the said City and County, to arm themselves, and invest in their own right to the amount of forty pounds, to attend at the City-Hall of the said City, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, on Monday, the 17th day of this instant June, and there to invest their present Members of Provincial Congress with the power afore-said, or to elect by ballot others in their stead, or in the stead of any of them, with such power to continue to represent the said City and County in Congress, until the second Tuesday in May next, or until a reconciliation with Great Britain, or the establishment of a new form of government shall render the same unneces- sary.—4 Am. Arch., VI: 744. See also, June 7.

...Gen. Howe writes to Lord Germain that the admiral has given orders to the cruisers off the northern coast to direct all the troops from Europe to proceed to New York. The plan is to make a landing on Long Island, etc.—MS. letter, cited in Writings of Gen. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 71.

..."The Mercury Man of War," and an armed Sloop, sailed for Halifax, from Sandy-Hook, last Friday [June 7], having 5 Vessels under Coover.

..."There now remains at the Hook 7 Ships, and some small Vessels."—N.Y. Merc., June 10, 1776.

...The provincial congress passes the following resolution: "That the thanks of this Congress be presented to His Excellency Genl Washington, for the important services he has rendered to the United Colonies, and for the attention he has paid to the interest and civil authority of this Colony; and that he be assured of the readiness of this Congress to afford him all the aid in their power to enable him to execute the important trust reposed in him. The president of the congress waited on Gen. Washington the same day, communicated this resolution to him, and received the following reply addressed to the congress (which was entered in the journal on the 9th): "I am extremely obliged for the high sense you entertain of my services, and for your promises of every possible assistance in the discharge of my important duty. You may rest assured that every attention to the interest and happiness of this Colony shall not be wanting, nor my regard to its civil authority remained, while I am honoured with the command I now hold."—Ibid., June 17, 1776.

...William Smith writes in his diary: "The Clouds grow very dark. My Hopes of a conciliatory negotiation almost fail me on advice of the Rejection of the motion to stop the foreign Troops from Brunswick Hess & Hanau & the King's Answer to the London address in March last. On the 31st May [4 Jun.], the N.Y. Congress called our People to the Question respecting the Erection of a new Government—Virginia has cast off all Dependence."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

..."The army in New-York was now growing sickly, and there was not a sufficiency of hospitals, room, or of medicines."—Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath (1798), 46.

...The continental congress resolves : "That the consideration of the first resolution [vide infra] be postponed to this day, three weeks [July 1], and in the mean while, that no time be lost, in case the Congress agree thereto, that a committee be appointed to prepare a declaration to the effect of the said first resolution, which is in these words [see June 7]: That these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown; and that all political connection between them and the state of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved."—Jour. Cont. Cong., IV: 428–29 (see also 425–26, footnote). See July 2.

...Washington writes to the president of congress that circumstances indicate that British troop ships "are hourly expected at the Hook."—Writings of Gen. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 130.

...He writes to Gov. Trumbull: "Our works are extensive and many, and the troops here but few for their defence, being greatly reduced by the regiments detached on the Canada expedition." He asks Trumbull to send militia.—Ibid., IV: 138.

...A letter written by John Varick, Jr., to Capt. Richard Varick states: "There is a Letter now in Town in the Name of Pitt, attested as a true Copy from the Original by W. T. Terox, perhaps, for W. P.—William Pitt, which protests against the Proceedings of the Colonies, & imports that as long as we contended for Liberty, he was our Friend, but since we had lev'd open War against his Majesty, every Sinew, & every Nerve should be exerted to suppress Rebellion, & reduce his Subjects to a Sense of their Duty."—N. T. City during the Am. Revolution, 96.

Gov. Trumbull, of Connecticut, replies to the letter of the New York provincial congress (see March 8). His delay in answering he attributes to the necessity of laying the matter before the state assembly, which body failed to act upon the matter," says Mr. Trumbull, giving them assurance that the delay "was not from any disregard to your respectable body, nor for want of inclination to cultivate the utmost harmony between this and the Province you represent . . . . Your candour in imputing the intrusion of a number of our people into your capital, (in the manner the letter imagines,) gives them assurance that the public cause, gives me real pleasure; and can give you the strongest assurance that this Colony by no means approve their conduct, yet a severe censure at this time, . . . might be attended with such inconveniences as you will readily apprehend . . . and which, I dare say, will suggest to you at once a satisfactory excuse for our not taking such measures, as might have been expected, in times of peace and quiet; though in such happy seasons the proper resort for the private injury must have been to the courts of law, which are the only jurisdiction which can legally take notice of violations of the peace, and the only means of any advantage to the party, in the still more favourable light, when you reflect that the heart of the whole transaction was an imputable member of your city and Congress, who we consider as the proper person to whom the whole transaction was imputable, and who belongs, and is amenable to your jurisdiction alone; and, therefore, the affair cannot be considered as an intrusion of our people into your Province, but as a violence or disorder happening among yourselves."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 491—92. When Rivington went to England, early in 1776 (Jan. 10, q.v.), the matter seems to have been dropped without further official action.

"The following order is issued from "Head-Quarters New York."—"The Guard at the Brewery, North River, to be reinforced with men, who are to furnish two sentinels at the Paymaster General's Office, at the house of Mr. Linenhard."—Glover Corresp. (M.S.), 117.

The continental congress resolves "That a committee be appointed to prepare and digest the form of a confederation to be entered into between these colonies."—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 431. See July 12.

John Hancock, president of the continental congress, writes from Philadelphia to the New York convention: "The Congress have this Day received Advice, and are fully convinced, that it is the Design of General Howe to make an Attack upon the City of New York, which it is impossible; the Army cannot believe will be made within ten Days; I am therefore most earnestly to request you, by Order of Congress, to call forth your Militia, as requested in my Letter of the 4th. Instant, and to forward them with all Dispatch to the City of New York; and that you direct that they March in Companies, or any other Way that will hasten their Arrival there. The important Day is at Hand that will decide not only the Fate of the City of New-York, but in all Probability of the whole Province. On such an Occasion there is no Necessity to use Arguments with Americans; their Feelings I well know will prompt them to their Duty, and the Sacredness of the Cause will urge them to the Field. The greatest Excitement of Vigour and Expedition are requisite to prevent our Enemies from getting Possession of that Town; I must therefore again most earnestly request you, in the Name, and by the Authority of Congress, to send forward the Militia, agreeable to the Proclamation of Congress, and that you do it with all the Dispatch which the Infinite Importance of the Cause demands."—N. T. Merc., June 17, 1776.

"Citizens of the City of New York Gathered together a number of them and went round among them which they Surmised to be those who had attended them and went about them about the Streets, on a Rail, and then confined them in Gaol others they Visited and they appeared to be so Humble they Let them alone after making Promise to comply with their Directions (I happened to have the Pecquet that Day) the Government has in the mean Time dispersed the Brigades in order to Surpress them but seeing So many under Arms they Dispersed Quick."—From "Diary of Ensign Caleb Clap," in Hist. Magz., 3d ser. (1874), III: 155.

Similar riots occurred the next day, and Gen. Putnam and Milbon complained to the provincial congress about them. The congress, therefore, passed the following resolution: "That this Congress by no means approve of the riotous proceedings of the 13th instant; that they flatter themselves, however, that they have proceeded from a real regard to liberty and a detestation of those persons by whose language and conduct, have discovered themselves to be inimical to the cause of America. To urge the warm friends of liberty to docety and good order, this Congress assures the public that effectual measures shall be taken to secure the enemies of American liberty in this colony; and do require the good people of this city and colonoly to desist from all riots, and leave the offenders against so good a cause to be dealt with by the constitutional representatives of the colony."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 491.

In a letter to Capt. Richard Varick written on June 13, Peter Elting mentioned the riots and congress's resolution. He said that among the Tories carried through the streets were "Capt. [Theophilus] Hardenbrook, Mr. Rem. Ranjelte, Mr. Queen the Potitsacy & Lentsly the barber. There is hardly a toozy face to be seen this morning."—N. T. Merc., June 14, 1776.

The provincial congress of New York, in reply to a letter from the New York delegates in the continental congress, states that these delegates are not authorized by their instructions "to give the sense of this Colony on the question of declaring it to be, and continue, an independent State."—4 Am. Arch., VI: 814.

In connection with the resolution offered by Richard Henry Lee on June 7, the continental congress now appoints a committee of five, headed by Thomas Jefferson, "to prepare the declaration." It was further decided to appoint a committee to prepare and digest the form of a confederation to be entered into between these colonies, and a third committee "to prepare a plan of treaties to be proposed to foreign powers."—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 431. See July 2.

The New York provincial congress distributes handbills announcing that the province will soon be invaded, and recommending that the officers of the militia review their commands, and be ready to march when called upon.—From broadsides in archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

From the headquarters at New York comes this order: "The great extensiveness of the fortiifications & works required a greater number of artillerymen than are at present in the Artillery Regiment; the General, in order to remedy the deficiency, and forward the service, directs that four able bodied men be pitched upon in each Company of every Battalion now here (the Rifle Corps excepted) for the purpose above mentioned."—Glover Corresp. (M.S.), in Columbia Univ. Library, 139.

John Hancock, president of the continental congress, writes from Philadelphia to Gen. Washington: "The establishing a War Office is a new and great event in the history of America, and will doubtless be attended with a more advantageous and properly conducted and inspected. I hope the Committee will be ready in a few days to enter upon the execution of their duty. You will see the outlines of this office in the enclosed resolves. Some further regulations, it is more than probable, will be necessary in the course of time. The Congress have only laid a foundation at present; it still remains, in a great measure, to erect a system of rules and "Another address (see May 25) is presented to the delegates in the Continental Congress by the Mechanics in Union, for the City and County of New-York, represented by their General Committee." This discusses at length the power and authority of this congress "to deliberate and determine on so important a Subject as the Necessity of erecting and constituting a new Form of Government and internal Police, to the Exclusion of all Foreign Dominions and Control whatever."—N. T. Merc., June 17, 1776.

"A printed letter from the Continental Congress was distributed, which gave intelligence that for certain, within ten days, the fleet from Halifax would be here, and it was strongly recommended to make all possible defence. In consequence of this, many more troops came to town, and all was in alarm."—Shewkirk's Diary, in Johnston's Campaign of 1776, part 2, 108.

The continental congress resolves: "That it be recommended to the convention of the colony of New York, to make effectual provision for detecting, restraining, and punishing disaffected and dangerous persons in that colony, and to prevent all persons from having any intercourse or correspondence with the enemy; and that General Washington afford his aid therein, when necessary."—Jour. Cont. Cong., IV: 441. See June 15.

The provincial congress resolves: "That the clergy and licensed physicians be exempted from drafting [see May 10] for the militia to be raised in this city," also "That such of the firemen be exempted as will agree to form a separate company for the preservation of this city, in case of invasion, and be under the command of the General [Washington] until the further order of this congress."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 496. For a list of the city's firemen in 1776, see Man. Com. Coun. (1860), 625-29.

A "Committee to Detect Conspiracies," appointed by the provincial congress, begins proceedings for the trial of persons suspected of "such" or "of equivocal character."—Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 309-32, 41. See June 21.

The continental congress resolves: "That letters be written to the conventions of New Jersey and New York, and to the assembly of Connecticut, recommending to them to authorize the commander in chief in the colony of New York, to call to the assistance of that colony, when necessity shall require it, such of the militia of those colonies as may be necessary; and to afford him such other assistance as the situation of affairs may require."—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 452.

The provincial congress resolves: "That Capt. Hamilton's company of artillery be considered so many and a part of the quota of militia to be raised or furnished by the city of New-York."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 497.

"Colonel Magaw's and Col. Shea's Battalions are this day expected from Pennsylvania, and a great Number, of the Militia from the different Parts of New-Jersey, Connecticut and this Province, so that in the Course of this Week we may expect to have here an Army of at least 25,000 Men."—N. T. Merc., June 17, 1776.

The provincial congress gives an "elegant entertainment" to "His Excellency General Washington," and his suite, the General and Staff Officers, and the commanding officers of the different regiments in and near this city." In the published reports to the number of thirty-one are mentioned.—Gen. Gazette, June 19, 1776; Virginia Gaz. (Williamsburg), July 13.

A court of inquiry is held at the house of Mrs. Montaigne "to examine into the conduct of Capt. Copp, upon complaint of Lieut. Col. Zedwitz for assaulting and striking him." The court acquitted Copp the next day.—Const. Gaz., June 26, 1776. Regarding Zedwitz's character, see Aug. 24.

The Pennsylvania regiments, commanded by Colonels Shea and Magaw, were present in the city, and they had the appearance of fine troops. The day before, Gen. Wooster arrived from Canada.—Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath (1798), 47. On the next day, the remaining divisions of the battalions of Shea and Magaw arrived from Philadelphia. They marched to Kingsbridge on June 21, when the Corps—Army of June 22, 1776.

"Two Regiments of Men came in from Philadelphia."—Clap's Diary, in Hist. Mag., 1d ser., III: 115.

The continental congress resolves: "That 300,000 dollars be sent to the pay master general at New York, for the use of the army."—Jour. Cont. Cong., IV: 469.

Ensign Caleb Clap records in his diary: "A Gentleman Frenchman arrived here from Paris; what his business is I cannot inform, but it seems the General has been in the Greatest Pleasure with his Arrival, and may we be so lucky to be pleased with his在此, and be as happy as a dullard."—Hist. Mag., 3d ser., III: 135. This was evidently the Chevalier de Kermorvan whom, with Mons. de Vermonet, Washington introduced by letter of June 21 to the president of congress.

The New-York minute's meeting with its minutes: "Whereas it has been represented to this Committee that printed tickets are circulating in this City for small change, which, if permitted, in our estimation will have a tendency to depreciate the Paper currency emitted by Congresses, Committees, of Corporate bodies," it is resolved that they "will not receive in payment any tickets issued by any individual," and they recommend to the public not to encourage, by any means, the circulation of any such tickets for the future."—Am. Arch., VI: 996.

That Washington was at the Mortier house on this date is evident from testimony (see June 21) which states that one Corbille keeps a tavern "to the southeast of General Washington's house, to the westward of Bayard's woods, and north of Lipman's meadow."—Am. Arch., VI: 1157; Johnston, Campaign of 1776, 86.

Viscount Howe, having been appointed a commissioner for the granting of pardons, issues a proclamation declaring that "due Consideration shall be had to the meritorious Services of all Persons, who shall aid and assist in restoring the public Tranquillity in the said Colonies, or in any Part or Parts thereof; that Pardon shall be granted, dutiful Representations received, and every suitable Encouragement given, for promoting such Measures shall be conducive to the Establishment of legal Government and Peace, in pursuance of His Majesty's most gracious Purposes." The proclamation is issued from "no board His Majesty's Ship the Eagle off of the Coasts of the Province of Massachusetts Bay."—From original MS. in Emnet Collection, No. 679.

A plot against the lives of Washington, O'Callaghan, and others is discovered. One of Washington's body-guard, Thomas Hickey, was found guilty and was hanged. The plot became known as the "Hickey Plot." Although Mayor Mathews and others were accused and arrested, the conspiracy was supposed to have been organized by Gov. Tryon, on "The Dutchess of Gordon," and aimed at a delivery of the city and the army to the royal forces.—See the correspondence relating to it in N. Y. City during the Am. Rev. (1861), and authorities there cited. See also Minutes of the Trial and Execution of Certain Persons for Conspiracy against the Liberties of America (J. Burns, London, 1776).

Gen. Samuel B. Webb, Washington's aide-de-camp, entered in his journal on June 21 the following statement regarding this plot: "Some days past, the General received information that a most horrid plot was on foot by the vile Tories of this place and the adjacent towns and villages. Having taken the necessary precautions, the next night at two o'clock in the morning a number of officers and guards went to different places and took up many of their principals; among whom was David Matthews, Esq., Mayor of the City; and to our great astonishment we find five or more of the General's life guard to be accomplices in this wicked scheme, which was at a concerted time, to assassinate His Excellency, and the other general officers, blow up the magazine, spike the cannon, etc. It was to be put in execution as soon as the enemy's fleet appeared, if no proper time offered before; but, thank God, they are discovered, and many of them in close custody; where, I hope, they will receive the punishment due such infamous wretches."—Correspondence and Journals of S. B. Webb (ed. by W. C. Ford), I: 1850; N. Y. Herald, Aug. 28, 1786.

Ensign Caleb Clap entered in his diary on the same day the following account of it: At evening the Mayor of the City of New York was taken unawares and a number of the members of the General Washington Life Guard, and some others belonging to Different Regiments, it is Reported to the amount of 40 are now taken, some are now in Irons, other Confined in the State House, the Mayor is Confined in A Publick House by the State House, this Arising from a Chest of Armes Cut May 26, 1776, in order to be conveyed to the Asia, in the Chest was A List of A Number of the Tories that [had] given there Name to Stand by the British Forces, and when We were attack they was to Destroy the

J. Townsend, who was encamped with the patriot army "about one mile N W of the City upon the north River in a very Pleasant Place," wrote to his father on June 22: "Lt Col. Clap has just Come out of the City and brings information that the Mayor of the City and about twenty of the Citizens were taken into Custody this morning, who are found out in laying a plan to take our General Officers and Convey them to the Asia Man of War, and when any attack should be made for to blow up our Magazines; in order to Effect this they Bribed a number of our Soldiers and put them (Old Country men) all under pay who receive their pay weekly and were to execute the foregoing, one of which men belongs to the Genl Lt's house. This is Confided in to the Mayor and also sent a Draft of all our works in and about the City to the Asia, the Town is in a good deal of uproar and Confusion this morning; I went the grand Rounds with Major Smith last night found by one of the Capt's upon guard in a Fort that just before we Came up a Mr. who perceived Creeping in at one of the Ambuzeres, was haul'd made no answer and retreated, upon which the Centinel fired three times upon him before he got of but did not stop him, we have had our alarm Cannon, in the Alarm Battery, spiked up once, and several pieces in the Artillery Park, which must be done by some of those in our army who receive pay from the other side. I find the guns went off rather than I have mentioned, that they were to set fire to the Town in nine places if required—the plan if it had succeeded must have proved fatal to our Army here—the one belonging to the Genl Guard mentioned before, belonged formerly to this Regt. (Col. Reads) and infiltrated out of it into the Guard, there is one more of the guard suspected and Confined, the Genl8 house is but a few rods from our campment that I have a good opportunity of nowng the movements that is made there." (P. S.)—Since writing this letter hear there is six of the Genl Guard found to be in the plan among whom are the two Captains Fican the original letter in the "Miscellaneous Collections," N. Y. Hist. Soc.

On June 24, Ezra Stiles recorded in his diary: "a Plot—was lately discovered, and the Mayor of the City, David Matthews, Esq. & a number of others were seized and taken into Custody. The Plot was to blow up the Magazine, assassinate G. Washington & a number of capital Characters in the Army, pull up Kinniplact, set fire to the City and give signals to the Kings Fleet & Army for Landing & taking possession."—Literary Diary of Ezra Stiles, II: 18, 20.

A letter written on June 21 from New York to Philadelphia stated: "Since Friday last a most barabrous and infernal plot has been discovered among our Tories, the particulars I cannot give you, as the Committee of examination consists of but three, who are sworn to secrecy. Two of Gen. Washington's guards are concerned, a third who they tempted to join them made the first discovery, I was desired to report of their affairs, upon the arrival of the British Troops, they were to murder all the Staff Officers, blow up the Magazines, and secure the passes of the town. Gilbert Forbes, a Guo-Smith in the Broadway, was taken between two and three o'clock on Saturday morning, and carried before our Congress, who were then sitting, he refused to make any discovery, unless the Several guards were to go to goal. The Congress sent to see him early in the morning, and told him, he was sorry to find he had been concerned, that his time was very short, not having above three days to live, and advised him to prepare himself. He had the desired effect, he desired to be carried before the Congress again, preparatory to disclosing all he had been since taken, between 30 and 30, among them our Mayor, they are all now in confinement. Their party, it is said, consisted of about 500."—Penn. Jour. (Philia.), June 26, 1776.

Geo. Samuel B. Webb, Washington's aide-de-camp, recorded in his journal, also on June 24: "The guard at the City Hall has in Charge those traitors to their country who were concerned in the late Horrid plot."—N. Y. Hist. Mag., Aug. 1876; and Journals of S. B. Webb (ed. by W. C. Ford, 1893-41), I: 150.

The charge against Mayor Mathews and the others was of "dangerous designs & treasonable conspiracies against the Rights & Liberties of the United States of America."—Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rout. Papers), I: 347. Mathews was made a prisoner on June 22—Ibid., I: 347. He was examined on June 23—Ibid., I: 356-5. See also Sept. 10, 1776; and Winson, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 316.

Being a decided Loyalist, Mayor Mathews's name had been entered on the list of the suspected, as early as May of this year. When arrested by order of the committee of safety (see June 22), he was lodged in the New York jail, but was soon removed to Connecticut. The charge against him was that he was cognizant of, or concerned in, Gov. Tryon's plot to assassinate Gen. Washington and blow up the fort. He escaped from Litchfield, Conn., in 1777, and he is represented by Sahine as in N. Y. in 1778, and as register of the court of common pleas in 1782. He had been taken, and his property confiscated. He left the United States in or about 1787.—Foot-note by O'Callaghan in Doc. Hist, N. Y. (40 ed.), III: 642-41. He died on July 26, 1800, at Sydney, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, where he had resided for fifteen years, and having been in general of that island shortly before his death.—Com. Adv., Sept. 25, 1800. Regarding the proceedings taken with Hickey, see June 26.

Col. Benjamin Tupper writes from Sandy Hook to Gen. Washington: "I landed here the evening before last, and by reason of several inconveniences, could not make an attack until this morning at four o'clock, when I advanced within one hundred and fifty yards of the Light-House, in so secret a manner that my party were not discovered. I advanced with an officer, and, after a few words, he fired several shot at me, but, as God would have it, he missed me. I returned to my party and ordered the artillery to play which caused him to halt, but found the walls so firm I could make no impression. I retired towards the shipping, not thinking, but, as there were two men-of-war arrived yesterday, that they would have been so complainant as to send a party on shore to have attacked me, but could not provoke them. I occupied the ground about two hours and a half between two smart fires, viz: from two men-of-war on one side, and the Light-House on the other: but, what is remarkable, I had not one man killed, nor one wounded so much as to apply to a surgeon."—4 Am. Arch., VI: 1011. Col. Tupper was in command of "a motley little fleet, made up of schooners, sloops, gunboats, and small craft." He had distinguished himself "by a naval exploit or two in Boston Harbor during the siege."—Johnston, Campaign of 1776 around New York and Brooklyn, 91.

Warrants are issued against the Tories in New York, a list of whom is prepared.—Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 357-53. Their examination follows.—Ibid., I: 174.

Aaron Burr is appointed aide-de-camp to Gen. Putnam.—Glover Carrepe. (M.S.), 144.

Mayor David Mathews is apprehended at Flatsbush. He is "dragged out of Bed at Midnight by an Officer and twenty Men belonging to the Rebel Army. By Order of the provincial Congress [see June 25], he was committed to close Confinement in the common Jail among Felons, during a Month in the hottest Time of the Year, and afterwards sent under Guard to the Committee at Litchfield, with an express Order from the President of the said Congress to detain him in Prison."—N. Notice is published that "Stage-Waggons" will run between Philadelphia and "Pawlas-Hook" on Mondays and Thursdays, stopping at "Prince-town." "Any Gentlemen or Ladies that wants to go to Philadelphia can go in the stage and be home in five Days and be two Nights and one Day in Philadelphia to do business, or see the Market Days." —Doc. Hist. N. T. (40 ed.), III: 744.

"The Guard House of the Provost Martial is removed to a brick House near Col. McDougall's encampment." —Glover Corresp. (MS.), 145.

The following orders are issued from headquarters at New York: "On the 1st of June, the Guard House of the Prisoneers at the City-Hall is to be strengthened every night as the last, so as to make up one hundred men, forty being required from the several Brigades. The General Court-Martial now sitting to assemble at the house where the Provost is kept, till further orders." —Am. Arch., VI: 1147.

Announcement is made of the 21 men "elected for this city and county . . . to serve in Congress [see June 7] the ensuing year, with the additional power of forming a new government for this colony." They, with the deputies of the other counties, are to meet in Congress here, on the second Monday of July next. —N. Y. Merc., June 24, 1776; N. Y. Packet, June 27, 1776.

Deserters from the man-of-war "Liverpool" report that the fleet from Halifax, with Gen. Howe's army, is hourly expected to arrive at New-York (see June 28). "Every exertion was now in exercise to complete the works, and to obstruct the river. The latter was near Fort Washington, and proscribed by sinking a number of large hulls, and frames called chevaux-de-frise, composed of large and long timbers framed together, with points elevated, to pierce and stop the way of vessels meeting of them. These were boxed and covered, and armed with rails, and were to be used to support and protect the river, which are wanted, and with which they sunk. A line of these, and hulls, was formed across the river; some of them sunk very well; others, rather irregular; and some of the hulls, which were strapped together with large timbers, separated in going down. A passage was left open for vessels to pass through; and the British, as it was proved afterwards, found the means of knowing where it was, and of passing through it." —Memorials of Maj.-Gen. Heath (1798), 47-48.

The provincial congress issues the following warrant for the confinement of Mayor Mathews: "To the Governor appointed by the Colony of New-York, to keep their Prisoners in the Goal of the City and County of New York. "City of New-York: ss. Whereas David Mathews, of the City of New-York; Esq; stands charged before us, with being concerned in dangerous and malicious connexion with enemies against the Rights and Liberties of America; We do therefore in Pursuance of a certain Resolve of the Congress of this Colony, order you to take and keep the said David Mathews in your Custody, till you shall receive further Order concerning him, from us or the Congress. Signed under our hand, this 27th June, 1776.

"(signed) Philip Livingston, John Jay, Governor Morris." The above is a true Copy of the Militimus I received with the prisoner David Mathews, Esq; the 25th June, 1776. Witness my Hand —Daniel Goldsmith." —N. Y. Merc., Dec. 9, 1776. See Dec. 22.

Ensign Caleb Clark reports in his diary: "The Mayor this Day is carried from his arrest and confined in Prison, with several other Gentlemen, who are concerned in the Plot with him." (see June 21.) —Hist. Mag., 3d ser., III: 156.

Thomas Hick, Esq. (see June 12) is tried by a general court-martial, and sentenced to death. On the 28th (p. 69), he was executed.—Clapp's Diary, in Hist. Mag., 3d ser., III: 176.

"The militia were called in, to reinforce the army at New York." —Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath (1798), 48.

There is executed, "in a field between the Colonels McDougall and Huntington's camp, near the Bowery-lane (in the presence of near twenty thousand spectators) a soldier belonging to his Excel- lency General Washington's guards, for mutiny and conspiracy; being one of those, who formed, and was soon to have put in execu- tion, that horrid plot of assassinating the Staff officers, blowing up the magazines, and securing the passage of the town on the arrival of the hungry ministerial myrmidons." —Penn. Econ. Post, July 25.

The British engineer, Robertson, writes that the fleet, coming from Halifax, "at 6 in the morning discovered land the heights called the Neversinks close by sandy hook the Entrances into N. York Bay, & all the Fleet got safe to an Anchor at 3 o'clock behind the Hook." —Robertson's Private Jour. (MS.), 1775. Washington writes to the president of congress: "For two or three days past, three or four ships have been dropping in; and I just now receive an express from an officer appointed to keep a look-out on Staten Island, that forty-five arrived at the Hook to-day; some say more; and I suppose the whole fleet will be in, within a day or two." —Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 1951; Johnston, op. cit., 94-95; N. Y. Packet, July 4, 1776. "The transports were coming in, during the whole day. At evening, nearly 100 sail had arrived, Col. Duker's regiment was ordered over to Paula Hook. The General Officers were in Council." —Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath, 48. A newspaper account reads: "Last Saturday arrived at the Hook (like the waves of the bottom of the sea) ait a bottom full of timbers, to be 150 sail of ships and vessels from Halifax, having on board General Howe, &c. sent out by the Tyrants of Great-Britain, after destroying the English constitution there, on the pious design of enslaving the British Colonies and plundering their property at pleasure; murder, arson, and robbery, to content the plunder and taking possession of all, as Ahab did of Naboth's vineyard." —N. E. Chron. (Cambridge), July 11, 1776. In a letter to Gen. Clinton, Washington states: "Would you have me make all possible preparation in case the enemy should have in view to push some of their Frigates up the North River, to give them a proper reception." —Letters of Geo. Washington to Geo. and Jaz. Clinton, 19.

Capt. Francis Hutcheson, assistant secretary to Sir William Howe, wrote on July 10 to a friend in England regarding their arrival at Staten Island: "We found Governor Tryon at the Hook on board the Duchess of Gordon; he has with him Mr. Barrow, Mr. Kemp, Oliver Delaney, Mr. Apthorp & Maj. Beyard. The three last Gentlemen made their escape in a Canoe from Apthorp's house to the Asia lying below the Narrows, about ten nights ago." He explained likewise where various other prominent New York Tories were at this time.—Johnston, Battle of Harlem Heights, 217. July 10.

The quartermaster-general is ordered "to procure all the Row Boats and light Petty augres in and near this City, and . . . to station them, with all other boats belonging to the army, & not in use, in the dock between the Exchange Slip & Albany Party." —Glover Corresp. (MS.), 148.

The provincial congress, having received intimations that "divers disaffected and dangerous persons in this Colony" have "lovely left their usual places of residence and secreted themselves in woods and swamps, and other places, in all probability with a design to join the enemy, when an opportunity shall offer, which, if not prevented, will greatly endanger the peace, quiet and safety of the inhabitants," passes a resolution recommending the committees of the several towns and cities, masons, precincts and districts in the colony, to apprehend and imprison such persons. The Congress empowers these committees to order the officers of militia in their respective districts to execute this resolution.—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 512.

The congress also passes the following resolution: "Whereas they have reason to apprehend that an attack will soon be made upon this city: And whereas during the tumult and confusion incident upon such an attack, it may be difficult to assemble a sufficient number of members to form a Congress: And whereas the minutes and the other necessary publick papers and records of this Colony, ought to be removed from this city: And Whereas the present or future Congress of this Colony, as well by reason of the removal of the papers aforesaid as for other causes and considerations, will be unable to deliberate and determine in this city on the several important matters submitted to their considerations:

"Resolved, therefore, That the Treasurer and Secretaries of this Congress be, and they hereby are, directed forthwith to repair with all and singular the publick papers and money now in their custody or possession, unto the White Plains, in the county of Westchester, and that this Congress be, and it hereby is adjourned unto the Court House in the White Plains aforesaid; there to meet on Tuesday, the second day of July next, and proceed upon business; and that the next Congress of this Colony do meet at the same place on Monday, the fifth day of July aforesaid, unless otherwise ordered by this Congress."—Ibid.

Capt. Stephen Brown is directed "to go immediately to Newark & apply for assistance in procuring and fixing boats near the Ferries for facilitating the passage of troops from the Jerseys to New York."—Glover Corresp. (Ms.), 150.

Following the records for June, in the printed Calendar, is a "List of the freemen of the City of New York under the Command of Jacobus Stouwrengh Enggemen, 1776." This list shows that more than half the freemen were in military service or out of town.—Col. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 315-16.

The "resolution respecting independency" (see June 10) is taken into consideration at the session of the continental congress.—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), VI: 504. No record of the discussion appears in the Journal. From letters of contemporaries written long afterward, it appears that John Adams took the leading part for the resolution, and John Dickinson against it. Many other members must have joined in the discussion, for the debate seems to have been prolonged.—Channing, Hist. of U. S., III: 201. "After some time...the extremest of the extremists...the resolution thereof was postponed, at the request of a colony, till tomorrow" (p. 201)—Jour. Cont. Cong., VI: 505-5.

The events of this day in the congress, and those leading up to it, are presented by Bancroft, from whose Hist. of the U. S. (author's last revision, 1856, chap. 25) the following extracts have been taken:

"On the morning of the first of July, the day set apart [see June 10] for considering the resolution of independency, John Adams, confident as if the vote had been taken, invoked the blessing of heaven to make the new-born republican more glorious than any which had gone before..."

"At the appointed hour, the members, probably on that day fifty in number, appeared in their places; among them, the delegates lately chosen in New Jersey. The great occasion had brought forth superior statesmen—men who joined moderation to energy..." Every colony was found to be represented, and the delegates of all but one [New York] had received full power of action. Comprehensive instructions, reaching the question of independency without explicitly using the word, had been given by Massachusetts Congress in January, by Georgia on the fifth of February, by South Carolina on the third of March, North Carolina, in the words of Cor- nellus Harnett, on the twelfth of April, led the way in expressly directing their representatives in congress to concur in a declaration of independency. On the first of May, Massachusetts expounded the regal style from all public proceedings, and substituted the name of the independent people; Rhode Island more explicitly renounced allegiance, and made it delegates the representatives of an independent republic; Virginia on the fifteenth, the very day on which John Adams in congress carried his measure for instituting governments by the sole authority of the people, ordered her delegates at Philadelphia to propose independency, and by a circular letter communicated her resolve to all her sister colonies. The movement of Virginia was seconded almost in her words by Connecticut on the fourteenth of June, New Hamp- shire on the fifteenth, New Jersey on the twenty-first, the conference of committees of Pennsylvania on the twenty-fourth, Maryland on the twenty-eighth. Delaware on the twenty-second of March had still hoped for conciliation; but on the fifteenth of June she instigated her delegates to concur in forming further compacts between the united colonies, concluding treaties with foreign powers, and adopting such other measures as should be deemed necessary for promoting the liberty, safety, and interests of America. The vote of the eleventh of June showed the purpose of New York; but, under the accumulation of dangers, her statesmen waited a few days longer, that her voice for independency might have the direct authority of her people.

"The business of the day began with reading letters, among others one from Washington, who returned the whole number of men present and fit for duty, including the regiment of artillery, at seven thousand seven hundred and fifty-four. . . . With this force the general was to defend extensive lines against an army, near at hand, of thirty thousand veterans..."

"A more cheering letter, which Chase had forwarded by express from Annapolis, brought the first news of the unanimity of the Maryland convention, whose vote for independency was produced and read.

"The order of the day came next, and congress resolved itself 'into a committee of the whole to take into consideration the resolution respecting independency.' . . . In the absence of the mover of the resolution [Richard Henry Lee—see June 7], the eyes of every one turned toward its seconder, John Adams... Of his sudden, impetuous, unpremeditated speech, no minutes ever existed, and no report was made. It is only remembered that he set forth the justice and the necessity, the sensibilities and the advantages of a separation from Great Britain; he dwelt on the neglect and insult with which their petitions had been treated by the king; and on the vindictive spirit manifested in the employment of German troops whose arrival was hourly expected. He concluded by urging the present time as the most suitable for solving on independency, inasmuch as it had become the first wish and the last instruction of the communities they represented. Dickenson of Pennsylvania rose, not so much to reply as to justify himself before congress. . . . These were his words: . . . The declaration will not strengthen us by one man or by the first step; the British may expect our soldiers to yield, to inflict cruelties and outrages. Without some preludial trials of strength, we ought not to commit our country upon an alternative, where to recede would be infamy and to persist might be destruction. . . .

"It is singularly disrespectful to France to make the declaration before her sense is known, as we have sent an agent expressly to inquire whether such a declaration would be acceptable to her, and we have reason to believe he is now arrived at the court of Versailles..."

"The formation of our governments and an agreement upon the terms of our confederation [see June 11] ought to precede the asumption of our station among sovereigns. A sovereignty composed of several distinct bodies of men, not subject to established constitutions and not combined together by confirmed articles of union, is such a sovereignty as has never appeared... . . .

"The confederation ought to be settled before the declaration of independency... The boundaries of the colonies ought to be fixed before the declaration, and their respective rights mutually guaranteed... When things shall be thus deliberately rendered firm by home and favorable abroad, then in America, bearing up her glory and the destiny of her children, advance with majestic steps and assume her station among the sovereigns of the world..."

"Wilson of Pennsylvania could no longer agree with his colleagues. He had at an early period of independency, the probable though not the intended result of the contest; he had..."
unfortunately declared in his place that he never would vote for it contrary to his instructions, . . . But, now that their authority was communicated by the conference of committees, he stood on vote, and gained the ground.

"Before the end of the debate rose Witherspoon of New Jersey. In a short speech he remarked . . . that, in his judgment, the country was not only ripe for independence, but was in danger of becoming rotten for want of it, if its declaration were longer delayed. . . . Before the vote was taken, the delegates from New York read to the committee a letter which they had received from the provincial congress, explaining why their formal concurrence must, for a few days longer, be withheld. The resolution for independence was the sustained by nine colonies, two thirds of the whole number; the vote of South Carolina, unusually it would seem, was in the negative; so was that of Pennsylvania, by the vote of Dickinson, Morris, Humphreys, and Willing, against Franklin, Morton, and Wilson; owing to the absence of Rodney, Delaware was divided, each member voting under the new instruction according to his former known opinion, Maclean for independence and Read against it.

"The committee rose, and Harrison reported the resolution; but, at the request of Edward Rutledge, on behalf of South Carolina, the determination upon it was put off till the next day. [See July 2.]" The letter from Washington, of the twenty-ninth of June [p.10], was read from which it appeared forty-five ships or more, laden with troops, had arrived at Sandy Hook, and that the whole fleet was expected in a day or two. . . . No one knew better than the commander-in-chief the exceedingly discouraging aspect of military affairs; but his serene and unaltering courage in this hour was a support to congress. His letter was referred to the board of war which they had recently established, and of which John Adams was the president."

"The number of transports now at Sandy-Hook, we hear amounts to 115 sail, and we have not the least reason to doubt, that General Howe is in this fleet. From the Number of Troops now here, and those on their Way, from different Parts of the Country, it is computed our Army will soon amount to 20,000 Men.

-N. Y. Merc., July 1, 1776. See, further, July 8.

"The British fleet leaves Sandy Hook (see June 29, for the Narrows), and three hours later anchors about two miles off Gravesend. There was orders for the troops to be ready to embark at 4 next morn—but after a long Consult[en] of Genl O'Keefe it was agreed not to be proper consider[ed] the country we had to march thro' & the Difficulty of keeping up our Communicat[io]n with the Ship, &c. &c. &c. &c.

—Robertson's Jour. (Md.). See July 2.

About this date, Capt. Alexander Atlee, of the Mercury, and Magown were employed on the construction of Fort Washington.

The continental congress at Philadelphia resolves: "That these United Colonies are, and of right, ought to be, Free and Independent States; that the United Colonies are, and of right, ought to be, Free and Independent States; and that all political connection between them, and the state of Great Britain, is, and ought to be, totally dissolved."—Jour. Cent. Cong., 1774—8 (ed. of 1852), i: 592. Cf. Virginia resolution of May 15, see also June 7. The delegates of 12 of the colonies voted for the resolution, those from New York being excused from voting on account of their instructions (see June 11).

Bancroft describes the transactions of July 2 as follows:

"On the second day of July there were present in congress probably forty-nine members. Rodney had arrived from Delaware, and, joining Maclean, secured 10th. colony. Dickinson and Morris stayed away, which enabled Franklin, Wilson, and Morton of Pennsylvania, to outvote Withington and Humphreys. The South Carolina members, still uncertain if Charleston had not fallen, for the sake of humanity, came round; so, though New York was still unable to yield, twelve colonies, with no dissenting one, resolved: 'That these united colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states; . . .'."

". . . "The greatest question," he [John Adams] wrote [on July 3 to his wife], "was decided which ever was debated in America, and a greater, perhaps, never was nor will be decided among men. Who敢 to hand over, and run all series of political events, the chain of causes and effects, I am surprised at the suddenness as well as greatness of this revolution. Britain has been filled with folly, and America with wisdom. It is the will of heaven that the two countries should be severed forever; it may be the will of heaven that America shall suffer calamities still more wasting and distresses yet more dreadful. If this is to be the case, the furnace of affliction produces refinement in states as well as individuals; but I submit all my hopes and fears to an over-ruling Providence . . . ."

". . . The hopes of reconciliation which were fondly entertained by multitudes of the honest and well-meaning, though weak and mistaken, have been gradually and at last totally extinguished. It has been given for the whole people maturely to consider the great question of independence, so that in every colony of the thirteen they have now adopted it as their own act.

"But the day is passed. The second of July 1776 will be the most memorable epocha in the history of America; to be celebrated by succeeding generations as the great anniversary festival, commemorated as the day of deliverance, by solemn acts of devotion to God Almighty, from one end of the continent to the other, from this time forward forevermore.

"You will think me transported with enthusiasm, but I am not. I am well aware of the toil and blood and treasure that it will cost us to maintain this declaration, and support and defend these states; yet, through all the gloom, I can see the rays of light and glory; that the end is worth all the means; that posterity will triumph in that day's transaction, even though we should rue it, which I trust in God we shall not." [See Familiar Letters of John Adams and his Wife, i: 191-94.]

"The resolution of congress changed the old thirteen British colonies into free and independent states. It remanded to set forth the reason for this act, and the principles which the new people would own as their guides. Of the committee appointed for that duty, Thomas Jefferson of Virginia had received the largest number of votes, and was in that manner singled out to draft the confession of faith of the rising empire. He owed his distinction to respect for the colony which he represented, to the consummate ability of the state papers which he had already written, and to that general favor which follows merit, popularity, and a sweet disposition; but the quality which specially fitted him for the task was the sym pathetic character of his nature, by which he was able with instinctive perception to read the soul of the nation, and, having collected its best thoughts and noblest feelings, to give them out in clear and bold words, mingled with so little of himself that his country, as it went along with him, found nothing but what it recognized as its own. . . ."

"From the fulness of his own mind, without consulting one single book, yet harrying in memory the example of the Swiss and the manifesto of the United Provinces of the Netherlands, Jefferson drafted the declaration, in which, after citing the principles of government, he presented the complaints of the United States against England in the three classes of the iniquitous use of the royal prerogative, the usurpation of legislative power over America by the king in parliament, and the measures for enforcing the acts of the British parliament. He submitted this to the sober and Franklin and to John Adams, accepted from each of them one or two verbal, unimportant corrections, and on the twenty-eighth of June reported it to congress, which, on the second of July, immediately after adopting the resolution of independence, entered upon its consideration. During the remainder of that day, and the next two, the language, the statements, and the principles of the paper were closely scanned."—Bancroft, Hist. of the U. S. (1886), 441-46. A draft of the declaration in Jefferson's handwriting is in the Emmett Coll. (No. 1524). See July 4.

The following address is issued from the military headquarters at New York: "The time is now near at hand which must probably determine whether Americans are to be slaves or freemen. Whether they can have any property they can call their own, whether their houses and farms are to be pillaged and destroyed, & they consigned to a state of wretchedness, from which no human efforts will probably deliver them. The fate of two nations, depending, (under God) on the courage & conduct of this army. Our cruel & unrelenting Enemy leaves us no choice but a brave resistance or the most abject submission. This is all we can expect. We have therefore resolved to conquer or die. Our own & our Country's honor all call upon us for a vigorous and manly exertion; and if we now shamefully fail, we shall become infamous in the whole world. Let us therefore rely upon the goodness of the cause and the aid of the Supreme Being (in whose hands victory is) to encourage and animate us to great and noble actions.

4 The congress at Philadelphia “resolved itself into the committee of the whole to take into their farther consideration” independency, the preliminary resolution concerning which was voted two days earlier (p.v.). The Declaration of Independence is read and “agreed to.” The full text is represented in the rough Journal of Congress by a copy of the original broadside, printed by John Dunlap (doubtless on July 5) in accordance with an order of congress of July 4, and which was probably wafted on to the page the day it was printed.—See reproduction in Hazleton’s Dec. of Ind., opp. p. 170. There is a copy of the Dunlap broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Lib., and only a few leaves of this collection. For reproduction from a photograph, made in 1895, of the original parchment document, which is preserved in the Library of Congress, Washington, but no longer exhibited, see Avery’s Hist. of the U. S., IV, p. 398.

“American independency was not an act of sudden passion, nor the work of one man or one assembly. It had been discussed in every part of the country by farmers and merchants, by mechanics and planters, by the fishermen and the backwoodsmen; in town-meetings and from the pulpit; at social gatherings and around camp fires in newspapers and in pamphlets; in county conventions and conferences of committees; in colonial congresses and assemblies. The decision was put off only to ascertain the voice of the people.”—Bancroft, Hist. of U. S., IV: 426.

Concerning the drafting of the declaration Jefferson writing to Madison, in 1823, said that the committee for that purpose consisted of Sherman, Livingston, Franklin, John Adams, and himself. The others “pressed on myself alone to undertake the draught. I consented; I drew it; but before I reported it to the committee, I communicated it separately to Dr Franklin and mr Adams requesting their corrections; because they were the two members of whose judgments and amendments I wished most to have the benefit before presenting it to the Committee; their alterations were two or three only, and merely verbal. I then wrote a fair copy, reported it to the Committee, and from them, unaltered to Congress.”—Hazleton, op. cit., 144, citing the MS. in Lib. of Congress. Jefferson wrote this letter because of some statements concerning the drafting that had been made by John Adams and Timothy Pickering. He says that their observations—“that it contained no new ideas, that it is a common place compilation, it’s sentiments hackneyed in Congress for two years before, and it’s essence contained in Otis’s pamphlet,” may all be true; of that I am not the judge. Richd H. Lee charged it as copied from Locke’s treatise on government. Otis’s pamphlet I never saw, and whether I had gathered my ideas from reading or reflection I do not know. I know only that I turned to neither book or pamphlet while writing it.”—Ibid. For the controversy in regard to the signing of the declaration on July 4 by the members of congress, see Hazelton, op. cit., chap. IX; “The authentication of the Declaration of Independence, July 4, 1776,” in Mass. Hist. Soc. Proceedings (Nov, 1884), 273-98.

There is reproduced in Pl. 46, Vol. IV, the only known impres- sion of a broadside of the declaration printed in New York, “by John Holt in Water-Street” (see Hazelton, op. cit., 491).

Elbridge Gerry wrote to James Warren, on July 5, expressing his satisfaction that the declaration had been issued, although unanimity had not been reached because the New York delegates
The president of Congress, John Hancock, sends the declaration (the broadside printed by Duval—see Hazleton, op. cit., 170–71, 476) to the New York convention, with a letter in which he says: "The Congress, for some time past, have had their attention occupied by one of the most interesting and important subjects that could possibly come before them, or any other assembly of men. Although it is not possible to foresee the consequences of human actions, yet it is nevertheless a duty we owe ourselves and posterity in all our public councils, to decide in the best manner we are able, and to leave to posterity the present—the past—the future, and all things, to bring about his own determinations. Impressed with this sentiment, and at the same time fully convinced, that our affairs may take a more favorable turn, the Congress have judged it necessary to dissolve the connection between Great Britain and the American Colonies, and to declare them free and independent states as you will perceive by the enclosed Declaration, Which I am directed to transmit to you, and to request you will have it proclaimed at the head of the army, in the way you shall think most proper. "The important consequences to the American States from this Declaration of Independence, considered as the ground and foundation of a future Government, will naturally suggest the propriety of proclaiming it in such a manner that the people may be universally informed of it."—5 Am. Arch., I: 33. The original MS. of this letter, formerly in the department of state, is now in the Library of Congress.—Hazleton, op. cit., 177, 612.

Observe the Rebels have fortified Governors Island very strongly, as well as Red Hook and the Heights to Brookline Ferry. Paulus Hook likewise detestable, with an Encampment of about 900 Men on it. Are told they have 5,000 encamped on King's Bridge under the Command of Mifflin, and 3,000 at Col. Morris's [see June 13, 1776], tho' the leaders are very suspicious of the Majority of their army and do not rely on any but the New England Forces, about 7,000 Men."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections and Papers, 1883.

Mag., 3d ser., III: 137.

Washington writes from New York to Gov. Trumbull: "The situation of our Affairs calls aloud for the most Vigorous Exertions and nothing else will be sufficient to avert the Impending blow . . . Genl Howe has already about ten thousand Men at Staten Island. . . ."—Remarks of George Washington (Corp. ed.), IV: 316; see also 198, 215, 210, 244.

"The Fleet, from Halifax, we informed our Readers in our last [see July 4] was arrived at Sandy-Hook, to the Amount of 113 Sails; 'Tis difficult, from this Situation to ascertain their Number, but we suppose it does not exceed 130 Sails." Here follows a report of each day's movements of ships for the past week, at the Narrows and about Staten Island, stating, in part, that "by Thursday [July 4] Noon the whole Fleet was at Anchor in a Line from Kill Vaz to the East Side Bridge. . . ."—Third Corps of Washington (Corp. ed.), IV: 316.

1776 were not "empowered to give either an affirmative or negative voice."—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), V: 516 (footnote). New York's sanction to the declaration was given by the provincial congress on July 9 (q.v.), and on the same evening the declaration was adopted by the legislative council, in order, to the army drawn up for the purpose on the Common in New York City.

The declaration was first printed in a newspaper in the Penn. Ev. Post (Phila.), July 6, 1776. Its first publication in a New York newspaper was on July 11 (q.v.). It was officially "published" in the New York Post, July 18, 1776.

At the opening of parliament, on Oct. 31, the declaration moved the king to say: "... so daring and desperate is the Spirit of those Leaders, whose object has always been Dominion and Power, that they have now openly renounced all Allegiance to the Crown, and all Political Connection with this Country: They have . . . presumed to set up their rebellious Confederacies for Independent States. If their Treason be suffered to take Root, much Mischief must grow from it, to the Safety of my loyal Colonies, to the Commerce of my Kingdoms, and indeed to the present System of all Europe. One great Advantage, however, will be derived from the Object of the Rebels being openly avowed, and clearly understood; We shall have Unanimity at Home, founded in the general Conviction of the Justice and Necessity of our Measures."—Daily Advertiser (London), Nov. 1, 1776.

Before the end of the year the declaration prompted the publication of several anonymous pamphlets by way of reply. One was entitled Strictures upon the Declaration of the Congress at Philadelphia; in a Letter to a Noble Lord, &c. (London, 1776). It has been proven that Thomas Hutchinson, former governor of Massachusetts, was the author. The position is taken that "there were men in each of the principal Colonies, who had Independence in view, before any of those Taxes were laid, or proposed, which have since been the ostensible cause of resisting the execution of Acts of Parliament . . . Their design of Independence began soon after the reduction of Canada" (1776). The several paragraphs of the pamphlet are stated, but are all warmly refuted.

The second pamphlet is entitled An Answer to the Declaration of the American Congress (1776). One John Lind was hired by the British government to compose this rejoinder; it attracted much attention, and went into several editions. In the introduction it is stated that "The Declaration of the American Congress is an insult offered to every one who bears the name of Brito. For in considering the present contest between Great Britain and America, it is a truth which deserves our particular attention, and which therefore cannot be too often repeated, nor too strongly inculcated, that the dispute is not, nor never has it been between his Majesty and any one part of his dominions. The dispute is clearly between one part of his subjects and another. The blow given by the Congress appears indeed to be levell'd at his Majesty; but the wound was intended for us."

Robertson records: "Last night the Rebels brought two pieces of cannon one 6 & one 5 Pd and Early in the morning fired on the George Sloop & killed & wounded 5 men — but the sloop drove them off w/ the loss of one man & some wounded. The Govl would not allow the Grasshoppers to be fired—This day we brought up 2—12 Pd & 2 Royal Howitzers near Decker's Ferry—The Rebels fired from a field piece at our Transports coming up the Narrows—the Asia retarde'd the fire & drove them off— all the troops landed—This Night a Sloop came in from Shrewsbury in the Jerseys w/ 66 men in Arms to join the Army— under Maj Morris formerly an Offr in the 47th Regt landed the extremely good tools w/ the Company—The Emerald Anna offered to provide Provisions from the Loyalists at New York—Serl People came in, in Boats from Long Island & the town—most horribly persecuted by the Rebels."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). Kemble states that the men came in from Shrewsbury on July 6 (q.v.) See also Clap's Diary, in Hist. Mag., 3d ser., III: 137.

July 9

The new provincial congress of New York, meeting at White Plains, gives us occasion to the Declaration of Independence in the latter resolution, the delegates having been elected with authority to form a government for the "State of New York:"

"In Convention of the Representatives of the State of New York, White Plains, July 9th, 1776.

Resolved unanimously, That the reasons assigned by the Continental Congress for declaring the United Colonies free and independent States, are cogent and conclusive; and that while we lament the cruel necessity which has rendered that measure unavoidable, we approve the same, and will, at the risk of our lives and fortunes, join with the other Colonies in supporting it."

"Resolved, That a copy of the said Declaration and the foregoing resolution be sent to the chairman of the committee of the connty of Westchester, with orders to publish the same, with beat of drum, at this place on Thursday next; and to give directions that it be published with all convenient speed In the several districts within said county; and that copies thereof be transmitted to the other county Committees within the State of New-York, with orders to cause the same to be published in the several districts of their respective counties . . ."

"Resolved, That the Delegates of this State in Continental Congress be and they hereby authorized to concert and adopt all such measures as they may deem conducive to the happiness and welfare of the United States of America."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I, 518. The resolution was written by John Jay.—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, I, 72 (footnote). The constitution of the State was adopted April 7th, 1777 (p. 9)."

The following announcement is issued by Washington from "Head Quarters:" "The Honorable Continental Congress, impelled by the dictates of duty, policy & necessity, have been pleased to dissolve a connection which subsisted between this Country & Great Britain, & to declare the United Colonies of North America free & independent States.

"The several Brigades are to be drawn up this evening on their respective parades at 6 o'clock, when the Declaration of Congress, shewing the grounds & reasons of this measure is to be read with an audible voice. The General hopes this important point will serve as a fresh incentive to every Officer & Soldier to act with fidelity & courage, as knowing that now the peace & safety of this Country depends (under God) solely upon the success of our arms; and that he is now in the service of a State possessed of sufficient power to reward his merit, and advance him to the highest honor of a free Country."—Glenor Correse. (MS.), 1776.

This order is also found in the "Varick Transcripts" of Washington's general orders, I, 508, in Lib. of Congress, which volume is at "The Varick Transcripts" were made by Richard Varick, by order of Gen. Washington, in 1781–3. The work was begun in 1781, and finished in 1783. The general orders were copied in the spring or summer of 1781. The exact date of this particular transcript is not easily ascertainable; but it was before the army left New York on its march south to Virginia, in June, 1781. Col. Scammell's attestation is in the end of the volume, which covers the dates July 3, 1775, to Sept. 30, 1776, and was made prior to July 1, 1781. He was killed at Yorktown. The original orderly-book, from which this Varick transcript was made, is in the possession of the Congress." See also Hazleton, Declaration of Independence (1906), 242.

The order is also found in the orderly-book of Capt. Lunt's company, kept by Nathaniel Mitchell, of Newburyport, Mass., owned by the late Joseph T. Brown, Sr., of New Rochelle, N. Y. To this order another was added, in this orderly-book, which, when the book was owned by Mr. Brown, was copied as follows by Mr. Victor H. Palatts, to show the manner in which the declaration was distributed to the American army in New York: "The Brigade Majors are to receive at the Adjutant Gen's office Several of the Declaration to be delivered to the Brigadiers and Capt. of Reg't the Brigade Majors are Excused from further attendance at Head Quarters Except to Receive Orders of the Day that their time and attention May be withdrawn as little as Possible from the duties of their respective Brigades."

Wm. Smith (now at Haverstraw) records in his diary: "My Brother John brought me this Day the printed Renunciation of the British Gov't in Future. He says . . . That the New York Delegates did not decline any express opinion upon this great Point for Want of Instructions—That Virginia Pennsylvannia Massachusets & Connecticut hesitated at first for a previous Settlement respecting their Limits—a Circumstance that ought to have alarmed N Y and in which they should have joined to restrain the Avirdity & Claims of the New England Colonies." Smith then ventures a prophecy which corresponds so closely to actual occurrences as to seem almost uncanny: "I think it now most probable that the Terms expected by Lord Howe, and which I suppose will be similar to those suggested by Lord Drummond, will be unfavourably received—that France will tamper with the Colonies tho' she will not declare for them till Great Britain is exhausted & that those Domestic Quarrels may inkindle an European War—That this Province will become the main Theatre of the civil commotions of America in consequence of the access by Hudson's River & the Lakes—That opposition at Home will be compelled to fly or attempt to raise the collective Body of the Nation Defend the Province & that it is Reason to fear when Great Britain & France have worry each other, that a Peace may be patched up by a Partition of the Provinces."

"It strikes my attention with some Amazement that the Declaration of the 4th Ins contains no Vindication from the Charge of having formed the Plan of Independence contained in the King's last Speech to Parliament on the 23d Oct, which Opposition must take unduly considering their open support of the American Cause."

"If the Fears Sufferings & Losses of the Nation create Troubles at Home and a Change of Men and Measures the two Countries may still be reconciled, with great Advantages to America & this perhaps is the best Event the Empire can wish for—I dread France—She will be guided only by Motives of Interest—No Promises will bind her—She will perceive it more advantageous to her Ambition to ferment our animosities, than hastily to plunge into a War—She will deceive both Parties that her Ends may be stchieved at our Expense."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

The Declaration of Independence is read "at the Head of each Brigade after which a part of the 80 Psalm was sung, and then Mr. Leonard made Prayers, after that the whole Brigade gave three Cheers."

—From "Diary of Ensign Caleb Clap," in Hist. Mag., 3d ser., III: 137–38; N. Y. Packet, June 11, 1776; Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath (1798), 400. The N. Y. Mercury, July 15, 1776, is in error in giving Wed., July 10, as the date of this event. See also Gen. Webb's Correspondence, etc., I, 153; Benson J. Lossing states

"The brigades were formed in hollow squares on their respective parades. The venerable Zachariah Greene (commonly known as 'Parson Greene,' the father-in-law of Mr. Thompson, historian of Long Island), yet (1852) living at Hesmead, at the age of ninety-three years, informed me that he belonged to the brigade, then encamped on the 'Common,' where the City Hall now stands. The hollow square was formed at about the spot where the Park Fountain now is. He says Washington was within the square, on horseback, and that the Declaration was read in a clear voice by one of his aides. When it was concluded, three hearty cheers were given."

—Pictorial Field-Book of the Revolution (1852), II: 801.

Washington, writing to John Hancock, the president of congress, on July 10, acknowledging the receipt of the president's letter of July 6 (p. 9) (which contained a copy of the declaration and the request that it be proclaimed at the head of the army), says . . . Agreeably to the request of Congress, I caused the Declaration to be proclaimed before all the army under my immediate command; and have the pleasure to inform them, that the measure seemed to have their most hearty assent; the expressions and behavior, both of officers and men, testifying their warmest approbation of it. . . ."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford Ed.), IV: 225.

A about this time was published the well-known and very interesting xylographic leaf found by Mr. Henry Stevens in 1920, and now belonging to the New York Public Library, Spencer Collection. This leaf, which measures 3½ x 8½ inches, represents “the people and island which have been discovered by the Christian King of Portugal or by his subjects” (Brazil, visited by Vespucci in 1501). It has a German inscription taken for the most part from the first German edition of the Mundus Novus of Vespuccius, which suggests the possibility that it was drawn by Vespucci on his voyage in 1500-1. This very important block-leaf is in all probability the earliest view of America and the American Indians. Only one other copy is known—that owned by the Königliche Hof- und Staats-bibliothek at Munich.

The print is fully described, and its origin and significance discussed, in a monograph by Mr. Eames, published in a folio edition of seven copies in 1920.

The John Carter Brown Library contains a unique map of the world showing the New World discoveries as well as the name America. This map, which was brought to light by Mr. Henry N. Stevens, shortly after 1900, is described in his Ptolemy’s Geography, p. 15, as “evidently an earlier impression of the one found in the 1517 Strasbourg Ptolemy,” and was, Mr. Stevens thinks, “prepared by Waldseemüller at St. Dié prior to 1507 for the then projected edition of Ptolemy, but not used.”

1508

In this year appeared the first issue of Ptolemy to contain American maps, and a separate chapter on the American discoveries. The well-known Rüsch map of the world is supposed to have been prepared for this atlas, although it is occasionally found bound up with the 1507 edition.

1513

In this year was published the first Strasbourg edition of Ptolemy, with the “Admiral’s Map.”—See 1507, Addenda.

In this year, Dri Commentarii Del V’aggio in Persia ... Et Dello Scopriamento dell’Isole Frislanda, Eslanda, Engeslanda & Icaria was published in Venice. It contained the first printed narrative of the voyages of Nicolò and Antonio Zeno to the west, and a map, said to have been reproduced from a contemporary chart left by them, of their discoveries in the last decade of the fourteenth century—Church Catalogue, No. 110. For an account of the Zeno travels and a discussion regarding the authenticity of this work, see 1392.

The map referred to in Vol. II, p. 19, footnote 44, as reproduced in Remarkable Maps, Part I, No. 13, and given in outline on C. Pl. 17, Vol. III, is, I believe, one of the six (!) folio sheets of a fine, large map of the world which I saw last summer (1921) in the possession of Mr. Chadenit, the Paris book-seller. This map, of which no other copy is known, is dated (?) 1560. Mr. Chadenit assigns it to Gastaldi, and considers it to constitute the first modern world atlas, anadating that of Ortelius by a decade.—See II: 14. This map differs materially from Gastaldi’s well-known maps of 1546 (C. Pl. 17 and Remarkable Maps, Part IV) and 1546 (C. Pl. 14 and Ramusio, Vol. III), the latter of which is evidently taken from the same original as the map of Tierra Nueva in the 1548 Ptolemy. It seems, therefore, likely that it is based on data obtained or adopted by Gastaldi after the publication of his earlier maps. It is clearly more suggestive of the Verrazzano than of the Ribero type.

On this day, Drake held a service for the Indians at Albion, the present San Francisco Bay, perhaps the first Protestant service held on U. S. soil. This bay is shown, although not named, on the “Silver Map,” issued probably in 1581, to commemorate Drake’s circumnavigation of the globe.—The World encompassed by Sir Francis Drake, etc. (London, 1628), reprinted by Holkham Soc., 1854; Miller Christy, The Silver Map of the World (1900).

“The student of American colonial history of the seventeenth century is likely to be frequently perplexed by a confusion (and sometimes by an apparent contradiction) of dates unless he understands and keeps in mind the differences between the ‘old style’ and the ‘new style’ calendars. The ordinary year represents the mean time required for the earth to pass over its orbit around the sun. This passage requires 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, 46 seconds. As only whole days can be counted in measuring the ordinary or civil year, the fractional parts of the day make a difference between the civil and the solar periods. To remedy this difference and to secure uniformity in time-reckoning, Julius Caesar decreed (B.C. 46) that the year should consist of 365 days and 6 hours, that the 6 hours should be disregarded for three successive years, and that an entire day should be added to every fourth year. This day is called the intercalary day and the year to which it is added the bissextile or leap year. Such was the origin of the Julian calendar. Dates reckoned according to the Julian calendar are called ‘old style’ abbreviated to O.S. The old style is still used in the Russian Empire. [The revolutionary government adopted the New Style in 1918.]

But the addition of the intercalary day made the average Julian year a little more than eleven minutes longer than the solar year and, by 1582, the cumulative error of the calendar was about ten days. In the year 325, the council of Nice, the first of the ecumenical councils of the Christian church, had determined when Easter should be observed. In 1582, all fixed ecclesiastical observances were falling ten days behind their proper seasons. To correct this error and to remove the consequent confusion, Pope Gregory XIII decreed that the fifth day of October, 1582, should be called the fifteenth. This suppression of ten days restored the vernal equinox to the twenty-first of March, the date on which it occurred at the time of the council of Nice, and thus brought into their proper seasons the fixed festivals of the church. To guard against future errors, it was decreed that years ending with two ciphers should not be leap years except when the number is an exact multiple of 400. Such was the origin of the Gregorian calendar, the error of which is only one day in about five thousand years. Dates reckoned according to the Gregorian calendar are called ‘new style’, abbreviated to N.S. From 1582 to 1700, the difference between the old style and the new was ten days. The year 1700 being a leap year in the Julian calendar and a common year in the Gregorian calendar, the two styles differed, in the eighteenth century, by eleven days.

Most Catholic countries adopted the Gregorian calendar soon after it was established. Great Britain, however, continued to use the Julian calendar until 1752. At that time the dates of the Julian Calendar were eleven days behind the dates of the Gregorian calendar.

Oct.

British parliament decreed that eleven days should be stricken from the calendar and that the day following the second day of September, 1582, should be called the fourteenth. Prior to this time, the official English year began on the twenty-fifth of March. Lady Day or Annunciation, so-called from the common belief that the incarnation of Christ was announced to the Virgin Mary by the angel Gabriel on that day (Luke, i, 26–38). In reckoning the months, March was called the first and February the twelfth, September, October, November, and December thus having the numerical value indicated by their names. At the time of the correction of the British calendar in 1752, the beginning of the official year was changed, from the twenty-fifth of March to the first of January to conform to the common usage of the greater part of Christendom—a change that had been partly anticipated by writing dates from the first of January to the twenty-fourth of March inclusive as follows: January 8, 1704–05, or January 8, 1704/5. As usual, English law was confirmed to English custom.—Avery, Hist. of the U. S., II: xxxi—xxxi. See also Sept. 3/14, 1752.

— The Expedition Franscisci Draihi in Indias Occidentales, published at Leyden in this year (Church Catalogue, No. 134a) contains four large folding views, one of which, St. Augustine, is the earliest known view of a North American city. The author's collection contains a copy of this rare view.

— During this and the following year, Robert Dudley cruised with three ships in the West Indies, and on his return to England, while sailing along the coast from Florida to Newfoundland, about April 15, 1595, was in 40° 10′ N. L., “160 leagues distant by the great circle from the island of Bermuda, counting 20 leagues to a degree,” as recorded in the rouiter of Abram Kendall, master of Dudley's flagship, the Great Bear, printed in the Arcana del Mare, Book II, chap. v. p. 12. This account, as well as Dudley's own journal, which is in Holland's Voyages, III, 1594, and the account of Capt. Wyatt, are all given, with explanatory notes, in The Voyage of Robert Dudley to the West Indies, 1594–1595, published by the Hakluyt Society. See also description of C. Pls. 35, 36, 37, Vol. II.

— Samuel de Champlain left Seville in January, 1599, on the “armament of the King of Spain, which was accustomed to go every year to the Indies,” and spent three years in the West Indies, Central America, and Mexico. On his return, he sailed along the east coast of Florida, and, having sighted the Bermudas, reached Seville. — In 1600 several Merchants of Holland set out 17 Armatures for to seize, plunder and make price of all Spanish ships and vessels in the West Indies or to burn and destroy any of the Spanish towns and villages in those parts, and for the better effecting their designe they received liberty of Queen Elizabeth to loan some harbour about the Island Manhattan, &c., betwixt the degree of 40 and 41 where they could find the most convenient places for their cleaning and refitting their ships, here they built a large magazine for their purpose which they fortified with four bastions and called the place Staats Isle, settled 5 factories, one there, the 2nd on the south west point of the Manhattan Isle, where since was built New Amsterdam, a 3rd on a point of land called Pauls Hook, where they drove a very considerable trade with the Native Indians for several sorts of Furs, and made bold with the Queens Grace, so far that they began a Colony there and called it New Netherlands, and in the year 1605 forced an English ship under the Command of our Capt. Smith to strike to the States Flag, which King James, the then princeable prince, so suspicious that he commissioned Sir Samuel Argal to sail thither with five men of war to destroy the said Colony, which was accordingly effected, and they engaged never to plant there again, and yet the West India Company of Holland in the year 1620 began a Colony there a second time, having made their purpose to go so strong in the English Court that they were not disturbed till the year 1646, at which time, such was the general complaint of the English Merchant, and also of the English Planters that live under their government, that although there was peace betwixt the Majesties of Great Britain and the States of the United Provinces, His Majesty commissioned Colonel Richard Nicholas and some other gentlemen to dispossession the West Indian Company of the said Colony and to incorporate it into the English Monarchy as soon as the said ships arrived the Governor and Inhabitants quietly surrendered themselves and became subjects of England under the Government of His Highness the Duke of York.—From a MS. of c. 1675 in the author's collection.

The material regarding Hudson’s voyage was in print before the author saw a copy of Naber’s book on the voyage of the “Half Moon,” issued by Nijhoff in 1621 as Vol. XIX of the Linnehotz Society publications, and entitled Henry Hudson's reis under Nederlantsche Vlag van Amsterdam naar Nieu Zembla, America en terug naar Dartmouth in England. Volgens het journaal van Robert Just uitgegeven door S. P. L’Hénon Naber. It is a satisfaction to note that Naber’s conclusions are, in general, the same as those reached by the author, and outlined in Vol. II of the Iconography, published in 1916, and developed in more detail in the present volume.

— In 1619—one year before the Pilgrim Fathers came to the land named New England by Captain John Smith—Sir Edwin Sandys, president of the Virginia Company in old England, moved the grant of ten thousand acres of land for the establishment of a university at Henrico [in Virginia]. The proposed grant which was duly made, included one thousand acres for an Indian college; the remainder was to be the foundation of a seminary of learning for the English. The very same year the bishops of England, at the suggestion of the King, raised the sum of fifteen hundred pounds for the encouragement of Indian education. Thus, by the combined authority of church and state, was anticipated by more than two centuries the endowment of such institutions as are now represented by the Hampton School and by the University of Virginia.”—Adams, The College of William and Mary, 11.

In this year, Nicolaas van Wassenberge began the publication in Amsterdam of the Historisch Verhaal, or “Historical Account of all the most Remarkable events which have happened in Europe,” etc. The first volume covered the months from Jan. to June, 1621, its preface being dated Aug. 30, 1621. Frederick Muller’s catalogue of May 18, 1626 (item 1218) describes under the date 1626–54 two manuscripts (12-pages), one on the occupation of New Netherland by the West India Co., the other on the South (Delaware) River and the capture of Fort Casimir by the Swedes; bought by Westerman & Co., New York.

Frederick Muller’s catalogue of the Van Cleef collection, sold Dec. 19, 1872 (item 1906), describes an “autograph letter signed P. Courten concerning New Netherland (1626).” This item was bought by W. E. Christen of New York. On March 4, 1629, a royal charter was granted, creating a corporation under the legal style of “The Governor and Company of Massachusetts in New England.” Six small ships were fitted out, and sailed under the command of Francis Higginson, with 300 men, 80 women, 16 children, 140 head of cattle, 40 goats, and

The Charter of Freedoms and Exemptions, granted by the 7 West India Co. to those who will plant colonies in New Netherland, bears this date. It reads, in part (translated):

"Freedoms and Exemptions for the patroons, masters or private persons who will plant any colonies in, and send cattle to New Netherland, drawn up for the benefit of the General West India Company in New Netherland and for the profit of the patroons, masters and private persons.

J. Such participants of the said Company may as may be inclined to plant any colonies in New Netherland shall be permitted to send, in the ships of this Company going thither, three or four persons to inspect the situation of the country, provided that they, with the officers and ship's company, swear to the Articles, so far as they relate to them, pay for board and passage, going and coming, six stivers a day (such as desire to mess in the cabin to pay 12 stivers) and agree to give assistance like others, in cases offensive and defensive . . .

"III. But they [patroons] are warned that the Company reserves to itself the island of the Manhattes . . .

XII. Inasmuch as it is the intention of the Company to people the island of the Manhattes first, this Island shall provisionally also be the staple port for all products and wares that are found on the North River and lands thereabouts, before they are allowed to be sent elsewhere, excepting such as are, from their nature, unnecessary there and such as cannot without great loss to their owners be brought thither; in such cases the owners thereof must give timely notice in writing of the difficulty attending the same to the Company here, or the commander and council there, that such measures may be taken as the situation of affairs shall be found to require.

XIII. All the patroons of colonies in New Netherland and colonists living on the island of the Manhattes shall be at liberty to sail and traffic along the entire coast from Florida to Terra Nufả, provided that they do first return with all such goods as they shall get in trade to the island of the Manhattes and pay five per cent duty to the Company, in order that it may be known and fixed which commerce may henceforth be sent either . . .

XV. It shall also be permitted the aforesaid patroons, all along the coast of New Netherland and places circumjacent, to trade their goods, products of that country, for all sorts of merchandise, barter, or exchange, beavers, otters, minks and all sorts of peltry, which trade alone the Company reserves to itself. But permission for even this trade is granted at places where the Company has no agent, on the condition that such traders must bring all the peltry they may be able to secure to the island of the Manhattes, if it is in any way practicable, and there deliver them to the director, to be by him sent hither with the ships and goods; . . .

XXVI. Whosoever shall settle any colonies out of the limits of Manhattes Island must satisfy the Indians of that place for the land and may enlarge the limits of their colonies if they settle a proportionate number of colonists thereon . . .

XXXI. The Company promises to finish the fort on the island of the Manhattes, and to put it in a posture of defense without delay. And to have these Freedoms and Exemptions approved and confirmed by their High Mightiness the Lords States General."

Maggs Brothers' catalogue No. 412 (1911) contains a description of a series of 28 MS. maps (18 by 28 inches), drawn by João Teixeira, cosmographer of the King of Portugal, signed and dated Lisbon, 1630. Inserted before the Portuguese title are two blank leaves, with the following inscription in Spanish on the first leaf:

"General Maps, Original and Universal of the Whole World, Together with the Principal Ports and Fortresses of Both Indies, and a Topographical Description of the Australian Magellanic Region, in the Year 1630, Offered to the King Our Lord, in His Supreme and Royal Council of the Indies, by Don Francisco de Selvas y Lovera, Elected Chief Alcalde and Governor of the Province of Tacuba in the Kingdom of New Spain, for His Majesty; the President of that Council Being His Excellency the Marquis de Los Velez, Gentleman of His Majesty's Bedchamber, and of His Councils of State and War, and the Grand Inquisitor and Intendant of All the Maritime Armadas of the Monarchy. Presented on Behalf of the Governor by Don Manuel Garcia de Bustante."

The second leaf has the following dedication (translated):

"Table of the Contents of this Book:

Firstly, On the First Map the Portuguese Show the Demarcation of the Conquests Between the Two Crowns (of Portugal and Spain).

This is the Map which the Portuguese Usually Show at the Congresses which Have Taken Place and Take Place Between Castile and Portugal. In order to cheat the Spanish Ministers the Portuguese Ministers Make Use of this Map, Because in this Said Map the Portuguese Have Introduced a Deceit and Have Taken Away the Land of Brazil 100 Leagues More to the East from Where it Ought to be. By this Means they Include in their Demarcation the Rio de la Plata, to which They Have No Right. Because in the Distance which There is from the Island of the Manhattes to the Coast of Malagueta, in Guinea, on the Scale of that Map there are 410 Leagues Distance from One Coast to the Other. And So the Portuguese, by Showing this Map, Towards the West they Usurp the Said 100 Leagues by Cape Saint Vincent Constituting the Meridian of 360 Degrees from the Equator They Take Away More Than 8 Degrees Because These Said 8 Degrees Should be More to the East, and Also it is Seen Distinctly in this First Map that they Show the Coast of Brazil, which in the Fifth Map they Show Differently (From the Cape of Saint Augustin of Guinea and Malagueta, the Said 410 Leagues), and the Second Map Shows a Greater Distance, with Little Difference Between the Two Coasts, Because the Map which is Called Second Map is the One which is in this Book of the Demonstrations Between the Two Crowns, while the First is Suppressed; and the One which is Called Second is Really the Fifth Map of this Book in which the Portuguese Place the Coast of Brazil and Ethic Africa where they Really Should Be.

This Truth is Easily Seen Because the Distance which there is from the Río de la Plata to the Cape of Good Hope in the First Map is 1,100 Leagues, and in the Second Map (the Fifth in the Book) the Portuguese Show that there are 1,400 Leagues from the Rio de la Plata to the Cape of Good Hope, which with the Difference of 100 Leagues Already Mentioned Have been Usurped by the Portuguese in their Demarcation of the Río de la Plata, which is Really 100 Leagues Outside their Line of Demarcation, Captain Don Francis, Make, and Their Owners, Don Geronimo de Aitaide, was Rewarded with One of the Highest Ranks of that Kingdom, He Who Had Before Been the Commander of the Naval Armadas of the East Indies.

With this Book Captain Don Francisco de Selvas y Lovera begs to Serve His Majesty, in His Royal and Supreme Council of the Indies. At the Time the President was the Marques de Los Velez. The Book was Presented by Don Manuel Garcia de Bustamente, of His Majesty's Council, and Secretary.

At the End of the Same Book is a Map of the Coast and Islands of the Australian Magellanic Regions, which Don Francisco de Selvas Has Made from His Practical and Theoretical Observations.

The Contents of this Book Have Been Given in Order that His Majesty May Use it in the Congresses Against Portugal, and Moreover the Royal Council of the Indies May Keep this Original so as to Resolve their Doubts on Many Points when People Pretend to Know what is Uncertain. In this Way the Truth Will be Known and His Majesty Will be Better Served, which is Desirable Both in Small and Great Monarchies.

This important and interesting collection apparently forms a complete connoisseur of the world, as known in 1650. (The catalogue descriptions are printed entirely in capitals.)

Moreover for the Dutch landt," "landt," which against Dutch, which by our people has been founded in the Virginis; and about March, being again engaged to settle a new colony (placte), he sailed there with his wife and children. — Arnoldus Buchelius, in "Koloniae Aannwistten," 212 B, fol. 140 verso, in Rijksarchief at The Hague.

"Cornelius van Voest till this time has been delayed by his masters at Amsterdam, while at the same time his wife and children were deemed to have already arrived in the Virginis [New Netherland]. He would follow with two ships." — Arnoldus Buchelius, in "Koloniae Aannwistten," 212 B, fol. 140 verso, in Rijksarchief at The Hague.

Regarding "a certain new ship" which was at this time being built (see p. 77), the records reveal neither its name nor size. The Dutch West Indies Co. owned at different times, between 1621 and 1650, three ships named "New Netherland," of 110, 150, and 400 lasts burden, respectively. — De Laet, in Saartjecluster "Van Herckhel" (1644), Appendix, entitled "Kort Verhael," 3. 4. We know that, of the three ships of the name, one was "a great ship." It could not have been the ship "New Netherland" which "was equipped in the spring" of 1652—a vessel of only 170 lasts (260 tons), "wherof Cornelis Jacobs. May of Hoorn was skipper," and which brought over the first (?) colonists.—Wassenaer, Historisch Verhael, in Jameson's Naval N. Neth., 75. N. Y. Col. Doc., I, 149. Moreover, De Vries, himself an able skipper, saw the ship "in the beginning," he wrote that, on July 12, 1632, there arrived at Coves from the Texel the 'ship' Nieuw-Nederlants,' of the West India Company, a great ship which was built in New Netherland, which was bound for the West Indies, whereby I had [meaning with his own ship] a good company." — Korte Historia (Alckmaer), 1652, 96. Also, on April 2, 1652, John Mason wrote, probably to Secretary Coke, a report of what the Hollanders had done by way of settling in the territory claimed by Great Britain. He declared they had "built ships, which are not yet come," and which until "they last," or thereabouts, "was done on the 'river of Manhat." — N. Y. Col. Doc., III: 17. See also March, 1653, and Nov. 22, 1653. From the foregoing evidence it seems a safe assumption that the "great ship" was the one classed officially by De Laet as of 400 lasts (800 tons).

In the Representation of July 28, 1649, one of the complaints against the company was the "great expense" for unnecessary things, among them the building of the ship "New Netherland," which was placed "in the beginning."—Jameson, op. cit., 312.

In the year 1653, the ship "Nieuw-Nederlant" was captured and carried into Dunkirk.—Van Renesseker Bouwer Manuscript, 266, 271. What her subsequent fate was is unknown. Cf. however, N. Y. Col. Doc., XIV: 119 (Feb. 16, 1650).

On Aug. 26, 1659, "twelve gentlemen, among the most eminent in the Puritan party, held a meeting at Cambridge, England, and resolved to go to New England, in order to the establishment of the Commonwealth of the Massachusetts Bay Company, and the government established under it, could be transferred to that country." This resolution was the direct result of the intolerable situation brought about by the meddlesome disposition and wrong-headed obstinacy of Charles I, which the king's virtual virtual revolution, in June, 1648, to grant the famous Petition of Right,—a situation which resulted in the king's protracted experiment of governing without a parliament. No obstacle being raised to the removal to America of the government of the Mass. Bay Co. John Winthrop was selected as governor and deputy-governor. The leaders of the expedition sailed in April, 1659, on the "Arbella," and on June 13 landed at Salem. Before Christmas of that year, 17 ships, carrying over 1,000 passengers, had arrived in New England, and soon after the new colonists were engaged in starting settlements at Charlestown, Boston, Newtowne, Watertown, Roxbury, and Dorchester.—Winthrop's Jour. (1790), 1:21; Fiske, The Beginning of New Eng., p. 80.

Because of the unhealthfulness of the island, John Winthrop and a number of colonists move across the Charles River, and settle at a place called by the Indians Shawmut. The colonists changed its name to Trimountain, but, on Sept. 4, the court at Charlestown decreed that it be called Boston.

The earliest mention of Connecticut by that name was, apparently, one found in a patent of the island granted on this date to Michael Pawt. The name was derived from the states-general, and followed upon the Charter of Freedoms and Exemptions of June 7, 1629, art. V.—N. Y. Col. Doc., XIII: 2; Van Renesseker Bouwer MSS., 159-161.

Secretary Servatius Carpeniter writes from Olinda de Pernambuco to the directors of the West India Co., chamber of Zeeland: "The yacht den Bruynavisch, as it here private instructions, I again despatched immediately on the 3d instant, sending with it 20 men and 30 women, negroes, who were captured in the last prize, and who are a little harley, as much as necessary to convey the said blacks to Paviaonia... The instructions as to the coast of Africa and Paviaonia it had carried out as desired."—Records of Old West India Co., No. 49, with Letters and Papers of Brazil, 1630-1632, in National Archives, The Hague.

"Cornelius van Voest is in his colony across the River, outside of the jurisdiction of the Governor, with whom he cannot get on very well. This colony, the lord of Tielboven, Paw, at Amsterdam, has furnished with all necessaries and he is eius loci quodammodo dominus.

"Johan van Voest, a clever little fellow of fourteen years sailed this spring, 1651, to [join] his father [in the colony of Paviaonia]. It is a pity that he should not be better employed, and educated for a more civilized life, for in those places nothing but barbarism is found."—Arnoldus Buchelius in Koloniae Aannwistten, 212 B, fol. 141 verso, in Rijksarchief at The Hague.

Then, without a break, but evidently entered at a later date [1651, p. 6], follows: "Johan, coming hither with a ship from New Netherland and arriving in England, was detained there more than four months and arrived at Amsterdam in principiis Iulii, new style. With [the same ship, the Eensbrecht.—See Apr. 5, 1651] came also all the authorities, governor director, secretary, minister, not being able to get along together very well and other arrangements will be made. Nefjen [little cousin, evidently referring to Johan van Vorst] brought a letter from his father to cousin van Wyckersloot, in which he sent us and other relatives greetings and wrote that his son Hendrick had sailed as Assistant around the north [am de noorden, meaning, perhaps, up the Hudson, or along the Conn. and Mass. coast] that he was no longer in his service, but must make some trips [maar want gestane besvaeren], and that he was reasonably proficient in the language of the savages."—Ibid.

Then, again without a break, follows some news about Brazil, and then this: "From New Netherland or the Virginies there come several thousand beaver and otter skins. Jan van Vorst, Cornelis' son, having come with the ship from New Netherland or Vergine, was detained all summer in England. He came over in June and brought a letter from his father and two eagle's talons and a sea spider (seepinsen). The officers there not being able to get along together, they all came back and other arrangements will be made, in order that the new colony may be better managed and promoted, as otherwise through their mismanagement (disorder) it would be entirely ruined. As the ships stayed away long beyond the usual period, the colonists there suffered greatly for want of grain and other necessaries which they expected from Holland."

It will be noted in June, 1659, that Buchelius states in one place that Johan van Vorst arrived at Amsterdam in the beginning of July and in another that he was detained all summer in England and came over in June. According to Eekhof, Michiellus appeared before the Amsterdam Consistory on March 4, 1652. It is not unlikely therefore that Johan van Vorst was detained in England from the 1st of February until the end that he arrived at Amsterdam in the beginning of July, as stated.—See also 1650.

— made by Mr. Van Laer. The translations which were used in the text prove to have been somewhat carelessly made.

Feb. 35—15
Roger Williams arrives at Boston from England. On April 12, he became teacher in the Salem church. He was the first in America or Europe to proclaim the doctrine of full religious toleration:
holding that the state should leave matters of religious opinion and worship to the conscience of the individual, and combine governmental to secular affairs.—Winthrop’s Jour., I: 57, 61—62; Bancroft, Hist. of the U. S., I: 541—42.

1632 — In this year, the erection of the first church in Boston was commenced.—Winthrop’s Jour., I: 89.

Johan van Voorst, youthful son of Cornelis van Voorst, manager of the colony of Pavonia, doubtless in this year returned to Holland on the “Eendracht” (see April 5, 1632), as described by Arnoldus Buchelius in a note which, because of its close connection with other earlier items, has been printed under 1631 (p. 2). This note contains the important but hitherto unknown information that “On the same ship also arrived all the magistracy—the director-governlor [Peter Minuit], the secretary [Johan van Remunde], and the clergyman [Jonas Michielsz].”—Koloniaal Aanwinsten, 212B, fol.
111 verso, in Rijksarchief at the Hague.

Mar. 19—29
By the advice of the Assembly Buchelius remarks: “As ships were detained longer than usual, the colonists there [in New Netherland] suffered greatly for want of wheat and other necessaries, which they expect from Holland.”

Apr. 1633
De Vries arrives before Fort Amsterdam—Korte Historiel.
115, Hendrick de Forest sailed with De Vries, but left him at St. Mary’s, and entered the service of the West India Co.—De Forest, A Walam Family in Am., II: 333; Van Renselaer Bouier Manuscript, 197. He may have secured his grant from Van Twiller shortly after this time. Cf. Sept. 11, 1636.

In a memorial drawn up by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Company, at the request of the States of Holland, and presented on June 16, 1633, to the states general, for their information in connection with the discussion of colonial questions at the peace negotiations then entered upon between Spain and the Netherlands, the directors state in regard to New Netherland:

“This part, which according to the climate [read: latitude], ought to be as warm and suitable for the cultivation of fruit as the extreme limits of France, toward Spain, is in fact almost colder than these, yes, even more northerly countries, so that the people sent thither by us have thus far been able to find but barely enough food to live and have not been a source of profit, but of detriment to the Company. It is true, the trade in pelts which is conducted there, is advantageous, but one year with another it can at the most bring home but between fifty and sixty thousand [guide: in de eijnich dusent gulden, or fully fifty thousand guilders].—From Handelingen met die van d’andre zijde 1632/33/34,

Nov. 25
A memorial of this date, addressed by Kilian van Renselaer to the Assembly of the XIX. of the W. I. Co. (from Van Renselaer-Bouier MSS., 235, citing Letter Book, 141—53; printed in Dutch in Oud Holland, 1896, VIII: 55—69, as Appendix A to Mr. De Roeve’s articles on the colony of Renselaerswijk), shows clearly the various selfish interests at work within the company from the very beginning, and their serious effect upon the prosperity of New Netherland. It reads (translated, footnotes being inserted in brackets):

Noble, Honorable, Wise, Prudent and Very Discernent Gentlemen: Kilian van Renselaer, in the capacity of patron of his respective colonies situated within the jurisdiction of New Netherland, shows with all due reverence how he, the remonstrant, formerly director of said Company and commissioner of the aforesaid regions, found the affairs of New Netherland in the beginning of his administration, namely, that sundry colonists, as early as 1633, had been conveyed thither with instructions to dwell there as free persons and to carry on trade, principally in the furs abounding in that country. And considering the various interests at work, he wanted to guard all without restriction, the fur-bearing animals would be too much hunted and the furs would be sold here below their value, to both the damage and the loss of the Company, which had as yet no other source of income from those regions to meet the expenses connected therewith, he therefore so influenced his fellow commissioners that they deemed it advisable to curtail this trade somewhat for a time; in the meanwhile planning how the Company, according to the charter, might settle the said regions at the least expense and with the greater benefit to the country, considering that the same is a salurious and fertile land, situated from about 58° to 48° north lati-itude, being provided with an extraordinarily fine climate and many beautiful, deep rivers, embracing within its limits more land and coast, and river than all the seventeen provinces of the Netherlands, from all of which, in time, much good may result to the Company; being, moreover, an excellent rendezvous for all ships, which can arrive there in 14 days from the West Indies, and being also well adapted for raising all kinds of grain and animals which could thence be sent here or at least within other limits of the charter, as Cape Verde, Guinea and Brazil. Following this, it was found good, with the advice of the Assembly of the Nineteen, to send a large number of farmers, animals, horses, cows, sheep and other necesary, in order thus to relieve the Company of the heavy expense of transporting all sorts of provisions needed by the people in that land. This intention was diametrically opposed to the views of those who had no other aim than to send their ships home to trade in the aforesaid places, notwithstanding that it was clearly pointed out to them that such trading could bring no profit to the Company but rather decided damage and continual loss, since the amount of furs coming thence—seeing that the trading places are so distant from each other—could bear no heavy outlay; besides, that other nations of adjoining regions, when our ships should be away from there, would immediately seize and occupy these and keep us out, as they now do in Virginia, Canada, New England and everywhere.

Now when the aforesaid farmers and animals had been sent thither and when, as is generally the case with new undertakings, everything did not succeed at first as might be wished, certainly not nearly so well but that the contrary minded could find occasion for fault-finding, the Company proceeded after this fashion: on the one hand, since there were now farmers and animals, they decided that little or no provision could be made for them to stay, it was thus time to clear the land before it can be plowed or cultivated and that in the beginning several horses and cows perished which they would not replace, whereby the people were forced to take the merchandise and trade it for provisions, thus damaging the Company to an incalculable number of ducats; on the other hand, it was decided that the Company should not take in half as much for the country as the larger alone [while the latter would not have] cost [much more than] each of the small vessels in view of the fact that usually many people sail back and forth who could man the large ship but would overload the small ones, which erro cost the Company no less than the other.

By these means and many others, too long to be here related, the condition of New Netherland continuously deteriorating, all the blame was laid mainly to the account of those who favored the colonization, and especially to the commissioners for that region, who to clear themselves asserted that they were willing to undertake the colonization at their own expense and without cost to the Compa-y, if the Company would only favor the matter a little and render some assistance, and that they would make no objection and would be satisfied if all participants should be thereby invited and pub-lc freedoms and exemptions framed concerning it. This proposition, though as just as anything in the world can be, nevertheless met with great difficulty before it could be brought about, the reason being—though they could no longer prevent it directly, being quite indirectly under pretext of economy to curtail these freedoms, finding no other way than to exclude the fur trade, which had formerly been granted to others who had been sent there and were supporting the Company, asserting that this colonization had no other intent than to carry the expenses to the Company’s charge and to make the trade in furs away from it, which was pure calumny, as the following will clearly show, since several of the Colonies were registered before the Freedoms were extended to include the fur trade. And now when the contrary minded could no longer prevent action, some of the Freemen and Freedoms, by the Assembly of the Nineteen, March 10, 1628, with the exclusion of the fur trade however, which was the only objection of the opponents and amounts to little, as will later appear. That the Freedoms were too much limited and the patrons too much restricted caused great discontent among the chief participants, and on February 14, 1629, this grievance was publicly stated (not by him, the remonstrant, who was director elected by the chief participants, but by Mr. Charles Loozen and others), and request made that a committee be appointed to amend the Freedoms which had been granted, who, being nominated the third of the same month, took the matter up and drafted several articles, which, however, through his refusal [to serve on the committee] because he was himself in favor of the colonization, were never communicated to him, the remonstrant; and in order to give no one any cause for reproach, although at liberty to do so, he would accept no appointment, either from the directors or from the chief participants, to investigate this matter and also refused to be present at such investigations even when the Assembly of the Nineteen by resolution of October 25, 1628, thereto invited him and opened the door, but charged his associate [Godijn] with the direction thereof which he was not to consult with him, while he is obliged to add here, since the chief participants have been made to believe, in order to vitiy him, that he, the remonstrant, is the greatest cause thereof (although the very opposite is manifest and, even if it were true, it would be no disgrace to him but praiseworthy). Hereupon it happened that the delegates of the chief participants setting out the 21st of February following and presenting themselves in person in competent numbers before the Assembly of the Nineteen, requested that the Assembly would make an agreement with them, since they intended to organize colonies and were not satisfied with the former Freedoms. (Alas, how have these men now changed?) And doing all they could, they were unable to bring the matter to a conclusion in the Assembly, since the contrary minded (with whom they are now on such good terms as the following will prove) opposed them, yet they accomplished this much that the Assembly of the Nineteen saw fit on the 26th of the same month to pass a resolution making the propositions of the chief participants a subject for discussion at the next meeting and to this end ordering the points of difference to be set forth and sent to the Chambers; whereupon it followed that the leading Chamber of Amsterdam issued a call for a meeting on April 18, 1629, article 2 of which reads as follows: "The [Assembly] granted the respective colonies in several former meetings and the matters connected therewith, and to deliberate whether the same might be amplified by the accompanying articles requested by several influential participants and amended as the occasion requires." To consider which articles, a committee was appointed the 29th of May following, who after many long debates finally decided the matter and presented the amendments to the Assembly, who read them several times, voted upon them and finally approved them in full, June 7, 1629, as they stand recorded in the Resolution Book and were afterwards issued in public print; and these have never been revoked or retracted.

"Hereupon several registrations were immediately made, and the work was undertaken with great courage by many. However, it did not last long for the opponents rested not but watched all transactions sharply, finding a pretense in Mr. Godijn; some time before, viz in December 1628, sent two persons with the consent of the Chamber of Amsterdam and knowledge of the chief participants, according to the report of February 1, 1629, provided with merchandise, to buy and pay for the places intended to be taken, with further consent that he might exchange his remaining merchandise for furs, but the Company in regard to this matter, since at the time of sending his people the Freedoms had not been extended to the fur trade, all done in conformity with the letter of December 1628 [day of the moment blank in the Letter Book, addressed to the director of New Netherlands], the company to them by that, to the great satisfaction of the inhabitants, though in spite of the opponents, they had purchased, paid for and obtained title to the land; that, furthermore, they had exchanged the remaining merchandise for furs and sent these with bill of lading and with knowledge of the director to their patroon. The returns of the sale of these furs, amounting to about f5,600 (from which must he deducted the merchandise given in exchange, the interest, the invoice, etc.), the expenses of freight and the like, which were so magnified by the contrary minded, who had their supporters as well among the directors as among the chief participants, that it seemed to them two individuals with, but a small quantity of merchandise had purchased a large quantity of land and had besides obtained immense profits which these opponents took occasion to proclaim that the patroons were not contemplating colonization at all, but only the securing to themselves of the fur trade and depriving the Company of the same, which would be total ruin to the Company as regards [profit from] these regions, not knowing or else intentionally ignoring that the expenses of the late Mr. Godijn would first come in when he should be obliged to send with his own ships at his own expense so many people, animals, provisions and other necessary, that these f5,600 would not even enter into consideration; yet by their calumnies they brought it about that they had given many sympathizers who had been roundly speaking been won over to their side. Thus they injured Mr. Godijn exceedingly, withholding from him this very day the aforesaid f5,600 (which he must yet seek to obtain by suit), furthermore constraining him to dismiss the people whom he had undertaken to convey thither and surrender them to the Company, also to part with his merchandise and provisions which he had brought in and which had been brought in with difficulty and put the same in the hands of the Company. They did not stop even here but sought to make the remonstrant also odious (although he, as above stated, had acted so impartially in the matter), asserting that he and the other patroons had taken possession of the best places and that those who followed would come too late, though the contrary is true since not a hundredth part of the land has as yet been trodden by Christian foot, and daily even and by the latest letters new places, far excelling the first, are revealed, where there is room enough for directors, chief and lesser participants and all the inhabitants of these lands. By these means, however, in addition to the former slanders of the late Godijn, they brought it about that several chief participants, yes, even some of those who had so fervently supported the affair, now became prejudiced and opposed to it, siding with the contrary minded, who, being now strengthened, sought means to insult the remonstrant publicly at the meeting of the chief participants, in so much that five or six of them came together two hours before the meeting in order to devise some way of accomplishing their ends in the meeting, which they would also have carried through had not the remonstrant been warned of it and been on his guard, refusing with sound arguments their slanders which, with your permission, they spit out of their mouths, freedoms, which, besides, they and the other commissioners of New Nederland, who were patroons, had damaged the land by some hundred thousands for the sake of their own designs (of which damage not they, but the contrary minded are the cause, as has already been mentioned). They proceeded with such bitter injuries against others who had also registered colonies, that they thereby intimidated several, who were obliged to abandon the work already begun because others who shared therein declined to go on. And thus was undermined the necessary, laudable and good work which had been undertaken with such exertion and had taken so many years and had been discussed at so many meetings of the Nineteen and examined by all the Chambers, in and before its beginning, by so little an occasion as the return of the f5,600 concerning which of a truth it may be said, that instead of shearing the sheep when they had wool, they were skinned at birth when they had no wool, and all this under the pretext that the patroons had no other design than to deprive the Company of the fur trade and charge the expenses to them, as has heretofore mentioned.

"In order now to prove what a shameful slander this is, and on the contrary to show the diligence in the matter of colonizing the afore-said region of the Patroon, the remonstrant shared and was included, and also what the remonstrant himself has accomplished in his colony and what expenditures they together have made in face of the opposition they received, the following brief statement is given. In December 1629 they equipped a ship with persons on board, and went in all kinds of materials, such as lime, brick and tiles, also put

De Vries, Korte Historiaal, p. 93, of the Frenchmen Francois Roullant, and several negroes, supplied with provisions, arms, ammunition and other necessities, besides proper instructions, all in accordance with the consent of the Chamber of Amsterdam, of date August 28, 1630, which was given for one voyage only. And although the remonstrants would afterwards in accordance with their request of March 11, 1630, have assured, or consented that the Company should do so itself, they could by resolution of the 25th of the same month obtain no other action than that the said [second] voyage was refused notwithstanding the Company did not undertake it, and so this beautiful island fell into the hands of the English losing all that had been expended on it, scattering half the people and causing the rest to perish, for which damage they will seek redress at the proper time.

"With this aforesaid ship de Walvis, they also in 1631 took possession of the bay of the South River in New Netherland, occupying the place of their colony with 28 persons engaged in whaling and farming, and made suitable fortifications, so that in July of the same year their cows calved and their lands were seeded and covered with a fine crop, until finally by the error of their commiss all the people and the animals were lamentably killed, whereby they suffered in calculable damage, which damage the remonstrants attempted to repair in the year 1632 with the former ship den Walvis and besought the Company to lend a helping hand, who neither by word nor deed would render any assistance but forbade them by resolution of April 26, 1632, to take with them more than 300 guilders worth of merchandise, for which they obtained about 500 dollars and other skins, while they would have obtained much more from nations who had never traded with the Company if they had had more merchandise, from which the Company would have realized the duty of one guilder per skin, which [profit] both now lose. And the most intolerable of all is, that after the remonstrants had given these 303 skins with their arrival into the hands of the Chamber of Amsterdam that it might levy its duty on the same, this Chamber threw them among and mingled them with its own skins and also sold them with its own goods, contrary to the will of the remonstrants, just as if all the goods of the patroons were free booty or confiscated (who is so perfect, that he can bear all this wrong!), and still they must bear that they intend nothing else at small expense of the Company of the furs.

"Furthermore, he, the remonstrant, in December 1630 [sent] the yacht de Salve, accompanied by the aforesaid ship den Walvis, to his granted colony, the island de Sao, in order that this yacht, being supplied with people, provisions and all necessities, might take possession of said island and settle it, since it was uninhabited and abandoned by the French, which yacht, to his misfortune, was captured and brought into Dunkirk.

"What the remonstrant has further done towards the promotion of the population of his colony called Russelsserwycz, on the North River of New Netherland, may be seen from his declaration of December 2, 1630, submitted to the Chamber of Amsterdam, and so continuing from year to year, until in July 1632 he was provided with people and animals enough to start farming, he was not yet learned that the Company had not the means to deprive the Company of the Freedoms and Exemptions which had been granted and given to them with so much difficulty by the Assembly of the Nineteen.

"Now the main cause of all these differences is nothing but the trade in furs or peltries found in that country and the question by whom it shall be conducted. The contrary minded maintain that it will be most profitable for the Company to have only the directors of the Company trade in furs, excluding all patroons, colonists and others. The patroons, on the other hand, maintain that this trade should be carried on, not farms but colonists in the Company, but in all cases, with less expense and more profit to the Company, by their servants than by those of the Company, and that they can make a profit and pay duty to the Company where the Company must suffer loss. As to the first alternative, instead of this course being the most profitable for the Company, it is really true that it will bring doing so to the damage of the Company which would otherwise have had the benefit of the wages, while they on the contrary, according to the last letter written from there, do employ his carpenters and other workers by going over great distances, which, indeed, is ten times more than the f.600 which in the beginning they received for their returns, upon which all their calculations were founded. With this ship and people, they, the remonstrants, took possession of, settled and people the fertile and well-covered land, located to the southwest of the island of Hispaniola, placing thereon over 25 able-bodied men, well fitted out, besides the people (Hadde ook mede eenigh Volck om te seten aen't Eyland van Tortugo in West-Indien/daer wy met sechtig Franschen gecoinvesteer hadden/het seete Eyland voor ons te houden als een Colonie onder de H. not profit but loss, considering that out of all New Netherland only 60,000 or 70,000 gilders at the most can be obtained in returns, which by their methods will not be increased but diminished, as will be further shown. In order to get these 60,000 or 70,000 gilders, it is necessary that at least one a year a well equipped vessel, especially if she be a sloop, be applied with merchandising as a profitable trading, especially if the colonies were gone, since then the provision for the employees in that country must be sent along from here. Hereof must be added that in case the vessel should perish, not only would the whole the trade for that year be lost but their people in that country would be in great danger, considering that to make a sloop and to maintain a trade of 20 years would diminish the fur trade and perhaps divert it entirely. Moreover the fur trade in New Netherland is carried on, not in one place (as on the river of Canada), but what is much more costly in many places, and there not only many convenient but also many inconvenient places far distant from each other, as the bay of the South River, 30 leagues from the Manhattan, not up the river, but from bay to bay over the open sea. The Sankehets, a trading post on the South River, is in addition to the aforesaid 30 leagues, 35 leagues farther up this river, making 68 leagues from the aforesaid Manhattan. Up the North River to Fort Orange is quite 40 leagues. To the north, up to the Sloeps-baye [Om de noort tot aan de Sloeps-baye. Sloeps-baye was the Dutch name for Narragansett Bay, in Rhode Island] is also fully 40 leagues, so that the distance for a single trip would be about 175 leagues going and as much returning, making 350 leagues for an entire journey. Because there is much fish and furs, and savages, but are scattered about among many rivers and brooks, which must be sailed up and down, sometimes to 20 leagues, and the savages are at enmity with each other almost everywhere and do not allow each other to pass and in fru. Moreover, since it sometimes freezes three or four months continuously in that country, the rivers are closed, not only by storm and wind but also by ice, and all the trading posts are cut off from the Manhattan, the place of rendezvous. All this being true and perhaps unknown to many, it follows of necessity that these places must be provided with forts, and also with sloops to fort and carry goods to and from these places by sea, and that the yachts or sloops touch at these places and do the trading. It must also be taken into consideration that, the best season of the year being the winter time when most fur-bearing animals are caught, these yachts and sloops would have to leave their trading posts and go to the place of rendezvous, so that instead of the aforesaid distance of 350 leagues, going and coming, at least 700 leagues would have to be covered in two journeys. And then there is the sailing back and forth to furnish each other with supplies and information of everything, in addition to the risk of perishing, which would not be so great if they were not attacked on land by the savages (as they have attempted more than once). All this being well considered, it will be found, how economically it may be managed, that the ship which must go with merchandising from the fatherland and return—not count the interest, risk and ill usage—the garrison and fort at the Manhattan, the garrison and fort at Fort Orange, the yachts and sloops for the trade on the South River and the northern regions, besides the sloops plying between, counting all the expenses of building, mounting, equipping, keeping up, manning and victualing, will cost so much that the aforesaid 60,000 or 70,000 gilders, which are the utmost to be expected there, will come far short by many thousands; besides they must also expect and withstand general uprisings of the savages; all of which the remonstrant offers to prove and establish and has often maintained for many years. But they would grant him no hearing and even accused him of doing it all for his own advantage and taking away the trade, although as, when stated in the beginning, was the sole cause of this trade being restricted which formerly stood free and open. He argues that the nature of those regions being well examined, the case stands thus, that nothing can be accomplished there by poor provisions, not even by planting plant or that by hard and well-to-do will not go there themselves, but that a good work can be accomplished by the two, just as the blind can carry the cripple and the crippled can show the way to the blind, so that the rich may stay at home and send their money thither and the poor may go and purchase much of the rich with the money out of their wages. To this end, sinecure and exemptions were needed in order to raise up patriots who should send out many laborers, as it appeared that the remonstrant and his associates have done, and many others would have followed their example had they not been treated so indiscriminately and been forced to suffer loss, with loss also to the Company.

"But to return to the subject, in order to dispose of the objections of the contrary minded who may say that much more than 60,000 or 70,000 gilders can be obtained in returns, the colonists who so defraud them were gone and if attention were devoted entirely to the benefit of the trade, it should be stated that the remonstrant gives much the highest figure, and that during the ten years that the Company has traded there, taking one year with another, there has never been nearly so much as this received, but ordinarily only gilders even to the extent of loss, which, with the fault of the colonists, the contrary appears; for instance during the two years when the late Mr Godijn and his people were trading in Swanendael, the Company received from the South River through their servants a no less quantity of skins than in former or later years, but he obtained his fur in addition to these by bartering with other tribes. This caused so much jealousy that the Company or- dered their director to send a commis there, which was done with the result that the Company's servants, trading close by the people of Godijn, deprived him in one year of over 500 skins in Swanendael alone, for which the Company is justly bound to pay, since they had never obtained more than 20 to 30 skins a year in that region before this colony was started. It is maintained with insufferable imperti- nence that the Company has excluded all but themselves, not only from the fur trade, but even from the whole fishery, etc., just as if they High Mighty and the Company itself, who have the fur trade to the exclusion of all others, had not shut us out themselves, but were alone allowed to sell merchandise and trade for gold through one or two commision, while the Company was obliged to pay for all the other expenses of forts and fitting out of ships. It is evident that many wish the patroons to found colonies to their own loss, and then to have [the Company] send a commis or assistant, who under their sheltering wings and protection may buy in the fur at small cost and deprive the patroons of them, notwithstanding the fact that all the game and the free right of hunting within their territory has been granted to the patroons by the zdj [would beazzi] and of rendevou [rendezvous] out of them.

"It is further to be considered that the Company, to protect them against attacks of the savages, must keep their forts, yachts, and sloops manned by many idle people, who must cost much more than the people of the patroons, since they send not idlers but laborers who in some degree must earn their bread and need but one commis and assistant to do all the business for which the Company needs at least 25 persons; besides, the servants of the Company, serving for hire, are only seeking to make a good deal of money and then get away, they will not trouble themselves to make perilous jour- neys on the inland, because manned, yet it may be the same. The patroons, people, on the contrary, having families of women and children, who after some time will become established there, try to make terms with the savages and, pushing far inland for their own profit, discover much more than do those who only lie in garrisons. So that it is far more profitable for the Company to have no expenses, turn over the trade to the patroons and draw a clear profit than to deprive the patroons of their privileges and on the other hand encourage themselves with the maintenance of forts, yachts, people, and the which expenses, as before stated, amount to so much that they suffer loss where they otherwise might draw a clear profit. Besides this loss, which must be borne, the colonies also will be ruined if they are shut off from the fur trade. The farms which now aff- ord them sustenance will at the same time fail and all provisions must then be sent over from here as before at ten times the expense. To go on doing this, added to the loss, would be double folly, while on the other hand the Company itself would improve itself if the trade were granted to the patroons, who have money and means to send everything at their own expense, which right of trade, as stated above, was formerly with good intentions (though too soon for the time) fully granted to the poor people, who having no means had to be supplied by the Company with every thing. Is it not better that the Company should draw a clear profit than makes themselves trouble and loss?

"Are not the contrary minded well aware that their course will never increase the trade because the savages, who are now stronger than ourselves, will not allow others who are hostile and live farther away and have many furs to trade, and therefore this would be quite different if we had stronger colonies? Yes, that the Maquaas, who will not allow the French savages who now..."
In a letter written on April 23, 1634, from Amsterdam, by Kiliaen van Rensselaer to Wouter van Twiller, reproduced in Fas Rensselaer Boover MSS., 270, Van Rensselaer says: "They have secretly tried to make Isaac de Rasiser, who married the niece of Ray [a director of the West India Co.], director in your place, as I have only lately found out. . . . It was not until lately that Adrichis could get such respect as to suit of clothes for you (since they were busy with Rasiser . . .)."

The king places the superintendence of the English colonies in the hands of a commission led by William Laud, Archbishop of Canterbury. The members of the commission have power to impose penalties and imprisonment for offenses against the laws; to remove Governors, and require an account of their government; to appoint judges and magistrates, and establish courts; to hear and determine all manner of complaints from the colonies; to have power over all charters and patents and to revoke those surreptitiously or unduly obtained.—Col. of State Papers, Colonial, 1574-1600, 177.

The Council of New England agrees upon "several divisions of lands upon the sea coasts of New England, to be immediately held of His Majesty, which were granted to the Patteens, Adventurers, and Council of New England by charter, by King James I." On April 18, leases for 3,000 years were granted, and on April 23, several deeds of feoffment were made to the several proprietors. Capt. John Mason received certain lands, "to be called the province of New Hampshire," and an additional 10,000 acres "to be called Masonia." William, Lord Alexander, received that part of the main land from St. Croix along the sea coast to Pemaquid, and up to the Kennebeck River, and "the island of Matawock, or Loog Island . . . to be hereafter called the Isle of Sterling," and the Marquis of Hamilton received certain lands "to be hereafter called the county of New Cambridge."—Col. State Papers, Colonial, 1574-1600, 195, 204. On April 25, the members of the council drew up a petition to the king stating that, as "their endeavours to advance the plantation of New England" had been "attended with frequent troubles and great charges," and as they had been "assailed with sharp litigious questions before the Privy Council by the Virginia Company," they had decided to surrender their charter to the king, "with reservation of their lawful rights." They now ask "that particular grants of the proportions of land they have mutually agreed on may be passed to them, that having received the county of New Cambridge," they may cheerfully proceed in planting the several provinces."—Ibid., 204-5, 206. The charter was surrendered on June 7.—Ibid., 209.

The directors at Amsterdam make the following minutes: "A June petition of [Pieter Pietersen] Byleveld is presented, requiring the commission for the loss which he claims to have sustained by his recall from New Netherland, the same being estimated at about 7,000 guilders. Resolved to request the gentlemen who were Commissioners at the time of his recall from New Netherland to inform the present Commissioners of New Netherland of the reasons for his recall."—Records of Old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 339v.

Pieter Pietersen Byleveld was recalled from New Netherland in 1651, and sold his cattle on farm No. 3 to Kiliaen van Rensselaer on July 20, 1651, when he was in Amsterdam. He probably returned to Holland with Director Peter Minuit, on the Eendracht, in the spring of 1652.—See Van Rensselaer Boover MSS., III, 235, 235; and A. Ekeloh, Bastiaen Jansen Krol, 41.

Buchelius (Kol. Aante., 212B, fol. 129-129 verso) transcribes a letter, dated Amsterdam, Oct. 2, 1636, from Charlel, director of the West India Co. (It would seem as if this name must be intended for Pieter Varlet). Buchelius gives after the name Charlel "dir. of the W. I. Co. for the prov. of Utrecht, who took the place of . . . Pauw." Buchelius, however, came from, or had relatives at, Utrecht, and must have known the name of Varlet. He was himself a shareholder in the West India Co. This letter is addressed

1636 to Buchelius' cousin, Corn. van Wyckersloop, and states: "On Oct. 2 the yacht 'de Sevensterre,' coming from New Netherland. The cargo consists of about 8000 beaver and otter skins, a quantity of Virginia tobacco, more than 200 ox hides & other things. They report that matters there stood as before. The first document in volume one of the Register of the Princial
Secretary (N. Y. Col. MSS., I: 1) is a lease executed before Cornelis van Tienhoven, secretary in New Netherland, on April 19, 1638. In the protocol of Notary Frederick van Beuschem, No. 218, fol. 64-640, in the city archives at Amsterdam, Mr. Van Laer found, however, a declaration by Andries Hudde, dated Jan. 31, 1639, stating that, on April 28, 1638, he wrote at Fort Amsterdam, in his capacity as secretary in New Netherland, a power of attorney from Cornelis van Tienhoven to Adriaan Jansz. Has, to collect the inheritance of his grandfather, Cornelis Cordius. (Van Tienhoven). In this declaration, Hudde is referred to as "gewesten Secretaris van Nieuwelandt in America, tuwoonder deseer Staat Amsterdam,—i.e. formerly secretary of New Netherland in America, inhabitant (or resident) of this city of Amsterdam." O'Callaghan, in The Register of New Netherland, mentions Hudde as secretary, as well as surveyor, but does not fix the period during which he held the former office. From the item just quoted, which was supplied by Mr. Van Laer, it seems clear that Hudde immediately preceded Van Tienhoven as secretary, doubtless relinquishing this office on April 28, 1638 (p.c.), when Van Tienhoven was appointed. The fact that the document cited above was signed by Hudde, in his capacity as secretary, on April 28, 1638, probably indicates that Van Tienhoven, being a party in interest, sought the services of his predecessor in the preparation of a power of attorney to help him; and that, in order to make the document legal, they agreed that it should be signed by Hudde as secretary.

"At length, on March 1st, the Rensselaerswyck, surrounded by an escort of whales, 'some ten or twenty swimming, for at least two hours about our ship,' approached her destination. On the same day the skipper anchored 'behind Godyn's Point.' (Sandy Hook) and entered in the log the fervent exclamation, 'God be praised for his mercy.' The wind not being favorable, the vessel remained where it was for a few days, when Van Tienhoven was taken up by the passengers ashore 'for the purpose of shooting geese.' On March 5, 1637, the ship anchored off 'Manathan.' . . . The yacht, after all the business connected with it was completed, sailed up the river to Rensselaerswyck with the patron's colonists, and when some time later, in Van Rensselaer, Miezer M. Sept. 270-79.

"Meanwhile Hendrick and Isaac [de Forrest], the former now thirty-one years old and the latter ten years his junior, lost no time in seeking a favorable situation for a plantation. They came prepared to earn their living by raising tobacco, for which it was said the soil of Manhattan Island 'on account of its great fertility was considered well adapted.' A stretch of rich bottom land in the northern part of the island was soon selected. This tract was called 'Munceota' (the flat land) by the Indians, who had doubtless already cleared and cultivated a considerable part of it.

Hendrick promptly secured from Director van Twiller a 'grant.' [A verbal grant was all that was necessary in the very earliest days, but settlers were led to expect that a ground brief would be given to them after they had held and improved their land for two years. The period was often, however, much longer.] of one hundred morgen's land (about two hundred acres) on this fertile plain, extending the hills and between them give approximate boundaries, from the high land we know as Morningside Heights to a little stream now called Harlem Creek, which rose not far from the present Mount Morris Park and ran in a southerly and easterly direction until it emptied into the Harlem River. The northern boundary of the tract was at about 144th Street, while on the south it included the high land in Central Park at about 100th Street. Near this latter boundary was a copious spring, or, as the Dutch called it, 'fonteyn,' which still flows almost as it did then, a rippling brook with little waterfalls, until it empties into a Harlem Mill in the northern part of the tract.

"To build a house on such property was not an easy matter in 1637. The land had first to be cleared and many logs prepared, for not only were they to be used for the frame of the house and barn, but also for a heavy stockade or palisade which must be erected to surround all the buildings. This was to serve as a protection from wild beasts for the settlers and their live stock, and also as a defense against the Indians, whose trail ran near the house. A great deal of arduous labor was involved, but for this it was possible to secure the services of the 'werkbaas' (workboats) and certain slaves who were owned and maintained in New Amsterdam by the West India Company and its inhabitants. Indeed, there is little doubt that the workbaum was so employed on Hendrick's land, for in a deposition of March 22, 1639, concerning buildings erected and work done in New Netherland through official aid during van Twiller's time, there is the statement, 'Much work has been done at la Montagne's Bouwerij.' [La Montagne owned this tract later.] Besides this it was afterward shown that the workbaum knew all about Hendrick's original contract with Tobias Teunissen and Willem Bout, who undoubtedly helped in the cultivation of Hendrick's bouwerij and in the building of his house for Tobias was a good practical farmer and Willem, we know, was an excellent carpenter.

"The house is said to have been '42 feet long, 18 feet wide with 2 doors' [N. Y. Col. MSS., I: 79]. This description (the original of which was destroyed in the fire that damaged the State Capitol at Albany in 1811) is taken from O'Callaghan's translation which is not always quite accurate. The Dutch farmhouse of that period was a combination of dwelling-house in front and barn in the rear. Judging from O'Callaghan's translations of the specifications of other houses, there is very little doubt that the term which he translates as 'doors' was in the original text 'uytlaeten,' literally 'outside doors' or extensions (or porch) for the hay and cattle. There were long narrow compartments, usually extending the full length of the barn between the outer walls and the posts which supported the roof, as indicated in the plan below [see p. 952]. The width, eighteen feet, refers to the open floor in the centre, which was used for threshing. The spaces on the sides were used for storage for threshing purposes, and the open lots above them for fodder. [Cf. July 18, 1611]
The house had a thatched roof made of reeds, for the construction of which nice hundred bundles were used; it had also a brick chimney, which it took 'Dick the mason' ten days to build. A brick chimney was unusual; usually chimneys were frequently 'catted'; in other words, a square chimney was made of short logs crossed at the corners, all the interstices of which were filled in and covered with clay. Of course such a method of construction was the cause of many fires.

"Hendrick's house may have been 'half timbered'; that is, the frame built of heavy timbers and the wall spaces between them filled in with clay or stone. On the other hand, it is not unlikely that it was clapboarded. Many farmhouses were so built even in those early days. After the carpenters had put up the frame, the farmers themselves would often nail on the clapboards. Jasper Donckaerts, who travelled through this part of New Netherland in 1679, gives a graphic even if a cheerless account of the clapboarded houses, as follows—

"The dwellings are so wretchedly constructed, that if you do not keep so close to the fire as almost to burn yourself you cannot keep warm, for the wind blows through them everywhere. Most of the English, and many others, have their houses made of nothing but clapboards, as they call them here, in this manner: they first make a wooden frame, the same as they do in Westphalia and at Altona, but not so strong; they then split the boards of clapwood, so that they are like cooper's pipe staves, except they are not bent. These are made very thin, with a large knife, so that the thickest end is about a pinch (little finger) thick, and the other is made sharp, like the edge of a knife. They are about 5 or 6 feet long and are nailed on the outside of the frame, with the ends lapped over each other. They are not usually laid so close together, as to prevent you from sticking a finger between them in consequence either of their not being well joined or the boards being crooked. When it is cold and windy the best people plaster them with clay. Such are most all of the English houses in this country, except those that have been built by people of other nations."

"The house for curing tobacco on Hendrick's land was put up by an English carpenter, John Morris (Merritt), and it could not have been very well built, for it blew down four years later, to the great injury of the tobacco which it contained. This goes to prove Donckaerts' statement about the workmanship of English carpenters."

"Hendrick had other duties besides those connected with his boweray, for he was still the mate and trader of the Rensselaerswyck. When he had been only three months on shore, the yacht returned from her cruise up the river and he was summoned to sail with her for the English colonies in Virginia. Isaack, only twenty one years old, was too young to have all the responsibility of the boweray laid upon his shoulders and so his brother-in-law, La Montagne, was sent for and given command at Muscoota.

"Had it not been for this unfortunate voyage, on which Hendrick was compelled to sail, he and his wife would probably have become the founder of the de Forest family in America. . . ."

". . . it was . . . on July 26, 1637, that Captain Schellinger with pitiful brevity made the following entry in his log: 'About two o'clock in the morning my mate Hendrick de forest died' [van Rensselaer Bouwer MSS., p. 382].—De Forest, A Wallotton Family in Am., I: 80-89.

The inhabitants of the Connecticut colony convene at Hartford to frame: "an orderly and decent Government established according to God, to order and dispose of the affrays of the people at all seasons as occasion shall require."—Pub. Recs. of Conn., I: 20-25.

Fiske says it is "worthy of note that this document contains none of the conventional references to a 'government' or 'the King', nor the slightest allusion to the British or any other government outside of Connecticut itself, nor does it prescribe any condition of church-membership for the right of suffrage. It was the first written constitution known to history that created a government, and it marks the beginnings of American democracy."—Fiske, The Beginnings of New England, 127.

In August, the leading men of New Haven adopted the Bible as the constitution of the state. They excluded from the rights of citizenship non-church members, and so administered the government for 20 years.—Bancroft, Hist. of the U. S., I: 271-72.

John Harvard having bequeathed £779172s toward building the proposed college at Cambridge (see Oct. 28, 1616), the general court of Massachusetts orders that it be called "Harvard College.—Recs. of Mass., I: 151; Mathews, Magnalia Christi Americana (London, 1702), Book IV, p. 126.

At a general court held at Portsmouth from March 16 to March 18, a new constitution for Rhode Island was adopted. This stated that the government was "a democratic, or Popular Government." It guaranteed civil and religious liberty, provided for a "State" seal, and secured justice and equality to all citizens.—Arnold, Hist. of Rhode Island, I: 147-51.

Director General Kieft writes the following letter from New Amsterdam to Gov. John Winthrop at Boston: July 17

'affettate roti'—Guilla. Kieft.

The words "transom window" are O'Callaghan's usual translation of croya croyan, meaning literally cross-casing, the typical Dutch window of that period; and "round windows" stands for bol croyen, meaning windows having two swelling sashes below and one stationary sash above. The word bol in this connection is of uncertain derivation and does not mean round, or convex, as usual. Cf. transl. in De Forest's A Wallotton Family in Am., I: 112. See also sketch under Dec. 6, 1642, Addenda. Cf. July 23, 1638.

The word "entrance" probably stands for awlton, meaning an extension, or row of bays and stalls outside the posts, on one or both sides of the barn. A "barrick of four rods" means a hay barric (hooiberg), composed of four posts (roeden) and a sliding roof; usually there were five posts, one at each corner and one in the centre.

During this or the preceding year, Jan Stevensens began his career as schoolmaster in New Amsterdam. The date is indicated by a letter, of Sept. 2, 1648, written by Domine Backerus to the classis of Amsterdam, in which occurs the statement: "Master Jan Stevensens, who has served as a faithful schoolmaster for over seven consecutive years, . . . is now leaving for home."—Eccles. Rec., I: 257. Kilpatrick believes O'Callaghan (Hist. of New Neth., I: 438) to be in error in terminating Roelantsen's teaching career in 1639, and argues for 1642 as the more probable date, allowing Stevensens to be his immediate successor.—Kilpatrick, Dutch-Schools of New Neth., pp. 53-55. See July 3, 1643.

Regarding the building of the Dutch church in the fort, De Vries says:

"As I was daily with Commander Kieft, generally dining with him when I went to the fort, he told me that he had now had a fine inn built and of stone, in order to accommodate the English who daily passed with their vessels from New England to Virginia, from whom he suffered great annoyance, and who might now lodge in the tavern. I replied that it happened well for the travellers, but there was a great want of a church, and that it was a scandal to us that the English were, and saw only a mean barn in which we preached [The first church, built early in Van Twiller's administration, stood near the East River, where now stands No. 39 Pearl Street], that the first thing which the English in New England built, after their dwellings, was a fine church, and we ought to do so, too, as the West Indians were deemed to be the principal means of upholding the Reformed Religion against the tyranny of Spain, and had excellent material therefor—namely, fine oak-wood, good mountain stone, and good lime burnt of oyster shells, much better than our lime in Holland. He then inquired who would undertake the work. I answered, the leviers of the Reformed Religion of whom there were enough. He then said that I must be one of them, as I proposed it, and must give an hundred guilders. I told him that I was satisfied, and that he must be the first to give, as he was commander, and then we chose Jochem Pietersz. Kuyter, a devout person of the Reformed Religion, who had good workmen who would quickly provide a good lot of timber, and also chose Dam. [Jan Jansen Dam or Daman, a prominent colonist], because he lived close by the fort. And so we four, as churchwardens, were the ones to undertake the work of building the church. The commander was to give several thousand guilders on behalf of the Company, and we should see whether the rest would be subscribed by the community. The church should be built in the fort, to guard against any surprise by the savages. Thus were the walls of the church speedily begun to be laid up with quarry-stone, and to be covered by the English carpenters with overlapping shingles cleft from oak, which, by exposure to the wind and rain, turn blue, and look as if they were slate."—De Vries's "Notes" (from the Koninklijke Historische Vereeniging). In Jameson's Narr. N. Neth. 211-15.

The "Representation" of 1650 gives the following amusing account of the method adopted by Kieft, who spurred on by De Vries, of collecting subscriptions for the erection of the new church by taking advantage of a convivial occasion. This incident was inadvertently omitted from the text of the Chronology:

"The Director then resolved to build a church, and at the place where it suited him; but he was in want of money and was at a loss how to obtain it. It happened about this time that the minister, Everardus Bogardus, gave his step-daughter in marriage; and the occasion of the wedding the Director considered a good opportunity for his purpose. So after the fourth or fifth round of drinking, he set about the business, and he himself showing a liberal example let the wedding-guests subscribe what they were willing to give towards the church. All then with light heads subscribed largely, competing with one another; and although some well repented it when they recovered their senses, they were nevertheless compelled to pay—nothing could avail to prevent it. The church was then, contrary to every one's wish, pulled to the fort."—"Representation of New Netherland," in Jameson's Narr. N. Neth. 316. Jameson observes: "The result was a stone church in the old fort, 72 feet by 50, erected at an expense of 2,500 guilders—equivalent in specie to $1,000."
did not experience any special increase until the year 1639, when the fur-trade with the Indians, which theretofore was reserved to the company, was thrown free and open to everybody; at which time the inhabitants there resident not only spread themselves far and wide, but new colonists came thither from Fatherland, and the neighboring English, as well from Virginia as from New England, removed under us. So that in place of seven bawneries, full thirty were planted, and full one hundred more expected in a short time from the plantations which were taken up. This was every appearance, in addition, that in two or three years’ time provisions could be furnished for ten thousand men.

"Although the hope was now entertained, that by such means the conquered province would come to a flourishing state, it nevertheless appeared that the abuse of the free trade was the cause of the said run. Firstly, the colonists thereby, with a view, each to push forward his own advantage, separated themselves from one another, and settled far in the interior of the country, the better to drive trade with the Indians, whom they thenceforward sought to allure to their houses with excessive familiarity and treating; whereby they brought themselves into contempt among the Indians, who, not having been always treated alike, made this the cause of enmity. Secondly, in consequence of their proximity to the Indians, whose lands lay unfenced, the cattle belonging to our people, straying without herders, seriously damaged the corn or maize of the savages. This occasioned much complaint, and no retraces following, they revenged themselves, killing the cattle and even the horses. Thirdly, not only the colonists, but also the free-traders proceeding from this country in consequence of the large profits, traded away with the Maquas, arms for full four hundred men, such as muskets, powder and lead, which, having been refused to the other tribes, when demanded, augmented the hatred and the enmity among the latter. Fourthly, it happened that the Director, a few years after, imposed a contribution of maize on the Indians, whereby these were totally estranged from us.

It further happened that a Wechquaeskeecouk or savage murdered, about the year 1649, an old man with an axe, in his own house, for which, having received no satisfaction from the tribe, the resolution was taken afterwards, in the year 1642, by Twelve Men chosen from the commonalty to receive war; and nothing was done at the time in consequence of missing the enemy, who, observing what was designed against them, sued for peace. Some time afterwards the Hackingisacks Indians designedly shot with an arrow a Dutchman sitting on the roof of a house, which he was using to keep off the savages, and saying that he would not come to this, dread the occurrence of more such acts. And while satisfaction was being sought by the Director for this, without success, God seemed to have taken vengeance on the Wechquaeskeecouks, through the Moeban Indians, who, overtaking them, slaughtered full seventy of them, and led many women and children away prisoners. This obliged the remainder to fly to our people to the Manhattans, where they were received into the houses, and fed by the Director during fourteen days. Shortly after this they were seized with another fright. They fled with the Hackingisacks, full a thousand strong in the neighborhood of the fort, and over the river of Pavenia. Some of the Twelve Men having noticed this, the Director, at the request of three of these, namely, of Jan Jansz. Damen, Abraham Planck, and Maryn Adriaensz, who signed in the name of all their board, authorized an attack on the above-mentioned Indians, in the course of the night between the 27th and the 28th of August, by a party of soldiers and burghers, who, with cruel tyranny, slew eight of them, and took thirty prisoners. And although the commonality protested against the Director and the aforesaid three persons on account of these hasty and severe proceedings, as having taken place without their knowledge or authorizing, obliged to declare open war against full eleven tribes of Indians, who rose up in arms on that account. The consequence was, that about one thousand of these, and many soldiers and colonists belonging to us, were killed. All the bawneries almost were moreover destroyed, so that only three remained on the Manhattans, and two on Staten Island, and the greater part of the cattle was destroyed. Whatever remained of these were obliged to be kept in a very small enclosure, except in Rensselaer's colony, situated on the North River, in the neighborhood of Fort Orange, which experienced no trouble, and enjoyed peace, because they continued to sell fire-arms and powder to the Indians, even during the war against us.

"The company thus experienced the greatest loss and destruction, both of the use of their ammunition and the money expended in the purchasing this at a dear rate, as well as by reinforcing the garrison by the enlisting of as many Englishmen as could be hired in that country, fifty of whom the colonists solemnly engaged to pay, but the payment not having followed, it remained as a charge on the company. Those indebted to the company were hereby finally reduced to such a state, that they had no means to pay their debts.

"To remedy this great decay, various suggestions were proposed by the Director and Commonalty: Firstly, that to restore peace and quiet throughout the country, the Indians, who waged war against us, should, by force of arms, be utterly destroyed and exterminated. The Director demanded for that purpose, one hundred and fifty soldiers, armed with arquebuses and coats of mail, and provided with sufficient munitions of war, as he estimated the numbers of the Indians, our enemies, to be about four thousand strong. The Commonalty, maintaining their force to be some thousands strong, considered their extermination impossible, and were of opinion that it would be wiser to establish universal quiet by a general peace. Of this they have but little hope, so long as the present administration remains there, because the Indians will no way be pacified, as they themselves declare to some of ours, until the Director be removed; for their daily cry everywhere is—Wouter, Wouter,—meaning Wouter van Twiller.

"Secondly, in order to prevent future wars, the commonalty should be settled in a proper situation, near to each other, so being brought everywhere into villages and towns, they would be in better circumstances, in time of need, for self-defence. Thus being separated from the Indians, the cattle would not cause any injury to the crops of the Indians, whereby, herefore, trouble has frequently arisen; and too great familiarity with the savages avoided, none of these being employed in domestic service.

"Thirdly, for better defence against enemies, and to ensure respect from neighbors, that it would be advisable to construct, of stone, Fort Amsterdam, which is now in such a state of decay, that men, without using the gate, pass over the walls. This, according to the estimate of the commonalty, would cost but from twenty to twenty-five thousand guilders.

"Fourthly, that the boundaries between the English and our nation, should be arranged by the crown of England and this state, so that all difficulties with the former people may be prevented. Whereas the present Commonalty stands in this, dreading the occurrence of more such acts. And while satisfaction was being sought by the Director for this, without success, God seemed to have taken vengeance on the Wechquaeskeecouks, through the Moeban Indians, who, overtaking them, slaughtered full seventy of them, and led many women and children away prisoners. This obliged the remainder to fly to our people to the Manhattans, where they were received into the houses, and fed by the Director during fourteen days. Shortly after this they were seized with another fright. They fled with the Hackingisacks, full a thousand strong in the neighborhood of the fort, and over the river of Pavenia. Some of the Twelve Men having noticed this, the Director, at the request of three of these, namely, of Jan Jansz. Damen, Abraham Planck, and Maryn Adriaensz, who signed in the name of all their board, authorized an attack on the above-mentioned Indians, in the course of the night between the 27th and the 28th of August, by a party of soldiers and burghers, who, with cruel tyranny, slew eight of them, and took thirty prisoners. And although the commonality protested against the Director and the aforesaid three persons on account of these hasty and severe proceedings, as having taken place without their knowledge or authorizing, obliged to declare open war against full eleven tribes of Indians, who rose up in arms on that account. The consequence was, that about one thousand of these, and many soldiers and colonists belonging to us, were killed. All the bawneries almost were moreover destroyed, so into the country, through whose labor agriculture would be so much promoted, that a large quantity of provisions could be transported thence to Brazil.

Sixthly, that a rendezvous for vessels of war should also be es-established in New Netherland, which is better adapted than the island of Curacao, in consequence of the abundance of provisions and building-timber there; besides, that men can proceed thence safer and quicker to all the points in the West Indies, and discover the designs of the enemy.

Seventhly, that it would be profitable for the company to keep a well-furnished store and cellar there, from which the inhabitants and colonists may be accommodated at a certain reasonable price for money or produce, which will otherwise be overvalued and exhausted through private traders. But as private individuals have been permitted to carry on trade, let their imported wares be fixed at a certain price.

Finally, it is proposed by them, that the council be composed of four to five persons, in order to maintain justice and the authority of the company, together with the respect of neighbors.

From all which "is to be seen into what confusion and ruin
New Netherland is now fallen, such being caused by the rash undertaking of so unnecessary a war, without the consent of the Lords of the Nineteen, and against the will of the Commonwealth there-besides what excessive expense is now required from the company both for succor and redress. There does not seem that any apparent profit can be expected from there for some years.
On the contrary, it is found by the company's books in the particulars of that it in place of being a source of profit, this district of New Netherland has cost the company from the year 1626 to the year 1644 inclusive, over 500,000 guilders, deducting the returns which have been received from there. It would, therefore, be worthy of consideration if it would not be better for the company to rid themselves, by the abandonment of New Netherland, of such heavy expenses altogether, than by retaining it, to continue them.

But insuch as the company has promised, in its conceded Freedoms, to take all colonists, as well freemen as servants, under its protection, and to aid in defending them against all internal wars; and as the improvement of matters by good management here, and better direction there, is not beyond hope, so that this place may be maintained in the first instance with small profit, or at least without loss, it is therefore our opinion, under favor, that the company cannot decently or consistently abandon it.

In order to introduce such regulation and improvement, we submit to the consideration of the Noble Assembly the following points:

Firstly, The establishment of the boundaries with the English should speedily and first of all be agreed upon, for it is found that they, for their great population, usurp daily more and more of our territory. This being first settled, it should be conditioned, that the English who find themselves in our district, or should come in there, should be subject to our government, and not be acknowledged otherwise than as original subjects.

Secondly, The country should be brought, in every respect, to peace and quietness; and the advice of the present Director utterly to exterminate all enemies by force, by no means he adopted, only because such is impracticable and unchristian, but it would be injurious to the company, necessitating, as it would, so heavy an expenditure on so uncertain an event, and so little appearance of profit. It would not be politic, therefore, to adopt the advice of the Commonwealth, and to endeavor by all means to appease and satisfy the Indians, and to order either the Director and council, who are responsible for that bloody exploit of the year 1643, to justify and vindicate their administration before the Noble Assembly of the Nineteen. In place of whom a person should be sent back as Director, sufficiently qualified to promote the interests of the company and the prosperity of the Commonwealth on the one hand, and to maintain on the other good correspondence with the neighboring people, especially with the Indians.

Thirdly, It would be advisable to carry into effect and to ex-cute the proposition of the Director previously alluded to—that the colonists should settle on some of the best adapted places with a certain number of householders, in the manner of towns, which would be the most suitable for the English intercourse, for theytherby will live more secure, according to the intention of the company in the granting of the printed freedoms and the amplification thereof.

Fourthly, It shall be necessary, first of all, to hasten the repairs of the fort, and we are of opinion that this shall be done in a proper manner, and at the least expense, with good clay, and firm sods.
But it is therefore by the company that soldiers should be urgently obliged to keep it for the future in continual repair. The Director should be strictly commanded to take good care of this.

Fifthly, We consider, under favor, that for the security of the foresaid fort, and as elsewhere required, the persons specified in the annexed list should be sufficient, on such allowances, as there, we consider, drawn from the resources of the company and their servants be bound, under certain penalties, to provide themselves with good fire-arms and other weapons for self-defence; and to secure themselves in time of need, independent of the garrion, against a general attack, without the Director, colonists, or whosoever it might be, being permitted to hire any soldiers, be they few or many, at the company's expense.

Sixthly, A council should be established there, consisting of three persons; namely, the Director as president; the Second and the Fiscall as councillors adjunct. Through which council all business, justice, co-justice, and public business, and rights of the company should be treated and administered. With the understanding, nevertheless, that the Commander should take the place of the Fiscall in criminal matters, with the addition moreover of of two capable persons from the Commonwealth. Further, as by the articles of the Freedoms, to which the company has consented in order to delegate one or two persons to inform at least, once a year, the Director and council of the state and condition of their colony, so are we of opinion that the said delegates should moreover assemble every six months, at the summons of the Director and council, for mutual good understanding and the common advancement of the welfare of the inhabitants; besides to assist in advising the same upon all affairs relating to the welfare of their colonies, the preservation of peace with the Indians and neighboring people, the maintenance of the Freedom and privileges, and the redress of all abuses, besides the maintenance of the statutes and the laws, bearing in mind, always, that throughout the whole of that land the Amsterdam measure, ell, and weight shall be used.

Seventhly, It must be especially attended to that the population and cultivation of the country should be strengthened. It would be serviceable thereto to facilitate, as much as possible, the emigration of the colonists and freemen who intend to proceed thither to settle there, and to cause them to establish themselves, first of all, on the island of Manhattans; allowing them as much land as they were able to cultivate, whether in planting of tobacco, for which that island being very fertile is considered well adapted; or grain or other crops, from which they may expect to derive the largest profit.

And for the advancement of the reclaiming of the country, it would be wise to allow, at the request of the Patroons, colonists, and other farmers, the introduction from Brazil there of, as many negroes as they would be willing to pay for at a fair price; which negroes would do their masters more service, and at less cost, than farm-servants, which must be hired here with a great deal of money and much promises to be sent thither.

Eighthly, To increase the population still more, we would advice, that it would be best to reserve the Indian trade exclusively to the Patroons, colonists, and free farmers residing there, without permitting any licensed traders to trade in any manner with the said Indians; but to be satisfied to exchange their cargoes with the free inhabitants for peltries, tobacco, wheat, and other produce of the country. But it should be absolutely forbidden, that either the freemen should sell to the Indians, or the licensed traders to the freemen, any arms or munitions of war, on pain of a heavy punishment to be inflicted therefor, lest the Indians, being strength-ed thereby, may have reason to encourage to do us more injury than they can now, in their impotency, inflict. But it shall be left to the discretion of the freemen to have side-arms and firearms for self-defense, as already mentioned in the 5th point. An inspection thereof shall be had by the Director every six months.

And in order to encourage the good people of New Netherland the more, the Noble Assembly of the Nineteen should, under favor, consider if it would be advisable to give the conquerors of the conquered province, to allow the Patroons and colonists, there resident, to export their produce to the Brazil, under proper recognitions and tolls, as there are there flour, oatmeal, peas, beans, pipe-staves, planks, square timber, and other wood fit for ship and house-building. Also to encourage the fishermen around, that they and no other persons should be permitted to salt and preserve the fish and caviare which can be caught there, to sell the same at the Recife [Pernambuco], and that it should also be allowed, that the New Netherlanders should take salt on the Brazil coast around Siara, or in the West Indies, for the purpose of salting wet and dry fish; and to erect salt-panns in New Netherlands to refine the same, and to render it fit to use as fine salt with fish and meat. And, arriving at Brazil, that they shall be bound to deliver all into the company's store, and on payment of the proper duties and tolls, whether in money or specie, to dispose of the same without exporting any money thence, but to take as a return cargo, staves, sugar, confectionary, ginger, tobacco, cotton, and other country produce, with proper entries thereof, both as to quantity and quality; and therewith to sail straight to New Netherlands, without touching at any port, while on the way, to barter or to sell any part thereof, under any pretent whatsoever. Wherefore they should receive on the part of the company a supercargo, to make a report of the whole to the company, and to return in the next ship from New Netherlands to the Brazil. And as all further smuggling must be prevented, the shippers must be obligated (on pain of loss of ship and goods) after being visited at the Recife [Nearly south of Pernambuco city, between the river Bibiribe and the sea, a small tongue of land extended, on which stood a village named Recife: there all goods were shipped and unshipped. De Laet, Verhael van West Indien, 1911.) to touch at Farabaalu, to be there visited again on the part of the company.

"Which trade being thus adjusted, it shall not be necessary for the company to be burdened with any equipages, or purchases of cargoes, and thereby be relieved from numerous servants required therefor. The garrison being established to board themselves, they will be amply provided therein, and with other necessaries, by the freemen and inhabitants there.

"But in order to furnish the expenses which the company have to defray for the support of that garrison and other servants, it will be necessary that the receipts of the recognitions, tolls, and other duties, as well on the exported as on the imported goods, already established and hereafter to be imposed, should be sharply attended to; whereforom we think that the expenses to be met by the company can be amply received, with the hope that the population increasing, greater and more ample profits can be derived therefrom."—O'Callaghan, Hist. of New Neth., Appendix, 418 et seq.

The development of the slave trade of the W. I. Co. dates from 1640, when Portugal revoked and the Spanish colonies in S. America could no longer obtain slaves from the Portuguese possessions. The Administration of the island of Curacoa, 1643-45, this island became the center of the clandestine slave trade with the Spanish colonies. Apparently, the granting of ground-briefs was sometimes made a special order of business at meetings of the director-general and council; or possibly the grants made at different meetings were held for issuance or record awaiting the convenience of the secretary, which would account for the fact that often several were issued or recorded on the same date.—See Introduction to Dutch Barbadoes III, pp. 155 et seq.

"Of a ship from New Netherland ["Princess"] we have sad tidings, namely that the same with 86 souls, 200,000 lb. of stack without [red wood, or St. Martha wood], and 14,000 beaver skins, about four weeks ago perished near Wales, England. Only 21 persons were saved and came ashore on pieces of the ship. Director Kief, the major, the fiscal and other officers are among the dead. The ship belonged to the Company and sailed in the latter part of August from New Netherland. From the persons saved, who arrived here, we can not learn that anything special happened in New Netherland.—"

See 1623, and Dec. 28, 1670, where the "Arms of an Earl," here referred to as having been granted to the province, are described. See also Frontispiece I, Vol. IV. As pointed out by Dr. Wieder, in a letter to the author dated Aug. 17, 1921, Holland in the Middle Ages was a "Graafschap," or the dominion of a count, whose arms it bore, and continued to bear after it had become a province in the Dutch Union. It seems clear that the states-general, in order to bestowed upon the colonists going to New Netherland privileges equal to those enjoyed by citizens of the home provinces, made New Netherland a province, and bestowed upon it the arms of a count, similar in character to those enjoyed by the seven provinces forming the "Union."

The Lutherans of New Netherland (Daniel Litscho and others) also wrote asking the Lutheran consistory at Amsterdam to exert themselves to secure a minister. In this letter, they enclosed peti- tions of Oct. 1, 1653, addressed to the states-general and the direc- tors of the West India Co.—Archives of the Lutheran Church at Amsterdam.

The following is a report of a court meeting held at Fort June Orange (The court was established by Stuyvesant Apr. 10, 1643):
"Tuesday, June 23, 1654:

"Present:
"Ommes dempfo Sander Leendertsen
"Last Sunday a letter was received by this court from the Honorable General, of the 17th of this month, wherein he advises the court of the sad news received from the north and that on that account, for the better defense of the Manthans, they were not only busy repairing the old works, but also obliged to begin some new ones. Complaining of the scarcity of money in the treasury, he requests that the most prosperous of the burghers here lead a helping hand and that this court would please to negotiate a loan of money, on condition that it be returned within a year, either in duties, or otherwise, for which his honor and the honorable councilors offer their persons and property as security.

"After careful consideration of the matter, this court has decided to summon the most prosperous and loyal citizens and to communicate the matter to them, with the recommendation that they assist the Honorable General in this great emergency; who, having been summoned one by one and appeared in court, have signed for the following amounts, which they have agreed to furnish promptly for the purpose and on the conditions herein- before written, and which it is decided to send at once by the sloop of Jacob Symontz Klam, in company of two other sloops, which are lying ready to sail for the Manthans. They have contributed and signed as follows: [A long list of names follow, with amounts opposite, totalling 192 beavers and fl. 790 in seawan, together valued at fl. 2235. Then follows this statement]"

"But in recounting the number it was found that there was one beaver too much, which was sent also, as follows: 144 whole beavers and 16 drielings [here apparently counted as 3 skins]

75 half beavers.

"On the 26th of June the above amount was sent off by Jacob Symontz Klam, and by the accompanying sloop, Claes Thys, master, the wheat, in the presence of the honorable magistrates, Jan Verbeeck and Jan Jansen Schermerhorn,

THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

General Stuyvesant, who had been appealed to and who had obtained an admission from the bailiff that he had not requested the delivery of the collateral. Stuyvesant just previous to this had received a letter from his superiors dated June 14, regarding his kinder treatment of the Jews. The arbitration resulted in a reduction of the fine to a bearable amount, 120 guilders and costs of 50 guilders, which were paid. DeFerera was released after being imprisoned about a month without bail liberty. The proceedings in this case take up many pages of the Dutch records. For a full account, with documents, see Oppenheim, op. cit., pp. 55-57 and 77-86.

G. Beernink, in De Geschiedenis en Rechtsgewijs Dr. Arend van Sichelenhorst en zijn vader Brant van Sichelenhorst, Stichter van Albany, Hoofdstad van den Staat New-York (Gelse, Werken, No. 12), 1916, prints on pp. 272-79 Van Sichelenhorst's account of receipts and disbursements of the colony Rensselaerswyck for 1648, 1649, 1650, in which, under the year 1648, occur items of Evert Duycking and Roelants Savery for glass. On p. 167 of the text, Beernink reads:

"Evert Dukink toch leverde in dat zelfde jaar een nieuw glas, had er zeven versteld en had van Labatie zes stuks "fin glas" betrokken. Hij eindigde zijn rekening met de aanbieding wagen van merken in glazen (ruitte) te branden"—(translated): Evert Dukink, namely, in the same year (1648), furnished a new glass; he repaired seven and procured from Labatie six pieces of "fine glass." He closed his account with the offer to burn coats of arms or other marks (designs) in glass (leaded glass windows).

Beernink must have found this account among the vouchers accompanying the account of the colony submitted to the Court of Gelderland in connection with the litigation between Van Sichelenhorst and the heirs of the patroon.

At the end of this month, Stuyvesant, at Wildwyck (Esopus, or Kingston), directed the establishment of the village.—Dutch Records of Kingston, Part I, trans. by Oppenheim for N. Y. State Hist. Assn. (1912), 1-2.

E. W. Moe, Iconographia Batanae, Amsterdam, 1879-1905, II: 417, lists a miniature portrait of Jacob Steendam, the poet, by J. M. Quinkhard, in the Panopticon Batavum, in the Rijksmuseum at Amsterdam. It is not clear whether this is the same portrait as that of which Murphy gives a lithographic copy by E. Manzani, The History of the Indians, in New Am. and Its Peoples, has a reproduction of the Murphy portrait "from an original print in the Lenox Library."

This was apparently Gerard Roochoos's Recueil Van verscheide Keure, en Costumen. Middeldagen Maniere van Pateredaten binnen de Stadt Amsterdam. Den tweeden Druck, nu merkelyck vermeerderd en verbeterd, Amsterdam, MDCCCLVI.

Edward Man, from Plymouth, was in 1624 a merchant at Amsterdam, on the Rokin, and thereafter a director of the W. I. Co.; he married Sept. 28, 1625, at Amsterdam, Abigiel Loten.—Johan E. Elias, De Vredshuis van Amsterdam, II: 650; see also De Laet, Historie Offe Ietzeltik Verhaal, list of directors of Amsterdam chamber of W. I. Co.

The attempted correction in the Chronology—in the sixth paragraph under 1660, p. 201 of the statement in Vol. II, p. 215, regarding the number of bridges shown in the Castello Plan, should be ignored, as evidently a temporary aberration on the part of the author.

— Isaac Israel, the first Jew to hold office in New Netherlands, is mentioned in N. Y. Col. Docs. XII: 447-50; Oppenheim, Early Hist. of the Jews in N. Y., p. 28.

June It is not unlikely that Couturier, the painter, was in reality a dyer, like Gerard de Forest, who, on Dec. 5, 1622, obtained for two years the exclusive privilege to dye "alle bourraten, Leyta Tura, grootfregem en damaren."—N. 1664

Mar. A belated attempt is being made to trace the present whereabouts of this important New York document.

Aug. The "Reply of the West India Company to the Answer of the 27 Heibl Peter Stuyvesant..." covers, with its appendices, 17 Sept. printed pages in the N. T. Col. Docs. (II: 439-310), the original being in the Royal Archives at The Hague. It is addressed to "The Honorable, their councilor in New Netherland, for the Affairs of the West India Company," and bears date of 1666.

The aim of the "Reply" is to show "the bad foundation and paltry excuses" contained in Stuyvesant's answers to charges against him for "the scandalous surrenders" of New Netherland, and to request an investigation into the "High Mightinesses" desire to dispose of Stuyvesant as they think fit, or drop their prosecution against him. States, among other things (p. 499), that Stuyvesant preferred "to incur excessive expenses of late years for the embellishment of the city, by the construction and erection of very costly stone buildings to work, rather than bring the fort into a state of defence..."

Between Sept. 30, 1664, and Jan. 9, 1671, Johannes de Decker was in Holland, and made efforts to collect what was due him from the West India Company, as is shown by the following entries in "Resolution Vande Caeser Amsterdam No. 25 vandes 1668 tot den 10: Septembr 1671," in Records of the old West Indies Co. No. 15, Algemeen Rijksarchief at The Hague:

1669 Joan de Decker, former councillor in New Netherland, May serves notice that he intends to recover what is due him 28 out of the property which the company has in New Netherland. The company demands a copy of the notice, and replies that it will know how to protect its rights. (fol. 22)

1669 Jan de Decker, councilor in New Netherland, April presents a remonstrance setting forth his innocence in the matter of the surrender of New Netherland to the English, and asking for the payment of his monthly wages. The remonstrance is referred to Messrs. Pergens, Boutemantel, and Cloeck, who, with the assistance of the advocate are to examine the matter and to report thereon. (fol. 98v)

1670 The committee to whom was referred the matter of Apr. Jan de Decker, formerly councilor of New Netherland, 21 reports that said de Decker was not only employed in the surrender of New Netherland, but himself concluded and signed the agreement, and that his writings contain no satisfactory evidence of his innocence. Payment of his monthly wages is refused for the present, and the committee is requested to look further into his accounts. (fol. 174)

1671 The next volume of "Resolutions of the chamber of Amster- dam," Sept. 10, 1671-June 15, 1674, in Records of old W. I. Co. No. 16, appears the following entries:

1671 Joan de Decker, formerly councillor in New Netherland, July requests that his claims against the company be submitted to impartial arbitrators. Referred to the committee on law suits. (fol. 74)

1673 Joan de Decker makes the same request as above. Mar. Request shall be considered at its appropriate time. (fol. 16 141)

1673 The committee appointed to settle the matter of Joan Aug. de Decker reports that in lieu of payment of his claims 7 they have offered to employ him provisionally as a notary in the service of the company until an opportunity pre- 1673 sented itself to advance him further in the company's Aug. service. Whereupon De Decker requested to receive in addi- tion a bag of 200 ducatons, which the committee, in view of the present emergency, were willing to grant, but without any further promise to advance him his claims. Resolution that in full discharge of his claims the chamber shall pay him fl. 1500, in five instalments of fl. 300 each, without binding itself to employ him in any capacity, and on condition that paid received shall cease, or be reduced if he be employed meanwhile. De Decker agrees to make known his reply next Thursday. (fol. 176)

1673 Joan de Decker accepts the terms offered by the company, Aug., on condition that if New Netherland be at any time restored to the state and to the company, then his former claims shall remain entire. Granted, provided that in such case the amounts already paid by the company shall be deducted. (fol. 177)

1665 Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, writing to Gov. Nicolls, says Mar. that he hopes a copy of the Connecticut laws will "be there before the day of meeting" (at Hempstead—see March 1). When "the perfecting of the body of laws" for the province of New York has been accomplished, he desires "to have the favour of a view of them, for a directory to the better comprehension of that of this Colony."—Winthrop Papers, V: 49, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

1666 About this time, Lucius Drayton, a discharged soldier, kept a tavern, known as the "Sign of the Fort Orange," at the present No. 16 Stone St.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 980. He first received a license as tavern-keeper on Feb. 16, 1654 (Rec. N. Am., I: 161), but two years later had received leave to settle at the South (Delaware) River (Cal. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 165).

Corneleys Steenwick and Oliffe Stevens receive a patent by way of confirmation for "A certain Parcell of land lying upon this Island of Manhattan, near the fresh water heretofore knowne by the name of the Penhackericks or the Bowerry No. 5, stretching by the land belonging to Corneleys Claesen Swits and so along by the Carway to Hans Carstendes Plantation and then straight into the woods till you come to the Parting of Leendert Arendssens Land where three ways meet at ye Cart Path within the fence. Containing in all by estimation about 91 Acres and 125 Rods, for which said parcel of land Garrett Jansen v Van Oldenbergh had formerly a Patent or ground-brief from the Dutch Government William Kidd, bearing date the 17th day of February, 1646, whose interest therein was upon the 15th day of June, 1653, transported over unto Thomas Hall of this City. And whereas there are two other Lots of land adjoining to the said bowery beyond the fresh water aforesaid mentioned which hereafter were in the tenure or occupa- tion ye one of Garret Jansen van Oldenbergh and the other of Corneleys Jacobsen Stille. Containing in length on the west side 25 Rods; on the east, 21 Rods and 8 feet. In breadth on the north side, 13 Rods and on the south, 7 rods, 3 feet, for which said lots of land said Thomas Hall had heretofore a Patent or Ground-brief from the late Dutch Governor Petrus Stuyvesant, bearing date the 29th day of November, 1652. Now, the said Thomas Hall, having, on the 30th day of October, 1662, transported and conveyed over his right, title and interest to the parcell of land and bowery before mentioned as well as to the a Lotts adjoining the said houses and tenements thereunto and the meadowes thereunto belonging, unto Mr. Cornelys Steenwick, one of the Aldermen, 8c. who hath likewise taken in Mr. Oliffe Stevens van Cortlandt another of 8c. to bee copartner with him in the premises," etc.—Confirm.—Liber Patents, IV: 17 (Albany). The original grant and subsequent con- firmations, etc., are in the author's collection.

In a letter to Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, Gov. Nicolls ex- presses disappointment that "a more cheerful conjunction of Mutuall defence" on the part of "all his Majesties Loyal Subjects" is not in evidence. "Dutch & French preparations against his Majesties Plantations" suggest great danger of 1681; he does not doubt "by God's assistance to defend this place or be buried in the Ruins of it if the Cossion Enemy makes his first descent upon Vs but I foresee that the fire will not stop here but may singe the Coasts of our Neighbours... whatever happens I shall not want Testimonies that Liberati animus... both in our own... and privately."—Winthrop Papers, XVI: 2, in Mass. Hist. Soc.
The archives of the Virginia Company, covering the years 1605-1616, are supposed to have been consumed in the great fire of London, which started on this day, and destroyed the greater part of the city, including 13,000 houses. — Brown, Genesis of the U. S., I: 12; London's Flames Refract (London, 1689). 1667

July 4 An act-nuptial agreement between Cornelis "Steenwijk" and Margrietie Kiemens is signed in the presence of the following witnesses, namely, Marten Kriger, Jacob Mott, Olefe Cremer Cortlaedt, and Johannes de Peijster; attested by Mathaes de Vos, notary public. Dated July 4, 1667, Old Style, in "N-Yorck Citie opt'eijlandt Manhattansa." Steinwyck is called in this instrument "alderman of the aforesaid city." The manuscript occupies 9 pp., folio, entirely in the handwriting of Mathaes de Vos, the notary public before whom the agreement was made. It is his attested transcript for record filing, dated April 2, 1667/8, and his attest says: "this agrees with the original minute of the protocol [i.e. public register] committed to my custody." This instrument was sold at auction in 1921, and is now owned by Mr. Victor Hugo Paltsits.

Cornelis Steinwyck, under the Dutch authority in New Netherland, held various offices, as schepen or burgomaster of New Amsterdam, orphan-master, etc., and in Colve's régime he was "first councillor." During the first English occupation, he married Madam de Riemer; he was mayor of the city of New York from 1668 to 1670, when Francis Lovelace was governor. Steinwyck was a man of means, lent money to the government, and at his death bequeathed to the Dutch Church of the city the Manor of Fordham (which he had bought from John Archer, the original lord of the manor), for the support of the ministry. The original deed for this estate, signed in a tremulous hand by Steinwyck, and in a bold hand by his wife, is in the author's collection. Steinwyck's widow, the Margaret de Riemer of the above-mentioned nuptial agreement, was married to the well-known Dominie Hendricken Selby. 16 Sheriff Allard Anthony "demands" that the court of mayor and aldermen impose a fine of 100 guilders ($20) on Thomas Tailer for beating Laurens Silla "til the blood came." "Ten groats [eighty cents] with costs" was the small penalty fixed by the court. — Rec. N. Am., VI: 87. The common practice in New Amsterdam was to grant one-third of an imposed fine to the informer, one-third to the sheriff, and one-third to the city; this practice was carried over to the English city. The sheriff or sheriffs was in the habit of recommending "a fine of goodly proportions which the court invariably diminished," not often, however, to such an extent as in the case cited above. — Peterson & Edwards, N. Y.: As an 18th Cent. Municipalty, 194

Oct. 3 A patent, by way of confirmation, is granted to Claes Jans Ramaker, on a transport to him by Rachell van Tienhoven, dated Nov. 10, 1662. Description: Without the Land Port, having to the south land of the widow of Pieter Rodolphus, deceased; to the west, the highway; to the north the house and lot of the "Blew Bore," containing in breadth along said highway, 6 rods, 8 ft; on the east side, 6 rods, 9 ft; on the south side, 12½ rods; on the north side, 12½ rods. — Liber Patents, II: 25 (Albany). "Blew Bore" was the name a farmer, Gerrit Hendrickens, probably so distinguished for his raucous voice. — New Neth. Am. and its People, praeface, p. vii. Valentine is evidently in error in stating (Man. Coll. Coun., 1865, p. 532) that "the 'Blue Boar,' erected about the year 1670, on the east side of Broadway, near the present corner of Liberty street," was "the first suburban tavern." Hendrickens was not nominated, even in conveyances, as "de blauw boer" or the blue farmer.

Cosimo de' Medici visits Amsterdam, and probably orders copies made from the original Manatus and Castello drawings, etc. See Vol. II, p. 175. For an account of his travels, see Magalotti's Travels of Cosimo the Third, grand duke of Tuscany, through Eng. during the reign of King Charles II (1669) (London, 1821).

The first New York City seal under the English régime is reproduced on Frontispiece I, Vol. V. See also Pine, Seal and Flag of the City of N. Y., PI. II and pp. 30-36; Wills, Civic Anatomy of N. Y., 42-43.

During this month, the first settlement in the colony of South Carolina was made, on the Ashley River, a few miles inland from the present city of Charleston. — Salley, Nat. of Early Carolina, 119-20, 166.

The Hudson Bay Company, organized chiefly for importing furs and skins obtained by barter with the North American Indians, receives its charter from Charles II. The king incorporates his cousin, Prince Rupert, and a number of other nobles, as "The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay," makes them absolute proprietors and lords of the region, gives them a monopoly of the fur trade, and empowers them to make laws and ordinances regarding their territory. — Winthrop Papers, XI, 170, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

Gov. Lovelace informs Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, of the sad loss of the Duchesse of York who after a violent fever 10 years seized her and made a final respite assassinated her at last with unresistable force and snatcht her out of this world." — Winthrop Papers, XIV, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

1672

The "High Mighty Lords of the States General of Zeland" pass secret resolution for sending out a Dutch squadron to America, upon which follows the preparation of two secret "instructions" in nineteen and eight articles, respectively, issued by the council of the states general of Zeland, on Nov. 21, (q.c.t.). In a cipher code provided for the squadron, running from 99 to 249, Virginia is 162, and New Netherland 163. These and other manuscripts relating to the expedition under Evertsen and Bencke are in the Evertsen Papers, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

On this day certain secret instructions, consisting of nineteen articles, were signed by a committee of the council of Zeland, for sending out a squadron designed for operations mainly against the island of St. Helena. New Netherland was not mentioned in this instrument, but on the same day a second set, consisting of eight secret articles of instructions, was drawn up by the committee, in which New Netherland was mentioned in article six, which provided that, after the operations at St. Helena and the capture of Bermuda, a detour should be made by the squadron along the coast of Virginia, New Netherland, and as far as Newfoundland, in order to either destroy or capture everything there. These instructions were given to Captains Evertsen and Bencke. — Evertsen Papers, in N. Y. Pub. Library. For subsequent events, see July 30/Aug. 9, and Aug. 14/15, 1673.

The records of conveyance in New York, as contained in the earliest book of New York deeds, begin with this date, and are continued to Oct. 19, 1675. The volume in which these deeds are recorded is not found in the register of this county, having been temporarily deposited in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. — See Collections (1913), 3-63.

Jollet sailed down the river as far as the Arkansas which he reached in the middle of July. After ascending the river, he entered the Illinois, gave New France this name, and then returned to Quebec. He arrived there in the middle of August, 1674, and reported to Frontenac. The map showing Jollet's discoveries was probably drawn there from his notes and sketches by J. B. L. Franquelin, the well-known royal hydrographer, it was called Nouvelle decouverte de plusieurs nations dans la Nouvelle France en l'annee 1673 et 1674, and was doubtless the earliest map of the Mississippi.
CHRONOLOGY : ADDENDA : 1673-1776

July 25
A letter written to Justus Huybert from Amsterdam states that there arrived on this day with the post out of England a missive from Capt. Bincles, addressed to the board of admiralty at Amsterdam, written by Bincles in Virginia, bringing some news, including a true confirmation of the tidings of the recapture of New Netherland—Evertsen Papers, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

Oct. 28
Gov. Colvile and the council, in a letter to the governor and council of Massachusetts, relative to four captured ships belonging to New Englanders, complain about the ships that are sent to New Amsterdam. They ask the English to send in future honest persons and no spies in intercolonial matters—Winthrop Papers, original manuscripts in Mass. Hist. Soc., XV: 123.

Nov. 7
A letter written by Commander Evertsen on board his flagship, the "Swaneburgh," lying before Cadiz, gives an account of the capture of New Netherland from the English. This letter was at one time No. XII of a small set of Evertsen Papers, now in the N. Y. Pub. Library, but this particular letter was retained by the family of Dr. George Henry Moore, when his manuscripts were sold at auction in 1892. See also The Collection, p. 20.

1674
Mar. 14-24
A communication from the governor and council of Massachusetts to the governor and council of Connecticut announces the decision of the Massachusetts "General Court" to equip two vessels as men-of-war "to secure the passage through the Sound & to repress the present insolency of the Dutch."—Winthrop Papers, XVII: 39. On March 30, another letter gave the information that the vessels were "fitted & furnished with Ammunition and provisions," and "now ran the Dutch on the Service of the Colonies."—Ibid., in Mass. Hist. Soc. These vessels were never dispatched (see Apr. 17-27).

April 17-27
Another official communication from Massachusetts to Connecticut (see Mar. 14) announces that the two vessels, equipped for service on the Sound, were detained for some days for "want of wind & extremity of the raynev Seasons." Now the intelligence of "the undoubted probability of peace between England & Holland" (see Mar. 31/Apr. 10) has led the council "to put a stop to the going forth of the Vessels, until they hear further from your Councils, or otherwise."—Winthrop Papers, XVII: 39, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

The Duke of York issues a warrant to Gov. Andros "To inquire for two seals (hereafter appointed) for the Provost and Corporation of New York, and to use them for public Acts."—Col. State Papers, Am. & W. I., 1669-1674, p. 604, item no. 1146. The city seal referred to is the one which was sent over from England in 1669 (see Oct. 5, 1669).

This is the earliest mention of a coat in the city of New York (see Chron.). Houghton is therefore in error (Coaches of Colonial New York, 1890, p. 8) any proposition that the first appearance of a coat on the streets of this city is 1686 (more than a decade later), and its ownership to Col. William Smith, who arrived that year.

The inventory of books, etc., found in the city hall at this time contained the names of the following volumes:

4. Ditto in quarter; Consultations and Opinions 12 and 14 parts.
6. Ditto. Wissbute Admiralty Laws.—Rec. N. A. M., VII: 72. These volumes, which served to guide the city court of New Amsterdam and New Orange in its legal procedure, are no longer in the possession of the city, and their whereabouts, if extant, is unknown.

The court of mayor and aldermen issues a warrant to the sheriff to attach the "lands, houses and estate" of the late governor, Francis Lovelace. The return of Thomas Gibbes, sheriff, was made on Nov. 14 and 16. The original document is almost illegible, but it shows that Gibbes had attached the great house near the state house, the garden house in Broadway, and two parcels of land adjoining the land of Derrick Seckars.—N. Y. Col. MSS., XXIV: 164 (Albany). See the colonists and the Dutch, p. 4.

Gov. Andros, in a letter to Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, expresses the hope that certain towns at the eastern end of Long Island will not be upheld by Connecticut in their resistance to the authority of the Duke of York. He wishes to believe that the assistance those towns received from Connecticut against the Dutch Dec. 29th was "for His Maties Service, and not any ways to obstruct his prerogative Royall, & His Royall Rightness Right to that part."

—Winthrop Papers, XI, 68. On Dec. 29, he informed Winthrop that he had returned on the 22d from the Long Island towns, and that everything there was quiet and settled satisfactorily.—Ibid., XI, 69, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

From this we first find mention of the presence in the city of Ahasuerus Hendricks, silversmith. Besides carrying on his trade, he is prominent in civil life. For a short history of his career and a description of a beaker made by him, see Met. Museum of Art Cat. of Exhibition of Silver used in N. Y., N. J., and the South (1914), xviii, 32.

Jan. 21 Capt. John Manning, in an address to Andros in defence of his surrender to the Dutch (see July 30/Aug. 9, 1673), relates that he had a private audience with the king on Jan. 11, 1674; that, on being blamed by the king "for sending 3 persons aboard ye Enemies Ships," he replied "that it was in hopes to have Stopped the ship one Tide and in that time expected ye Governr or more assistance in ye fort." In reply to several questions asked by the king, Manning answered that the fort had four bastions, each bastion defended by ten guns, and "to ye Best of his memory" the length of "ye Curtin" was "40 paces or upward." He gave the number of the garrison as "70 or 80," whereupon the king turned to the Duke of York and said: "Brother, the ground could not be maintained with so few Men."—Doc. Hist. N. Y., (4to ed.), III, 53-54. See Jan. 29, Addenda.

Capt. Manning petitions Andros and "the rest of his Maties officers now assembled with him in Court Marshal for "Mercy and Clemency." He pleads "the weakness of ye Strength," the apprehension regarding enemies within the city, the powerful enemy without, the fact of his "being wholly left without advice or Council and hauing but eighteen bowers before the Enemy came to attack us," also the "great discouragement and dismayng Capt. Carr gau to our Men when he came from aboard the ships he sayning how great their strength was & that we was not able to withstand them, and his not Returning when he went to make Condictions All which undue surprisall occasioned strange amaze- masts disorders and Confusion Amongst the men as to our Insuffi- ciency for defence."—Doc. Hist. N. Y., (4to ed.), III, 54. Under the same date appears a list of "Persons summoned to Apare before ye Governr about ye Axamination of Capt' Jo Manning."—Ibid., III, 55. For the charges against Manning, see Feb. 2, Addenda.

Feb. 2 Articles (or complaints) of this date against Capt. Manning show:

1. First, That on or about the 28th day of July 1673 the said Capt. John Manning having a Notice of a Fleet of Enemies ships coming into the Bay, Hee did not endeavour as hee ought, nor put the Garrison in such a fitting posture of Defence as hee might, and slighted such as proffer'd their service.

2. That on or on the 30th day of July the said Fleet of Enemies being under Staten Island at Anchor, Hee the said Capt. John Manning treacherously sent on board to treat with them, to the encouragement of the said Enemy, and discouragement of the Garrison.

3. That upon the same 30th day of July hee suffer'd the said Enemies with their Fleet to come & moare their ships under the Fort without firing at them which he forbid upon paine of death.

4. That some time after the Enemies fleet being so moared, Hee suffer'd them to send their boats on shore loads with men and ordnance.

5. That a while after having sent out several times to treat with the Enemy, hee strooke his Maties Flagg before the Enemy (that had Landed) were in sight of the Fort, though the fort were in a conchon and all the Garrison desirous to fight.

6. That he treacherously caused the Gate to be open'd and cowardly and basely lett in the Enemy and yielded them his Maties Fort without articles, unlesse to himselfe.—Doc. Hist. N. Y., (4to ed.), III, 55, 56. For Manning's answer to these charges, see Ibid., III, 57-58. See also the "Exact Acco of all the Proceedings, of the Military Officers of Fort James from ye 20th & 29th of July, 1673."—Ibid., III, 59-52. The last named document gives all the circumstances in detail connected with the surrender of the fort. Added to these records are "Divers Orders Issued by Capt. Manning" at that time.—Ibid., III, 62-65. For the decision of the court martial, see Feb. 5, Addenda.

The court-martial finds Capt. Manning guilty of neglect of duty and cowardice, but acquits him of the charge of treachery. He is sentenced "to be carried back to prison, and from thence brought out to the publick place before the City Hall, there to have his sword broken over his head, and from that time he rendered incapable of wearing a sword or serving His Majesty in any publick employ or place of benefit and trust within this Government."—Brodhead, etc., p. 276.

There were three Oyster Islands.—See Oct. 1, 1691, and Col. Apr. Laws N. Y., I, 1: 267, One was Bellow's Island.—See Aug. 10, 1670. Another was Ellis Island.—See Dec. 6, 1661, and Stevens' British Headquarters Map of 1782 (Pl. 50, Vol. I). The third of the three Oyster Islands (all of which are shown along the "Oyster Bank" on Pl. 174-5, Vol. I) is named Oyster Island on maps of a quarter century ago, but is now a submerged rock, and is shown on the Coast & Geodetic Survey chart, No. 541, as "Rk. awash."—1679

It is recorded in the Minutes that "ye Elders and Descents of Feb. within this Government formerly have beene excused from the Com- mission of the Watch" (see Jan. 11, 1676.—M. C. G., I, 73. A petition for such exemption is recorded in the Mayors Court Minutes of Jan. 14.

Some time after this date (see Chronology), and prior to June 1866, Peter Jansen Mesier obtained a lot west of Broadway, where he erected a wind-mill. In 1686, according to a deed in the N. Y. Hist. Soc., the lot of one Lloyd is described as bounded on the north by a line leading to Mesier's wind-mill. Mesier sold his mill to Janetje, wife of Gysbert van Imbergh, in 1710. The mill appears on the Manuscript Map of 1735 (Pl. 30, Vol. I), and the "Old Wind-mill Lane" is especially well shown on Lyne's Survey (Pl. 27, Vol. I). The mill stood west of the modern Church St., between Liberty and Cortlandt Sts. In real estate records of 1699-50, property on Broadway was described as situated on the corner of "a lane formerly leading to the Windmill of Peter Jansen Mesier."—O'Callaghan, Notes on Windmills (MS.), in N. Y. Hist. Soc.

"A Mapp of Rariton River" was probably prepared in conjunction with the building of the town of Perth Amboy, N. J., and was perhaps intended (but not used) as an illustration for an English book bearing the date of the preceding year entitled: Proposal By The Proprieters Of East-Jersey in America, For the Building of a Town On Ambo-Point, And for the Disposition of Lands in that Province And Also For Encouragement of Artificers and Labourers that shall Transport themselves thither out of England, Scotland, and Ireland. London, Printed for Benjamin Clark in George-Tard in Lombard-street, Bookseller, MDCLXXXII.—See Catalogue No. 536 (Jan. 1921) of Bernard Quaritch, London, for reproduction of title-page of a copy. There is one other known copy, that in the John Carter Brown Library. See also, in same Catalogue, reproduction of A Brief Account Of the Province Of East-Jersey in America. Cornelis van Ruijven, formerly secretary of the Dutch province of New Netherland, makes a reply to inquiries instituted in Holland at the behest of James Bayard, of New York, for the behoof of William Penn, in the interest of determining the territorial jurisdiction of Penn. A extract of this letter, written from Amsterdam, is sent enclosed in Bayard's letter of Dec. 23, 1683 (q.v. in Addenda), and is as follows: "You will find in the Register of Bylages, in the old records in New Netherland, a narrative showing in Breda ye first discovery possession and purchase of ye Country of ye New Netherland [sic] and amongst ye Rest a deinition how far ye Limits of ye Company did Extend by Erecting of four forts, to say ye one at ye manatiacs, now New York, the other ye North [sic for on] Hudsons river and one ye South one [sic for on] Delaware river at ye voluntary on Connecticut River wth to my best Remembrance was in ye Year Anno 1628. Dongan issues the following order to the officers of the military companies: "You are hereby in your Royall Highnesses name required and ordered to use ye outmost endeavours and care that at the day of Eleccion none appear but freeholders." —Wm. Smith Papers (M.S.), folio 212.

Gov. Dongan and the council issue an order decreeing "that no person or persons whatsoever shall go on board any Shipp Vessel or Slope in this road from any foraine parts or neighbouring Plantations, until the Customhouse officer hath been on board, and brought the Commander on Shore and presented him to the Governor." —Wm. Smith Papers (M.S.), folio 212.

Nicholas Bayard, in a letter of this date, gives the result of his inquiries he has made in New York among old residents as to the origin of the settlements in New Netherland. This inquiry was instituted for the behoof of William Penn, with the purpose of determining his territorial jurisdiction. Bayard says he found, concerning these old persons, that "ye most having been private persons & without publick Employ, can likewise give noe Account wth right ye Dutch formerly had in ye parts of Delaware only ye they had possession & buil[f]t forts there Long before the 30 of June 1626 and ye customs Bayard, of New York, is to be found from Cornelis van Ruijven, former provincial secretary of New Netherland, written from Amsterdam, April 13/23, 1683 (q.v. supra), relative to his inquiries in Holland in the same matter.—Wm. Penn MSS., vol. on three counties, 1629-1774, pp. 1-21, in Hist. Soc. of Pa.

— Apparently the location of the first Lutheran church (Pluvier's house), near the wall, was never changed, the impression that its location was moved from outside to inside the wall doubtless being due to the fact that the wall itself, which in all probability originally ran south of Pluvier's house, was rebuilt, probably in 1658 or 9 (q.v. under May 25, 1658), north of his house, in the position shown on the Castello Plan of 1660 (Pl. 52, Vol. II). See also Oct. 13, 1655, June 16, 1657; June 16, 1673; May 22, 1674; Mar. 25, Nov. 8, 1675, 1676.

The "Oath of a Grand Juror," as prescribed by the "General Quarter Sessions," is as follows:

"You shall diligently Enquire and true Presentment make of all Such things and matters as shall be given you in Charge Or Shall Come to your Knowledge this Present Service The Kings his Royall Highness Lord Proprietor and this City Councell yow follows and yow own. You shall well and Truely keep Secret. You shall Present nothing for Malace, or Evil Will that you Bare to Any Person Neither shall you Leave any thing unpresented for. Lose, faveration Affectio Reward Or Any hopes therev. In all things that shall Concerne this Present Service you shall Present the truth the whole truth and nothing but the truth According to yow best Skill and knowledge.

"So help you God.

—From the first two pages (unnumbered) of the first volume of the court of general sessions, whose vellum cover bears the inscription General Sessions of the Peace, held for the City and County of New York, begvn the fifth day of February Anno, 1683/4.

City ordnance tried to prevent middlemen from Mar raising prices and monopolizing profits, following any one in Mar privetly provisions that were being brought in to market, to buy in the market with intent to sell there at retail again, or to purchase in bulk from the farmer before his crops were gathered. These offenses, called "fastelling," "regreting," and "engrossing," had been penalized in England at least as early as the days of the Tudors. Like many other minor ordinances issued in New York, these about New York show, as clearly as do the major ordinances of its governors, the Duke's Laws, and the enactments of the first assembly, that while the governors themselves were untrained in civil administration some of their advisers were thoroughly conversant with the laws and customs of the mother-country, and exercised good judgment in deciding when it might be well to introduce them and when it would be better to preserve the old Dutch ways and rules. —Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II, 377.

A council held at Fort James, on Nov. 25, 1685, an agreement was concluded between Gov. Dongan and Gov. Treat to settle the boundary line between New York and Connecticut.—Pub. Recs. of Conn., III: 350-35. The surveyors appointed to run the line now make a report of their work.—Ibid., III: 357-358. On Feb. 18, 1685, Dongan wrote to Gov. Treat on February 18th, 1685, to the effect that he would in his next correspondence inform Gov. Treat of the survey of the line just completed by the surveyors. —Pub. Recs. of Conn., III: 383-39. The agreement between the colonies was re-affirmed in a representation from the lords of trade to the king on March 13, 1700, which he approved the following day. On March 18, 1700, it was confirmed at the court at Kennington. Its terms are entered in full in N. Y. Col. Docs., IV: 645-65; Bowen, Boundary Dispute of Conn. (1883), 71 et seq. For earlier references to the dispute, see N. T. Col. Docs., XIV: 685, and Cal. Hist. MSS, Eng. 43.

The salary of the "Towne Clerk" or the "Clerke of this City" is fixed at £20 per year, salary £10. I: 155. One of the fewbetter salaried municipal officials, the marshal, received £710 annually.—Ibid., I: 354. The clerk's salary was doubled Oct. 12, 1695, because of his "Diligence," and the "Small Encouragement he has by the multitude of business which he does ex officio." —Ibid., I: 356. See Appendix IV, in Peterson & Edwards, N. T. At an 18th Cent. Municipalities, fine and small contempt rendered by Wm. Sharpes after this increase had been granted.

English Smith, the marshal in 1695, complained to the common council that "he found it impossible to Live by A Dependancy on ye Present Sallary," and his compensation was increased to £40 per year.—M. G. C., I: 390.

Such compensation as the mayor received came from fees from two chief sources, viz. issuing licenses to freemen and tavern-keepers, and sealing weights and measures. The treasurer received a commission on moneys collected and expended.—See Oct. 19, 1655.

Aug. 23. — William Dyre, and Mary, his wife, convey to Thomas Lloyd a lot outside the north gate of New York City, on the west side of the road or highway, beginning at the corner of the way or passage "leading to the mill of Peter Jansen Mesier," thence south along said road to the churchyard or burial-place as the fence of said Dyre now stands, 468 ft.; thence west on a direct line as the fence of said churchyard or burial-place stands to the Hudson River, 66 feet, and so along the water side, 468 ft.; bounded on the right side by the land of P. Mesier, and thence west or passage that leads to his mill, to said road or highway where it first began, 676 ft., all English measure.— Liber Deeds, XIII: 202-10.

In 1719, Peter Jansen Mesier deeded this mill, which he had erected west of Broadway prior to April 23, 1686 (p. 4), to Janettie, wife of Gysbert van der Emgher.— *Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 601. The mill appears on the Manuscript Map of 1755 (PL 30, Vol. I) to the road, or "Old Windmill Lane," is shown and named on Lyne's survey (PL 27, Vol. I). The mill stood west of the modern Church St., between Liberty and Cortlandt Sts. In real estate records of 1749-54, property on Broadway was described as situated on the corner of a lane formerly leading to the Windmill of Peter Jansen Mesier." — O'Callaghan, Notes on Windmills (MS.), in N. Y. Hist. Soc.

May 29. — The councilors, all named by the King [in Dongan's instructions] and now technically the king's councilors, were Brockholis, who retained his rank as commander-in-chief to succeed the governor in case of his death, Philipse and Van Cortlandt, Santen and Spragge, John Young of Long Island and Jarvis Baxter; but Dongan thought best not to swear in Santen the collector as he was subject to fits of hypochondria and unable to attend to business.— Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 313.

June 30. — At a council held at Fort James, Gov. Dongan and deputies from New York, New Jersey, and West Jersey, agree upon the course to be pursued in running the boundary lines of the three provinces.— *N. J. Archives, 1st. ser., III: 517-18. The points on the Hudson rivers were subsequently determined; but nothing further was done for several years, and nearly a century elapsed before the line was definitely settled."—Winson, op. cit., III: 442. For the subsequent history of the controversy, see Cal. Coun. Min., 56, 269, 270, 272, 273, 275, 276, 279; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 355, 445, 665; *Assem. Gov. Dongan informs Major Winthrop, of Connecticut, that "his Majesty in his last instructions to mee has ordered that all people that pretend to any land within this Government should make settlement and pay acknowledge and no title to stand good but such as do so. Therefore I think it necessary ye take some care as soon as ye can about ye matter of Concerns on Long Island." — Winthrop Papers, XII: 135, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

At a meeting of the governor's council, "It is thought necessary that the breastwork in ye fort beye by degrees repared & that ye Chimneyes decayed may bee pulled down & renewed." — N. Y. Col. MSS., XXXVI: 54a (Albany).

Dongan writes to the king: "Since Judge Palmer went out Oct. 20 or about Sept. 8.— N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 475-77, I received a letter from the Earl of Tyrconnel, wherein he lets me know that it will be requisite for your Majesty's service that I go home." He calls the king's attention to reports he has already sent to the lords of the treasury, explaining: "I am much in debt with the people here, and your Majestie to me, and no ways left for paying it if Connetcuitt be not joyned to this Government... Yet I had not owed so much to the people here, if Mr Santen the late Collector had not embezzled three thousand pounds of the Revenue" (see Feb. 23 and 25). He asks that £5,300 be delivered to Benjamin Bathurst, "to be remitted hither, which I believe will satisfy all ye Debts I have bin forced to contract here." — Ibid., III: 492. Richard Talbot, Earl of Tyrconnel, was Dongan's uncle.— Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 323.

In June, the king had directed Andros to bring Connecticut and Rhode Island within the territory and dominion of New England, but Andros had not done so when Dongan sent his letter of Oct. 24 to the king— Ibid., III: 324. "Governor Andros was now completing the consolidation of the king's great New England province. Visiting Hartford, he took over the government of Connecticut on November 1, and its charter, says the famous story, was hidden away in a hollow oak tree, to be brought forth again on a more fortunate day."— Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 325. See, further, Nov. 27.

Dongan, writing from Albany to the "Lord President" of the privy council (the Earl of Sunderland), says, among other things, regarding the revenue necessary to protect the frontiers against the French: "It is this Government must be ye Bulkewark to Boston, which is not at the fourth part ye charge New York is, and her ten times the Revenue, Connecticut is added [to the Massachusetts government] by ye fraud of ye Governoe & ye Clerk unknown to ye rest of ye general Court, and for one that wishes it as it is, there is a hundred in that Colony that Desyres it were annexed to ye Government of N. Y."— N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 511; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y., II: 311.

Winson's statement (Nov. 27, 1687, Hist. of Am., III: 400) Aug. that, Andros having issued a proclamation here on Aug. 24 (p. 4), New York thereby was "formally recognized as the metropolis and the seat of government in the Dominions of New England," 25 is misleading. On leaving New York (see Oct. 4), Andros ordered the records of New York province transferred to Boston.—See below;
1688 see also Jan. 7, 1690. Mrs. Van Rensselaer’s observations clearly define the relation borne by this province to the government of New England:

New York was now also to use the flag recently bestowed upon New Hampshire. The English flag bore at that time only the cross of St. George, the diagonal St. Andrew’s cross of Scotland being added when the legislative union of the two kingdoms was effected in 1707; and the colonial ensign was a square flag with a St. George’s cross, red on a white ground, in the centre of the cross a royal crown and beneath it the ensign of the mother order, the Hanoverian government but also preserved much practical inconvenience, provided that the public papers of all the colonies now united should be removed to Boston and that all deeds and wills should there be registered.

On August 15 Sir Edmund took over the government of East Jersey, authorizing the governor, Andrew Hamilton, to act as his deputy, and on the 18th the government of West Jersey. Thus the name New England was extended from the St. Croix River at the northeast to Delaware Bay at the southwest. In no part of this wide Dominion had the people any secured political rights or liberties except the right, always understood in regard to the colonies, to be governed by laws not repugnant to those of England, and the liberty, specially bestowed by their Catholic king upon all excepting Catholics, to worship God in Jesus Christ as their consciences might counsel. The New Englanders were, indeed, permitted to elect their local officials in town-meeting, but merely by the terms of the charter, to endure, and were officials it depended whether or not the cities and towns of New York should retain their charters.

The pride of New York was deeply outraged by these changes, its political aspirations were blighted, its material prosperity was thought to be seriously threatened. Sadly Colonel Dongan, the city magistrates, and the people must have regretted their loud and frequent lamentations over the weakness of the province, their reiterated outcries that it would perish were its borders not enlarged; for they can hardly have understood the ideas and aims of James Stuart well enough to feel that the result would have been the same had they never spoken; and, indeed, there is evidence that their pleadings actually hardened although they did not determine the course of the king.

Some years later the city magistrates, addressing the governor of the time, spoke of "The unhappy annexation to New England whereby our traffic not only drooped but all that was dear and valuable among us wholly destroyed." And the conservative party in New York laid all the troubles of the so-called "Leiser Rebellion," which began in 1689 and lasted for two years, to the charge of this "miserable union," this "curse upon mind and property." Thus it had been saying that it had enabled the people of the eastern colonies to poison with seditions and anti-monarchical doctrines their neighbors of New York who until then had been quietly loyal. Such words showed little appreciation of what had been the real temper of New York in 1689, but their very exaggeration gives a measure of the effect that this had produced in 1688. Exaggerated or not, the admonitions acted as a warning to others. But last some being threatened by the said Lieutenant Governor Nicho- lson we were resolved to expect with patience our Redemption from England, expecting to have part of that blessed and glorious Deliverance procured under God, by his Royal Highness, William Henry, Prince of Orange, but when we were challenged our Liberty, Property, and the Laws, we were cap; and terrified out of our Reason; but at last some being threatened by the said Lieutenant Governor Nicholson, and with a Pistol presented against the Corporal, and said to the Lieutenant Cuyler, that he would set the City on fire, for doing our Loyal Duty; We have thought fit, for our Conservation, and fear, to be lyable to answer for the Life of every Protestant that might have perished, and every House burnt or destroyed, if we had remained longer in Security: And also seeing daily Arrive from several Ports, Officers and Soldiers, who were entertained by the said Lieutenant Governor Nicholson, and several Soukiers, of which there was a Number of Papists, contrary to the Law of England; by which New-comers, some of the Burgers being threatened of some Design against them in few days, we thought Delays dangerous, so we have unanimously resolved to live no longer in such a Danger, but to secure the Fort better which we have under God, with success, without Resistance and Blood- shed, effected: And we Declare to be entirely and openly opposite to Papists and their Religion; and therefore expecting Orders from England, we shall Keep and Guard surely and faithfully the said Fort, in the behalf of the Power that now have a right to settle in England, the several Officers and the Personnel of the Protestant Religion, that shall be Nominated, or Sent by the Power above said.

These are our most sincere Intentions, that we are glad to manifest, as well to the Power above said, that God hath pleased...

"New York, the last of May, 1689.

The "Testimony of Hendrick Cuyler," which follows this, is as follows: "Hendrick Cuyler, Lieutenant to the Company of Captain Abraham de Peyster, Aged about Fifty Two Years; Deposeth, That on the Thirtieth Day of May last past, he commanding half a Company of the Train Bands, in going from New-York, gave Order to one of his Corporals, to place a Sentinel at a certain Sally-port in the said Fort; but that the said Corporal returning, Declared to him the Deponent, That the Corporal of the Kings Soldiers in pay in the said Fort, would not suffer him to place a Sentinel there; And that afterwards, the Lieutenant Governor, Captain Nicholson the then Commander in Chief, returning to the Fort, sent for him the said Deponent to come to him in his Chamber in the said Fort, which he the said Deponent did, and desired his Corporal Hendrick Jacobs to go along with him, because he the said Corporal could speak better English; And that as soon as the said Deponent was come up into the said Chamber, he called for his said Corporal, who followed him to come into the Chamber, which he did, and that as soon as the said Lieutenant Governor saw the said Corporal, he rose up in a passion, and said to the Corporal, "You Rascal, what do you here?" With that the said Corporal returned Answer, That he came only to Interpret to him the said Deponent: Whereupon he the said Lieutenant Governor, took down a Pistol that hung by the wall, and threatened to shoot him the said Corporal, and drove him out of the Room; And that afterwards the said Deponent remaining still in the said Room alone with the said Lieutenant Governor, the said Lieutenant Governor told him the said Deponent, That there were so many Rogues in the Town, that he was not sure of his Life, nor to walk the Streets; And that the said Lieutenant Governor further said, That before it should longer go after this manner, he would set the Town on Fire: And further he said not.

The Present State of New English Affairs, of which two copies only are known, one in the Massachusetts archives, and one belonging to the author. This was really a "news-letter," in printed form.—See Green, Ten Facsimile Reproductions (Boston, Oct., 1909) Weeks and Bacon, An Historical Digest of the Provincial News (1911) 21. Had its publication been continued, it could properly have been styled the first American newspaper, a distinction which some, even as it is, consider its own.

There is a hiatus in the Minutes of the Common Council, as recorded in the volumes in the custody of the city clerk, from this date to March 24, 1691. In the appendix of Vol. VIII to the printed series, minutes of two meetings, on March 22 and Apr. 26, 1690, are printed, which the editors say were discovered among some detached papers (Cf. G. C. Vii, 169-172). In connection with researches undertaken for this work, the minutes of another meeting have been found. See Aug. 9.

Apr. 24

The following memorandum is made "for my 1st Presidt" of the committee of trade and plantations: "The Records belonging to the Province of New York having been removed to Boston upon uniting the Colonies of New England to that Province the Right Hon. the Lords of the Committee for Trade & Plantations desire My Lord President to Move His Maj's Orders that May be given for retuming those Records to New York upon the present altereads of those Governm'ts."—From public record office, London (cited C. O. 5. 1681. No. 124).

This conference of colonial governors at New York, respecting the safety of the colonies, may be considered the first American congress. They decided to attempt the conquest of Canada, by a force descending Lake Champlain, and another sailing from Boston for Quebec. Cf. July 30, 1684.

The following "Council Chamber" memorandum is made in London: "My Lord President is desired to represent to His Maj's, by the Lords of the Committee for Trade and Plantations the condition of the Province of New York as it is at present under no legal or Settled Government being in the hands of one Leider a Walloon, who has set himself at the head of the Nbke. And that the French, by the last Informations have made an Insurrection into that Province and burnt one of the Forts. So that unless the Arch-Angell, the Convoy that has been appointed or some other be not Ordered to go immediately thither with Colonel Sloughter, the Stores and the two Foot Companies, That Province will in all probability be lost, and the People there now under such a great Confusion, or under the Power of the French."—From public record office, London (cited C. O. 5. 1113, pp. 255-256).

Records of a common council meeting of this date have recently been discovered among detached papers in the custody of the city clerk. Former regulations concerning servants and relating to the sale of liquor to Indians or slaves are reiterated to a large extent. The number of men is fixed at 24, and a ten-pit belonging to "a Certain Person Called Jno Vroom" is ordered to be removed. The activities of the body at this particular meeting are not so very important, but the discovery of this and the other detached papers previously mentioned (see Jan. 29) lead to the conclusion that the common council continued to be active throughout the Leider régime, even though the military power predominated.

Sept. 25

Until the first of the two known copies of The Present State of New English Affairs (see 1689, Oct.) came to light, Public Occurrences, the first issue of which appeared on this day, was regarded as the earliest news publication of the English colonies in the Western Hemisphere. This issue of Public Occurrences was not only the first but the only issue which appeared. It was the first attempt to start a newspaper in the colonies, for undoubtedly the printer intended to continue it regularly, but it fell under the ban of the government, and was immediately stopped.—Diary of Samuel Sewall, I: 312-33. The only known copy of this publication is in the Public Record Office, London.—Weeks and Bacon, Hist. Digest of Prov. Press, 24-25.

A Dutch letter written by Godfrieds Dellung, written from New York by N. Bayard and Brandt Schuyler, they say: "Many poor people, mostly English who came here urged by their needs for a cold winter, are woefully pressed, and the goods are again drawn out of the stores . . . how the winter will end, if no governor comes, God knows."—Winthrop Papers, XV: 125, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

The entries in Ledger No. 1 of the dept. of finance of the city of New York two from 1691 to 1699, inclusive; those in Ledger No. 2, from Nov., 1700 to May, 1703, and those in Ledger No. 3, from June, 1760 to Oct., 1772. The original volumes have been temporarily deposited in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. Ledger No. 1 is printed in the society's Collections for 1909.

The first session of the general assembly under Gov. Sloughter begins, and this is the first date of record found in the Assemb. Jour. III, 143-144. In connection with researches undertaken for this work, the minutes of another meeting have been found. See Aug. 9.

Apr. 23

Between this day and the end of this year, 18 provincial laws were enacted; some of the more important are mentioned under their several dates in the Chronology. During 1692, 12 laws were added; and in 1693, to the time of the arrival of William Bradford,

The printer, whose appointment was made on April 10 (p. 1.), 3 more laws were added (passed on April 10), there being only one other passed that year, in September. The laws are arranged chronologically, and numbered consecutively by chapters.—Col. Laws N. Y., I: 235; Woolley, Early Hist. of the Colonial P., 25-53.

A committee of the common council is appointed to let the old market-house next the bridge; also the new (Broad St.) market-house, which is allowed "to be made Shambles or any otherwise."—M. G. C., I: 1265. The last provision concludes the resolution of July 9, 1691 (q.v.), which did not allow butchers' meat to be sold at the new market-house. See July 24, 1738; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 936, and Pl. 174, Vol. III.

The name are ordered by the court of general sessions to "Repair the Highways between the said City and the Freshwater, particularly that part that lies opposite Mr. Beeckman's Garden, as Mr. Beeckman shall direct them."—Min. of Gen. Sessions Court (MS.), Nov. 1, 1692. Many items in these minutes show the court's authority over highway repairs.

Regarding Bradford's relations with the Quakers in Philadelphia, we know that he was amicably released from his contract with them on April 29, 1692. The record reads:

"Monthly Meeting 2 Month, 29, 1692," William Bradford proposing to this Meeting that if Friends saw it fitting he desired to be discharged from the engagement between Friends and him concerning the Press. Friends having considered the matter are very willing the said Bradford should be free so far as regards this Meeting. And the Meeting appoints Samuel Carpenter, Robert Woolley, and Alexander Beardsley to collect what is subscribed and due for the time past within the limits of this Meeting and pay the same to William Bradford and bring an account thereof to the next Monthly Meeting."—From John William Wallace's Address delivered at the Celebration by the N. Y. Hist. Soc., May 20, 1865, of the 200th birthday of Mr. William Bradford. . . . (Albany, 1865), 61.

Although the Quakers, after committing Bradford and McComb to jail on Aug. 3, 1692, "took away a good quantity of W. Bradford's Letters [types], tending to the disabling of him to work for his Wife and Children; and upon pretense of another Warrant granted without any Conviction, signed by Samuel Jennings & Robert Ewer Justices, John White, the Sheriff, took Goods out of the Shop of Will. Bradford half as much more as the said Warrant was for," and although Bradford, during the trial on Dec. 20, 1692,"told the Court, That seeing he had been so long detained Prisoner, and his Utenils with which he should work having been so long detained, he hoped now to have his Utenils returned, & to be discharged from his Imprisonment," and the court refused to grant either request (New England's Spirit of Persecution, New York, 1693), we know that Bradford's press continued work while he was in jail five years, and that he signed his name as an editor in Philadelphia, in 1685.—Hildeburn, Issues of the Penn. Press, 1654-1784.

Samuel Jennings, one of the justices who signed the warrant for the arrest of Bradford and McComb, makes the following statement in regard to their imprisonment:

"I shall give my Reader one Instance by which he may judge of the hard usage that John M'Comb and William Bradford met with during their Confinement, which they represent as very close and cruel (though, saith the Libeller p. 11 of that Book of the Tryal, etc.), to go without their Food, every one their due, while the Goler was so kind as to let him, viz. J. M. go home an Hour or two sometimes in an Evening after it was dark, etc. This Deceit is too great to pass unrevenged, had he or his Companions only the favour of a few Hours Liberty in an Evening after it was dark. I have heard John White say, and believe it to be true, that he offered them upon their first coming in, if they would promise to come to him upon notice given them, they might go about their Business till then, which they would not accept at that time, (no doubt for this reason, that they might have it to say that they were in Prison) but soon after their Stomachs fell, and they accepted his offer, and I believe they were never by him restrained more, and to my certain Knowledge they had their Liberty most of the time they bespake themselves to be under such hard usage.—From preface of Samuel Jennings's The State of the Case Briefly but Impartially given between the People called Quakers . . . And George Keith. . . . (London, 1694).

No reference to Jennings's statements is found in a book written.
of MANHATTAN ISLAND

by Keith entitled Some Brief Remarks upon a late Book, entitled, George Keith once more brought to the Test; or, having the Name of Caleb Pusey of Philadelphia, with which (being which) the Spirit of building Shimei, &c. [New York, 1705] saith, Upon application made by William Bradford and John M'Comb, to Governour Fletcher, for enlargement from their Imprisonment, he examined into the cause of their Commitment and finding it was upon a Religious difference, discharged them, &c. I do hereby certify, being one of the Persons above-named, that G. K.'s Relation abovesaid is false. For we say William Bradford and John M'Comb, were both set at Liberty, from the said imprisonment, before ever Governour Fletcher, came into his Government of Pennsylvania And I do Certify, that I never made Application to him, that my Brother Fletcher, and any other Person under him, for my Liberty. Witness my hand,

"John M'Comb."

"When the Book of C. P. (with this printed Certificate) came to my hands, I was then in East-Jersey and bound for New-York, and could not answer it. I shewed the said Certificate to W. Bradford (the other Person concerned) who admired not a little at the falseness of it, and said, he believed that some designing Person had drawn J. M'Comb to sign that Certificate unawares, as (he says) he has known the Qns. some time have drawn up Certificates and offered them to persons to sign, and who sometimes by that means have certified false things, as J. M. has in this case; and the said W. B. offered to give his Certificate to the contrary of what J. M. has certified, a Copy of which Certificate follows at the end of this Book. Also I write to Mr. Talbot, who was about that time at Philadelphia, to go to J. M'Comb and enquire of him the case of the matter, & take his answer before Witnesses, person of Credit, which accordingly he did, and is as followeth,

"Mr. Evans, Mr. J. Carpenter, Mr. N. Pease, and my self, went to John M'Comb, who as to the particular of his being set at liberty, said, It was before Coll. Fletcher came into the Province. But the Question being put to him, Who cleared White, the Sheriff, bid him go home, & come again when he call for him; and upon the death of White [cf. Bradford's statement, infra] he looked upon himself discharged, tho' never acquitted by the course of Law, but only enlarged upon Parol.

Bradford's affidavit, which is printed at the end of the book, is very explicit of the state of his confinement during the period when he was under arrest. It reads:

"Whereas in a late Book of Caleb Pusey's it is certified that William Bradford & John M'Comb were both discharged from their Imprisonment before Coll. Fletcher came to Philadelphia with the King and Queens Commission and took the Government out of the Quakers hands.

These are to Certifie all whom it may concern, That John M'Comb and my self being imprisoned by the Quakers, we made application several times to the Quaker Magistrates for our enlargement but could not obtain it. Whereupon according to Governor Fletcher's coming to that Province, George Keith made application to him for our enlargement, and I my self made application by my Petition to said Governour Fletcher, (to which J. M'Comb was privy) whereupon the Governour appointed a Committee of the Government to examine into the cause of our Imprisonment, who made Report, That it was occasioned by a Religious Difference, and was not concerning the Government. Then I was sent for before the Governor and Council, and the Governour asked me several Questions concerning our Imprisonment. To which having answered, I was ordered to withdraw. In a little time I was called in again, and Governour Fletcher told me, That he thought our Imprisonment was occasioned by a Religious Difference, and therefore had ordered that I and my fellow Prisoner should be discharged. For which I return'd him Thanks. I also requested the favour that he would please to order my Printing Tools to be restored to me, which had been taken away from me. Whereupon the Governour sent for John White [vide supra], the Sheriff, and ordered him to Return my said Tools, which were lodg'd in Samuel Jenning's House. From this time we were discharged from our Imprisonment, and not before. To the Truth of this I can depose upon Oath if required. Witness my hand this 27th of March, 1704.

"William Bradford."

As the above facts are supplied by the principal parties in interest and by other competent contemporary witnesses, it is only possible to reconcile the contradictions by assuming that one side or the other is guilty of prevarication. In this connection it seems hardly likely that Bradford, while occupying a conspicuous public office, would have failed to publish a statement over his own signature to the effect that he was actually imprisoned up to the time of his formal release or immediately after April 25, if he had come to New York and taken up his work as government printer on April 10. It seems as though it should be possible to clear up this mystery by a thorough examination of contemporary records and authorities.

The question of priority of publication among the twenty-five known imprints from Bradford's press which Mr. Eames lists as belonging to this first year of printing in New York City is difficult to determine, and has been much mooted. There are known to be published, in the Bulletin of the N. Y. Pub. Library, the results of searching studies, made by Mr. Eames, regarding the internal evidence contained in the known Bradford publications of 1693, with the aid of all available external evidence on the subject, to determine, as nearly as possible, the order of printing, etc. The reader is referred to this article as containing the latest and most authoritative statement of the known facts regarding the introduction of printing in New York.

The inducements which brought Bradford to New York, as indicated by the resolution adopted by the provincial council on March 25 (q. v.), were that, "for printing of Our Acts of Assembly & publick papers," he should be allowed, as government printer, a salary of £40 per annum, "& have the benefit of his printing besides what serve the publick." According to this resolution, the public documents were to be his first and chief concern.

Of the extant Bradford imprints, the following acts, etc. must have been ready to print when he came to New York:

An Act for Restraining and Punishing Printers and Pyrates, passed Sept. 10, 1692 (printed in two issues, 3 pp. each, no colophon);

An Act for Granting to their Majesties the Rate of One Penny per Pound upon all the Real and Personal Estates within this Province, passed Nov. 12, 1692 (4 pp., no colophon);

An Act for raising six Thousand Pound for the payment of three Hundred Volunteers, passed April 10, 1693 (two issues, 6 pp. each, with complete colophons—see Pl. 21);

Bradford's proclamation of his commission during the period when he was under arrest. It reads:

The address of the Freetholders of Philadelphia (3 pp.). It appears likely that one of the six pieces mentioned above has the distinction of being the first product of a printing-press in this city; although as more than thirty acts had been passed before Bradford's arrival, it is of course possible that one of these, now lost, may have been printed earlier. Of the Narrative of an Attempt made by the French of Canada upon the Mohawks Country . . . A Journal kept by Coll. Nicholas Beyard and Lieut. Col. Charles Labrecque (the only known copy of which was discovered by Miss Hasse in the Public Record Office, London) (14 pp.); and the Address of the Freetholders of Philadelphia (3 pp.).

Inasmuch as A Journal kept by coll. Stephen Courland and Coll. Nich. Beyard (Pl. 21), the only known copy of which was discovered by Mr. Eames, in 1918, in the catalogue of Bibliothèque Nationale, records events which transpired in Albany in June and the early part of July, 1693, which dates also appear on the title-page, it can not have been ready for printing until long after Bradford's arrival.
The complete list of Bradford's known imprints for the year 1693, as prepared by Mr. Eames, and arranged alphabetically, is as follows:

*An Account of several Passages and Letters between his Excellency Benjamin Fletcher, . . . And the present Administrators, of the Laws in the Colony of Connecticut, . . . (6 pp.)

*An Exhortation & Caution to Friends Concerning buying or keeping of Negroes. (6 pp.) This is sometimes called “the first protest against slavery printed in America.”

Fletcher, Proclamation, 29 April 1693, on the Sabbath. (Broadside.) Mr. Eames places this item among the 1693 imprints principally on the assumption that Bradford moved to New York on April 10, although it is of course possible, indeed probable, that it was printed there even if he did not arrive before May or June.

Fletcher, Proclamation, 25 August 1693, on the erection of fire beacons to give warning of invasions by the French. (Broadside.)

Fletcher, Proclamation, 8 November 1693, to the people of Connecticut, urging them to “yield and render an intire Obsequity unto their Majesties most Gracious Commission.” (Broadside.)

Fletcher, Proclamation, 1 November 1695, to deserters from the army and navy, and travellers and others without passas. (Broadside.)

Fletcher, An Act relating to Officers, 6 June 1693, announcing that license has been given to collect money to redeem the slaves in Sale. (Broadside.)

Fletcher, To all Officers, 8 June 1693, on captives. (Broadside.)

Fletcher, To all Officers, 8 June 1693. (Diffs from proceeding.) A Journal kept by Coll. Stephen Courland and Coll. Nich. Boyd, . . . appointed by the council to attend Eli’s Excellency Benjamin Fletcher, captain general and governor in chief of the province of New York . . . to Albany, in treating with the Indians of the two Nations and Rivals of those of that province, in the months of June and July, 1693. . . (15 pp.)

Mr. Lancaster’s Queries to the Quakers. (Fragment, 3 pp.)

*A Narrative Of an Attempt made by the French of Canada upon the Mohagen Country, . . . (14 pp.)

New England’s Spirit of Persecution Transmitted to Pennsylvania,. (38 pp.) See 1694.

New York, An Act for granting to their Majesties the Rate of One Penny per Pound on all the Real and Personal Estates within this Province. (4 pp.)

New York, An Act for raising six Thousand Pound for the payment of three Hundred Volunteers, and their Officers. (In two issues, 6 pp. each.)

New York, A Catalogue of Free Established by the Governor and Company of Common Plantations of that Province, was printed after Sept. 20, 1693, for it was sent by the assembly to the governor and council, for their action, on that day (see Moore’s Intro. of Printing into N. Y.).

New York City, *Humble Address of the Mayor, Recorder, Aldermen and Commonalty. (Broadside.)

Pennsylvania, An Act for granting One Penny per Pound. (4 pp.)

Philadelphia, The Address of some of the Peaceable and well Affected Free-holders and Inhabitants. (3 pp.)

Primer and Catechism for Children. (Fragment, 8 pp.)

In this year, Benjamin Harris, of Boston, printed a catalogue of the library of the Rev. Samuel Lee, which was offered for sale. Evans refers to this (No. 645) as “Perhaps the earliest work of its kind printed in the Colonies.” For the earliest known book-sale catalogue printed in New York, see 1755.

The Ministry Act was the direct outcome of secret instructions given to Fletcher at Kensington, March 7, 1692. The part of these instructions relating to religion directed, among other things, that the Colony be allowed to be ruled that the Church be administered “according to the Rites of the Church of England;” that the “Churches already built there [the crown possessions in America] be well and orderly kept, and more built as the Colony shall by God’s blessing be improved and that besides a competent Maintenance to be assigned to the Minister of each Orthodox Church a convenient house be built at the Common Charge for each Minister and a competent proportion of land assigned for him for a Glebe and exercise of his industry; also that to each Minister he be preferred by you to any ecclesiastical Benefice in that our Province, without a certificate from the Right Reverend the Bishop of London, of his being conformable to the doctrine and discipline of the Church of England. . . .” While these provisions clearly meant making the Church the established church of the province, the instructions nevertheless permitted “a liberty of Conscience to all persons (except Papists).”—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 812-23

Fletcher made the establishment of the ministry his first duty by recommending it in his opening address to the provincial legislature (see Sept. 26, 1692); but so reluctant were the dissenters, who composed the greater part of the assembly, to support the proposed measure that Fletcher was compelled again and again to reiterate his recommendation which soon grew into a demand for their entire compliance.—Eccles. Recs., II: 1045, 1048, 1054, 1073, 1075.

The curious situation developed under the Ministry Act that the ministers of all denominations in the city—Dutch Reformed, Lutherans, Jews, Papists, Presbyterians, Methodists, etc.—in the colonial period, contributed to the salary of the Episcopal ministry. For names of contributors, see the volumes of Assessment Rolls of New York, in 1690 in the comptroller’s office.

The English government claimed to have established the Anglican church, but its language was so indefinite that its meaning and application were disputed down to the Revolution.—*Eccles. Recs., VII: 4231-34; VIII: 11-14. See Apr. 5, 1774, infra. Dr. George H. Moore writes of it: There can be no doubt that it was the intention of the Assembly to provide for the maintenance of the Dissenting clergy. Such had been the manifest tendency of the previous legislation on the subject. All the Assembly but one were Dissenters and the Church of England was hardly known in the Province. . . . The Act was very loosely worded, which as things stood then it was possible that the Dissenters could claim the benefit of it as well as Churchmen, and unless wrested from its true bearing it admitted a construction in their favor. Indeed they had good reason to claim that it was intended for them, and that they only had a right to it. In fact, it was arbitrarily and illegally wrested from its true bearing, and made to answer the purpose of the English Church party, which was a very small minority of the people who were affected by the operation of the law.”—Hist. Mag., 2d ser., I: 321-33.

The house of representatives addresses the governor, asking for leave to print its votes “this Sessions.” The next day, on proroguing the assembly, the governor, in his address to the joint session of the council and assembly, made the following reply: “You now desire licens to print the Votes. Mr. Speaker looks at the opening of the sessions, if I may call it one, I told him they might be printed de die in diem; but it never was asked before.”—Jour. Leg., Conn., I: 76. For the title-page of Bradford’s first printing of the Assembly, Jour., see July 4. According to Hildebrand, in Mem. Hist. of N. Y., I: 581, this is “The earliest publication of the proceedings of an American legislature.” This first issue, or collection of daily issues, includes transactions from June 20 to July 4, inclusive, each day’s transactions or fate being, apparently, printed separately and bound with title-page for, while all are pagd consecutively, each bears Bradford’s imprint. See also Miss Hase’s check-list of publications of the New York assembly, etc., in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1903), 50.

The earliest extant volume of New York City tax rolls begins with this date. It is at present in the custody of the N. Y. Hist. Society, and is labelled Taxes Lists 1695 to 1699. The handwriting is that of William Sharpes, the city clerk. Throughout the volume the property holders are listed by wards, and against the name of each person is placed the valuation and the assessment. Appended to the list in each ward are the names of the assessors who did the work. The volume opens with an assessment of “one farthing [pound] levied on ‘the Estates Real And personal of all the Freeholders Inhabitants & Residents within the City for Six Months,’ etc.” This assessment was pursuant to an act of the legislature passed on July 3 (q.v.). It was desired to raise £50, and the lists total £531:15:10.”
Subsequent lists in the volume are pursuant to other acts of the legislature, such as “An Act for the Raising One Thousand Pounds to be employed by an Agent for the Representation of the State of the Province” (see Oct. 22); assessments are levied to meet the city’s quota for such provincial expenditures. The contents of the volume are printed, with many inaccuracies, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1910 and 1911). A second volume of tax rolls covers the years 1699-1703 (see A. Nov. 29, 1699).

Rev. Charles E. Corwin, son of the late Dr. E. T. Corwin who edited the Eccles. Rels. of the State of N. Y., makes the following observation, in answer to the inquiry, respecting this charter: “The Reformed Church in America as a Denomination never had a colonial charter. It was incorporated by the State of New York in 1819. Several individual Dutch Reformed churches of colonial times had individual royal charters. Of these the first was that of the Collegiate Dutch Church of New York and that of England Ministers belonging to y^e Flot, & City of New York, & for y^e Chaplains of his Majestye Ships during their Residence in y^e Port.

Secondly To y^e End y^e any Pljs concerned may have a free Ingress, & Regress, it is desired y^e Books may he first in some publik Room in y^e Flot, or in y^e Vestry of y^e Church at New York, so as shall be most Convenient for y^e Clergy to come at y^e Use of ‘em.

Thirdly That three Registers of these Books be made, one whereof to Remain with y^e Lt Bd of London, a Second with his Excellency y^e Earl of Bellamont to y^e Library in America.”

As Kidd’s royal commission of Jan. 26, 1696, authorized him to capture certain pirates and their goods, and required him to keep a journal of his proceedings “in relation to the Execution of our Royal Pleasure in the said Premises,” and as the ship “Adventure Galley” has been “with our Knowledge, and Royal Encouragement, fitted out to Sea for the Purposes aforesaid, at the great and sole charges of our right trusty . . . Richard Earl of Bellamont . . ., and our trusty and well-beloved Edmund Harrison Merchant, Samuel Newton Gentleman, William Rowley Gentleman, George Watson Gentleman, and Thomas Renolls of St. Martins,” William III now grants to the above adventurers “all and whatsoever Ships, Vessels, Goods, and Merchandize, and Treasure and other Things whatsoever, which since the Thirtieth Day of April, Anno Domini, 1696, have been . . . or which shall be taken or seized upon . . . or which do or shall belong to . . . Pirates, Free-booters, and Sea Rovers, by the said Captain William Kidd.”—Dalton, The Real Capt. Kidd, 259-58. On the same day, the grantees agreed “to well and truly account for and deliver to the use of His Majesty one full clear tenth part of any vessels, merchandize, moneys, goods, and wares that might be captured by Kidd.” Dalton explains that £6,000 had been needed for the venture, and that Col. Livingston and Kidd had each contributed £300, the rest having been advanced by four leading men in the king’s ministry: Somers, the lord chancellor; the Earl of Oxford, the first lord of the admiralty; and the two secretaries of state, the Earl of Romney and the Duke of Shrewsbury. Not one of the persons mentioned in the grant had advanced any of his own money.—Ibid., 50-51.

The original charters, on four sheets (24 x 28½ ins.) of vellum (Dix, writing in 1898, refers to three, and to an attached seal “composed of a reddish wax and covered with yellowish paper”) was restored in 1920 by Mr. Khalil of Stikeman & Co. The seal, which was then backing, was replaced by that theretofore attached to the Queen Anne grant of Nov. 23, 1705 (q.v.). But, as this seal bears the insignia of George II, it is clear that, at some prior time, it itself had been substituted on the Queen Anne grant for the original seal of Queen Anne, for a reproduction of which see Doc. Hist. N.Y., Vol. IV, Pl. 5, where the dates are erroneously engraved “1710-1718,” instead of 1709-1710, although correctly given in the text.

The duplicate copy of the original charter destroyed in the State Library fire of 1911 had an impression of the original William and Mary seal attached, for a reproduction and description of which see Doc. Hist. N.Y., (4to ed.), Vol. IV, Pl. 4, and p. 2.

Capt. Kidd, before he left London, had testified in a suit brought by Robert Livingston against Gov. Fletcher. He swore, on Aug. 28, 1695, that, “at the election of Assemblymen for the Town of New York, about 3 months since, he saw Soldiers and Seamen with Clubs &c. in the field, and many went off the field least they should be prest, and he heard there were freedoms given to several persons over night before the Election. And the Deponent and others Masters of Ships were brought to by the Sheriff to bring their Seamen on shore to Vote.”—N. Y. Col. Dict., IV: 128, 144. On Sept. 14, 1695, Kidd testified in regard to the same matter that “John Tutall the sheriff of New York spoke to him to get his people from on board his vessell they being Inhabitants of New York to vote at the election about three months since, for such persons as the Governor desired should be elected, but ye Deponent cannot say it was by order from the Governor.”—Ibid., IV: 129.

Bellomont writes from Boston to Capt. Kidd: “Mr. Emmot came to me last Tuesday night telling me he came from you: but was shy of telling where he parted with you. Nor did I press him to it. He told me you came by Oyster Bay in Nassau Island and sent for him to New York. He proposed to me that I would grant you a pardon. I answered that I had never granted one yet, and that I had set myself a rule never to grant a pardon to anybody without the King’s express leave or command. He told me you declared and protested your innocence and that if your men could be persuaded to follow your example, you would make no manner of scruple of coming into this port, or any other within His Majestye’s Dominions. That you owned there were two ships taken, but that your men did it violently and against your will, and had used you barbarously, in imprisoning you and treating you ill the most part of your voyage, and often attempting to murder you. Mr. Emmot delivered to me the two French passes taken on board the two ships you men rified, which passes I have in my custody, and I am apt to believe they will be a good article to justify you, if the late peace were not by the treaty between England and France to operate in that part of the world at the time the hostility was committed, as I am almost confident it was not to do. Mr. Emmot told me that you showed a great sense of honour and justice in professing with many asseverations your settled and serious design all along to do honour to your Commission and never to do the least thing contrary to your April 1699. This I have to say in your defence, that several persons in New York, who I can bring to evidence it, did tell me that by several advices from Madagascar and that part of the world, they were informed of your men's revolting from you in one place, and I am of the opinion, Madagascar has compelled you much against your will to take and live two ships.

"I have advised with His Majesty's Council, and shewed them this letter, and they are of opinion that if you can be so clear as you (or Mr. Emmot for you) have said, that you may safely come hither, and be equipped and fitted out to go and fetch the other ship, and I make no manner of doubt but to obtain the King's pardon for you, and for those few men you have left who I understand have been faithful to you, and refused as well as you do to honour the Commission you have from England.

"I assure you on my Word and Honour I will perform nicely what I have promised, though this I declare beforehand that whatever goods and treasure you may bring hither, I will not meddle with the least bit of them: but they shall be left with such persons as the Council shall advise until I receive orders from England how they shall be disposed of."—Dalton, The Real Capt. Kidd (1911), 97, 98.

Capt. Kidd, "From Block Island on the Sloop Anthony," sends the following in reply to Bellonnet's letter of June 19 (supra): "I am honoured with your Lordship's letter of the 19th instant by Mr. Campbell, which came to my hands this day. . . . I cannot but blame myself for not writing to your Lordship before this time, knowing it was my duty: but the clamours and false stories that have been reported of me, made me fearful of visiting or coming into any harbour, till I could hear from your Lordship.

"I note the contents of your Lordship's letter, as to what Mr. Emmot and Mr. Campbell informed your Lordship of my proceedings I do affirm to be true, and a great deal more might be said of the abuses of my men, and the hardships I have undergone to preserve the ship and what goods my men had left. Ninety-five men went away from me in one day and went on board the Mess Frigate, Captain Robert Culliford, Commander, who went away to the Red Sea; and committed several acts of piracy, as I am informed; and am afraid (the men formerly belonging to my Galley) that the report is gone home against me to the East India Company, that I have been the actor. A sheet of paper will also be sent to show what I have done to preserve the owners' interest, and to come home to clear my own innocency. I do further declare and protest that I never did in the least act contrary to the King's Commission, nor to the reputation of my honourable owners, and doubt not but that I shall be able to make my innocence appear; or else I had no need to come to these parts of the world; if it were not for that and my owners' interest. There are Five or Six Passengers that came from Madagascar to assist me in bringing the ship home, and about ten of my own men, that came with me would not venture to go into Boston, till Mr. Campbell had engaged Body for Body for them that they should not be molested while I stayed at Boston, or till I return with the ship. I doubt not but your Lordship will write to England in my favour and for these few men who are left.

"I wish your Lordship would persuade Mr. Campbell to go home and inform your Lordship's letter, who will be able to give account of our affairs and diligently follow the same that there may be a speedy answer from England. I desired Mr. Campbell to buy 1000 weight of Rigging for fitting of the ship to bring her to Boston, that I may not be delayed when I come there. I do not in receiving of your Lordship's Letter, I am making the best of my way to Boston."—Dalton, The Real Capt. Kidd (1911), 92-101.

While Dalton's book was in preparation, the records were critically re-examined by the late Frederick Lewis Gay and Mr. John J. Johnson, of a Bengall Mission, and by Mr. J. W. Tucker, of New York. Since Mr. Gay's death, Mr. Edmonds has embodied the results of his investigations and Mr. Gay's in a paper entitled "Lord Bellonnet and the Pirates," read before the Old South Association on July 13, 1921. Mr. Gilder's very thorough review of the documents has resulted in a book, not yet published, but epitomized in a lecture entitled "Captain Kidd, the Man and the Myth," delivered before the Century Club, New York, in Dec., 1921. The investigations of both Mr. Edmonds and Mr. Gilder criminate those of Bobst to the larger, and contravening Kidd into the larger act of piracy. Mr. Gilder makes very clear the political situation in England which led to the tragedy of Capt. Kidd's conviction and execution as a pirate and murderer.

Capt. Kidd draws up an account of his voyage, in the "Adventures of Galley," for the purpose of prosecuting Kidd to the council at Boston. In this he declares "That the said Adventure Galley was launched in Castle's Yard at Deptford, about the Fourth of December 1695; and about the latter end of February the said Galley came to in the Buoy in the Nore and about the 1st Day of March following, his Men were pressed for him for the Fleet; which caused him to stay there for Nineteen Days; and then sailed for the Donnes . . . and sailed thence for Plymouth; and on the Twenty-third day of . . . April he sailed on his intended Voyage: and, some time in the month of May, met with a small French Vessel, in which he took and made Prize of, and carried the same into New York, about the Fourth day of July, when she was condemned as lawful Prize . . .

"That about the Sixth Day of September 1696, the said Capt. Kidd sailed for the Maderas . . . and thence to Bonavista . . . and sailed thence to St. Jago . . . and thence sailed for the Cape of Good Hope; and in the Bight of the Second day of December 1696, met with Four English Men of War . . . and sailed a week in their Company; and then parted, and sailed to Tecele, a Port in the Island of Madagascar . . .

And, about the latter end of February, sailed for the Island of Johanna . . . where he found Four East India Merchmen outward bound . . . And from thence, about the Twenty-second of March, sailed for Mollaba, an Island Ten Leagues distant from Johanna, where he arrived the next Morning, and there cameen the said Galley; and about Fifty men died there in a Week's Time.

"That on the 27th Day of April 1697, sailed from the Island of Mollaba . . . and came upon the Coast of Mallabar, the Beginning of the Ninth; and went into Carwar upon that Coast . . . And the Gentlemen of the English factory gave the Narrator an account, That the Portuguese were fitting Two Men of War to take him; and advised him to put out to Sea, and to take Care of himself from them, and immediately to set sail thereupon; . . . about the 14th of the said month of September; and the next morning, about Break of Day saw the said Two Men of War standing for the said Galley; and spoke with him and asked him, whence he came? Who returned from London and that he was a Pirate of God; and so parted wishing each other a good Voyage; And making still along the Coast, the Commodore of the said Man of War kept dogging the said Galley all the Night, waiting an Opportunity to board her; and in the Morning, without speaking a Word, Fired Six great Guns at the Galley, some whereof went through her, and wounded Four of his Men; and thereupon he fired upon him against; and the Fight continued all Day; and the narrator had Eleven Men wounded: . . . the said Fight was sharp, and the said Portuguese left the said Galley with such Satisfaction, that the Narrator believes no Portuguese will ever attack the King's Colours again, in that Part of the World especially. And afterwards continued upon the same Coast, cruising upon the coast of Cameroons, for Pirates that frequent that Coast, . . .

"And that about the 18th or 19th Day of . . . November, met with a Moor's Ship of about 200 Tons, coming from Surratt, bound to the Coast of Mallabar . . . which said Ship the Narrator hailed, and commanded on board; and with him came Eight or Nine Moors, and . . . Three Dutchmen, who declared it was a Moor's Ship; and demanding their pass from Surratt, which they shewed; and the same was a French Pass, which he believes was given by a Misdaker of the said ship to show him that he was a Prize, and stand on board the Galley; and would not return on board the Moor Ship; and went in the Galley to the Port of St. Marie.

"And that, about the First Day of February following, upon the same Coast, under French Colours with a Design to levy, met a Moor's Ship, which belongs to the P. Gilder, and he had about 4 or 500 Tons, to Guns; and he commanded the Master on board; and a Frenchman . . . Gunner of the said Ship, came on board as Master; and when he came on board, the Narrator caused the English Colours to be hoisted; and the said Master was surprised, and said, You are all English; and asking, which was the Captain? Whom he knew, said, Here is a good Prize, and delivered him theFrenchPass.

And that, with the said Two Prizes, sailed for the Port of St. Marie's in Madagascar; and, sailing thither, the said Galley was so leaky, that they feared she would have sunk every Hour, and it required the crew of every Two Gallons to keep her free; and was forced to would her round with Cables to keep her together; and with much ado carried her into the said Port of St. Marie's, where she arrived about the First of April, 1699: And about the 6th day of May, the lesser Prize was hailed into the careening Island or Key, the Adventure and ran aground into the Key, whom the mutinous men; threatened the Narrator, and the men that would not join with them to burn and sink the other, that they might not go home and tell the news.

And that, when he arrived in the said Port, there was a Pirate Ship called the Moca Frigate, at an Anchor, Robert Culliford, Commander thereof; who with his Men, left the same at his coming in, and ran into the Woods and the Narrator proposed to his Men to take the same, having sufficient Power and Authority so to do; but the Mutinous Crew told him, If he offered the same, they would rather fire Two Guns into him, than one into the other; and thereupon Ninety-seven deserted, and went into the Moca Frigate, and sent into the Woods for the said Pirates, and brought the said Culliford, and his Men, on board again; and all the time she staid in the said Port, which was the Space of Four or Five Days, the said Deserters, sometimes in great Numbers, came over to the said Adventure and ran aground into the Key, and Gold and carried away great Guns, Powder, Shot, small Arms, Sails, Anchors, Cables, Sargoons, Chests, and what else they pleased; and threatened several times to murder the Narrator, as he was informed, and advised to take care of himself; which they designed in the Night to effect; but was prevented by him locking himself in his Cabin at Night, and securing himself with barricading the same with Bales of Goods; and, having about Forty small Arms, besides Pistols, ready charged, kept them out; Their Wickedness was so great, after they had plundered and ransackably sufficient, went Four Miles off to one Edward Welche's House, where his Narrator's Chest was lodged, and broke it open; and took out Ten Quintals of Gold, 40 Pound of Plate, 370 Pieces of Eight, the Narrator's Journal, and a great many Papers that belonged to him, and the People of New York that fitted them out.

That, about the beginning of April, 1699, the Narrator arrived at Anguilla in the West Indies, and sent his Boat on Shore, where his Men had the News That he and his People were proclaimed Pirates, which put them into such Consternation, That they sought all Opportunity to run the Ship on Shore upon some Reef or Shoal, fearing the Narrator should carry them into some English Port.

From Anguilla they came to St. Thomas; where his Brother-in-law Samuel Bradley was put on Shore, being sick; and Five more went away, and deserted him; Where he heard the same News, That the Narrator, and his Company, were proclaimed Pirates, which incensed the People more and more.

He sailed for Manhattan Island, between Hispaniola and Porto Rico; where they met with a Sloop called the St. Anthony, bound for Antega from Curaso, ... The men on board then swore, they would bring the Ship no further. The Narrator then sent the said Sloop St. Anthony for Curasa, for Cava, and a part piece and the Prize, to be able to proceed, and she returned in Ten Days; and after the Cava came, he could not persuade the Men to carry her for New England; but Six of them went and carried their Chests and Things on board of Two Dutch Sloops; bound for Curaso; and would not so much as bed their heads, or do anything, the Remainder of the men not being able to bring the Adventure Prize to Boston, the Narrator secured her in a good Harbor in some part of Hispaniola and left in the Possession of the Hon. Henry Boulton of Antequa, Merchant, the Malay, Three of the old Men, and Fifteen or Sixteen of the men that belonged to the said Sloop St. Anthony, and a Brigantine belonging to one Mr. Burt of Curaso.

That the Narrator bought the said Sloop St. Anthony of Mr. Boulton, at the Owner's Account, and after he had given Direction to the said Boulton to be careful of the said Ship and Lading, and persuaded him to stay Three Months till he returned; and then made the best of his Way to New York; where he heard the Earl of Bellamont was, who was principally concerned in the Adventure Galley; and hearing his Lordship was at Boston, came thither; and this is what he has been 42 Days from the said Ship."—Daltone, The Real Capt. Kidd, 255-71. See July 26 (infra). For Kidd's trial, see A. May 10, 1701.

In a letter to the council of trade and plantations, Bellomont says:..."I shall confine myself to an account of my proceedings with Capt. Kidd. On June 11th Mr. Emont, a lawyer of New York, came late at night to me and told me he came from Capt. Kidd who was on the coast, with a sloop, but would not tell me where; that Kidd had brought 60 lbs. weight of gold, about one hundred weight of silver and 70 bales of Calico. The good lady had left behind him a great ship near the coast of Hispaniola, that nobody but himself could find out, on board whereof there were in bale goods, salt-petre and other things to the value of at least £50,000; that if I would give him a pardon, he would bring in the goods and goods hidden, and went away, and found the great ship's goods afterwards. Mr. Emont delivered me that night two French passes which Kidd took on board the two Moors' ships, which were taken by him in the seas of India, or as he alleges by his men against his will. One of the passes wants a date in the original as in the copy I send. On Thursday, June 15, I sent Mr. Campbell, the Postmaster of this town [Boston], Kidd's countryman and acquaintance, along with Mr. Emont, to invite Kidd to come into this Port. Mr. Campbell returned June 19 and gave in a Memorial to myself and Council, containing what had passed between him and Kidd. On June 19 [infra] as I sate in Council I wrote a letter to Capt. Kidd and shewed it to the Council, and they approving of it, I dispatched Mr. Campbell again to Kidd with my letter. The promise I make Capt. Kidd in my letter of a kind reception and procuring the king's pardon is conditional, that is, provided we were as innocent as he pretended to be, but I quickly found sufficient cause to suspect him very guilty, by the many lies and contradictions he told me. I was so much upon my guard with Kidd that, he arriving here on Saturday the 9th of this month, I would not see him but before witnesses; nor have I ever seen him since but in Council twice or thrice that we examined him since, and day by day was most unhappy to be shut out at the door of my lodging and he rushed in and ran away running to me, the Constable after him. I had him not seized till Thursday, July 6th, for I had a mind to discover where he left the great ship, and I thought myself secure enough from his running away, because I took care not to give him the least umbrage of my design of seizing him... He being examined twice or thrice by me and the Council and also some of his men, I observed he seemed much disturbed, and the last time we examined him I fancied he locked as if he were upon the wing and resolved to run away, and the gentlemen of the Council had some of them the same thought with mine, so that I took their counsel in seizing and committing him, but the officers appointed to seize his men were so careless as to let 3 or 4 of his men escape, which troubled me the more because they were old New York pirates. The next thing the Council and I did was to appoint a Committee of trusted persons to search for the goods and treasures brought by Kidd and to secure what they could find till the King's pleasure should be known as to the disposition thereof... They searched Kidd's lodging and found hid and made up in two seabeds a bag of gold dust and in the value of about £1,000, and a bag of silver, part money and part silver, value unknown. The Island... I have sent strict orders to my L. G. at New York to make diligent search for the goods and treasures sent by Kidd to New York in three sloops... and I believe I have directed him where to find a purchase in a house in New York... If I could have but a good able Judge and Attorney General at York, a mate-of-war there and another here and the Companies recruited and well paid, I will rout pirates and piracy entirely out of all this north part of America . . . I am forced to allow the sheriff 40s per week for keeping Kidd safe. Otherwise I should be in some danger, without due guard; and the deal of gold which is apt to tempt men that have not principles of honour. I have, therefore, to try the power of iron against gold, put him into irons that weigh 16 lbs . . . There never was a greater far or thief in the world than this Kidd. Notwithstanding he assured the Council and every time we examined him to the great ship and her cargo waited his return to bring her hither, you will see by two informations of masters of ships from Curapago that the cargo has been sold there . . . To-morrow I send the sloop Kidd came in with letters to the L. G. of Antegoa, the Governors of St. Thomas Island and Curapago to seize and receive what effects they can that was late in the possession of Kidd and on board the Quidad Merchant . . . The sending of this sloop will cost but about £500, if she be out 3 months . . . Since my commitment of Kidd I hear that upon his approach to this port, his heart misgave him, and he proposed to his men the putting to sea again and going to Caledonia, the new Scotch settlement, but they refused. I desire I may have orders to do with Kidd and all his and Bradish's crew, for as the law stands in this country, if a pirate were convicted, yet he cannot suffer death . . . You will observe by some of the informations I now send, that Kidd did not rob only the two Moors' ships, but also a Portuguese ship, which he spared absolutely for the Council and me. I send papers relating to him."—Cal. State Papers, Am. & W. I. (1699), 366—70. Bellomont was ordered to send Kidd and the other pirates to England (see Feb. 10, 1700).

The Chronology includes a legislative act of May 16, 1699 (g. t.), authorizing the city government to raise money by taxation for erecting "a new city hall" and for other purposes. It also includes a resolution of the common council of Nov. 2 (g. t.) fixing the amount to be so raised. Pursuant to this act, "Assessments of the Estates Real & Personal of 6 Inhabitants Freeholders & Governors" were levied for each quarter of the year 1700, the assessments for the first quarter being made Nov. 24, 1699. These assessments, in the handwriting of the city clerk, William Sharpes, occupy the first part of the earliest volume save one (see A. Dec. 1695) of the city tax rolls. This is avellum-bound book, now in the custody of the bureau of municipal investigation and statistics of the department of finance. The names of property owners are listed by wards, and, against each name, the assessed valuation of the person's holdings and the amount of his tax. The amounts to be raised during each of the four quarters varied; so did the rate. For the first quarter £400 was the amount to be raised, and the rate was "Seven farthings And four White Wampum [this appears to be the latest recorded use of wampum as a money value] in the pound." Frederick Phillips appears as the largest tax payer; his assessment for the first quarter was £605, on a valuation of £3,000. The remaining assessment rolls to the city's quota "for building a Forte for the security of the five Nations of Indians" (see Dec. 28, 1700); other rolls for raising £450 "for the Maintenance of the Minister and poor" from the second Tuesday in January, 1701; still other rolls, prepared on Jan. 1, 1703 (g. t.), to raise the city's quota for maintaining soldiers at Albany.—Assessments 1699 to 1703 (MS.), in room 703, Municipal Bldg. See Nov. 29, 1699, Addenda.

Elizabeth Lloyd sells to Miles Forster land lying "without the fortifications... and Adjoining Easterly on the Land of John Van Gee [Jain Vigne or Vingel Northerly by a piece of Land belonging to William Morris in the New Street leading from the Stocada gate to the Lane called Green or Maiden Lane."—From the original bill of sale, in box No. 1, N. Y. MSS, N. Y. Hist. Soc. The "New Street" was Kip (now Nassau St.).—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1006. It is shown, as here described, on the Miller Plan (g. t. 1701). The bill was on the east side of Nassau St., between Cedar and Liberty Sts., later occupied by the Middle Reformed Dutch Church (Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 935), which was conveyed afterwards to the U. S. Government for use as a post-office. The ground is at present occupied by the John T. Lewis Insuring Co. building. The deed from Lloyd to Forster bears the same date as the bill of sale, and is recorded in Liber Deeds, XXIII: 265.

It has proved impossible to complete, in time for inclusion in this volume, the promised sketch showing the development of the East River water front from the earliest times to 1730. It is hoped, however, that this can be included in the Landmark Map Ref. Key, Addenda, Vol. V.

In the second line of the item in the text referring to this subject, under 1700 (see p. 421), the date "1749—9" should read 1649—8.

In a letter to Secretary Vernon, Bellomont makes the following interesting statement to his correspondent, Mr. John Campbell Kidd. "As to Kidd's pretence of urging to his owners the necessity of allowing the seamen pay, I can safely take my oath there was no such thing, but so far the contrary, as that as often as I saw him he told me he knew the pyrats hants so well, that he could sail directly to 'em but his articles were so which I send you . . . will shew his mind in that matter; for when we don't hear a man treat of a bargain, his hand and seal is the heat evidence of his assent and consent to a bargain. As to my letter I writ to Kidd by Burgesse, and with Capt Lewth intercepted, I own I writ to him to come to N. Yorke, and if it be rightly considered, I did therein what became me. Upon my first coming hither I had reason to suspect he was turn'd rogue or pyrate, for contrary to his articles with me, he came hither to N. Yorke and here staid abt 3 months, and Mr Livingston whom I found here before me told me he had some reasons to suspect he would turn pyrate. Two of his reasons were, a bargain whisper'd about, that Pletcher had conceived with Kidd to receive £1000 if he made a good voyage; the other was the dissolute life Kidd had liv'd during the 3 months he staid here. But when I writ that letter to Kidd by Burgesse, I had no account he was certainly turn'd pyrate, and then I could not be blam'd to have a just indignation against him, and to try all means to get him into my hands, and 'tis plain meaning him had not been the way to invite him hither, but rather wheeling, and that way I took, and after that manner I got him at last into Boston when I sec'd him; and a copy of that letter I then writ to him, I sent you my setting aye the fear 1st years, and in the letter I writ by Burgesse, I was no less so in that I writ by Mr Cambel with brought in Kidd to Boston."

The city's assessment rolls are prepared for the purpose of raising £2310, the local quota toward £1,000 voted (Nov. 4) by the provincial legislature for "the better securing the five Nations of Indians in their fidelity to his Majesty and . . . for building a Forte for the security of the five Nations of Indians." The assessment is "one penny halfpence halfpenny farthing per pound." The names listed by wards, and against the name of each person appears the valuation of his property and the amount of his assessment.—Assessments 1699 to 1703 (MS.), in room 703, Municipal Bldg. See Nov. 29, 1699, Addenda.

The trial of Capt. William Kidd begins, at the Old Bailey. According to the custom of the time, he is forced to conduct his own defence, and is allowed no help in cross-examining witnesses. His counsel is permitted to address the court only on questions of law. Although he was arrested for piracy, a charge of murdering his gunner, William Moore, is brought against him, without warning, and he is allowed no time to prepare his defence. Two of the men who deserted him at Madagascar (see July 7, 1699, Addenda) testify against him, and three sailors who were arrested with him give evidence in his favour. Kidd is prevented by Lord Chief Baron Ward from discrediting one of the mutineers as a witness, and from calling evidence to his own good character. The Lord Chief Baron sums up against him, and in about an hour, the jury pronounces him guilty.—Dalton, The Real Capt. Kidd, 141—66; 334—55.

On the following day, his two counsel failed to appear, and the prosecutor and other papers which would have proved his innocence, and which the house of commons had ordered to be delivered to him, were not produced. The two mutineers again testified against him, but the sailors who remained faithful to him were not permitted to be witnesses for him because they were included in the indictment. Kidd, on his part, was no more hanged. The experienced lawyers who were determined to convict him, nor for the Lord Chief Baron, who, in his summing up, insinuated that the French passes did not pass. After the jury had brought in a verdict of guilty, and the judge had sentenced him to be hanged, Kidd declared: "My lord, it is a very hard sentence. For my part, I am

On Atwood's arriving in England, charges of corruption were brought against him for his conduct in the Bayard case and otherwise. In 1712, Maggs Bros., London, advertised for sale (see their catalogue No. 401) a collection of seventeen original documents bearing upon Atwood's case. These included Atwood's petition for the quash, asking for restitution to his offices of chief-justice of the supreme court, member of the council, and judge of the court of admiralty of New York Province (see Aug. 4, 1701); a similar petition from several members of the Leisler party in New York, including Jacob Leisler (id) and Abraham Gouverneur;

Hannah, the wife of John Hutchins, declares, in a petition to the governor, that her husband is to be tried on a charge of "which he is altogether innocently," and that she has seen the "panel of the jury which is to try him, and finds that all are of "Dutch Extraction," persons unacquainted with the English language, and also "Strangers" to her husband's "life and Conversation." She asks that the jury may consist of "Englishmen or at least [of] persons of English Extraction," men who may "properly be said to be of his neighbourhood."—Col. MSS., XLVI: 306 (Albany).

Verleth's or Verleth's Hill, named after Nicolaes Verleth, was the western part of Tuynt St. (Exchange Pl.), from Broad St. to Broadway, which is to this day a very sharp ascent. It is shown as Sunderland, secretary of state: "I trouble your Lordship at this time with the account of my Lord Cornbury's misfortune who hath been arrested for several large sums of money at the suit of several persons here. It was some time after I landed in Long Island before I could get to New York, in which time my Lord might have taken care of himself. Several common civilies passed between us which made people jealous that I would protect his Lop against his Creditors which I could not in Justice do, and my poor Lord is now confined to his house . . . " The rest of the letter concerns Monpessun, and his appointment as chief-justice.

Gov. Lovelace, in his first address to the assembly, says: "The large Supplies of Soldiers and Stores of War for your Support and Defence, together with those necessary Presents for your Indian Neighbours, which her Majesty hath now sent you, . . .
are evident Proofs of her particular Care of you . . .

I cannot in the least doubt (Gentlemen) that you'll raise the same Revenue, for the same Term of Years, for the Support of the Government, as was raised by Act of Assembly in the eleventh Year of the Reign of the late King William, of glorious Memory, . . .

I must in particular, desire you to provide for the necessary Repairs of the Fortifications of the Province. The Barracks are so small and so much out of repair, that I have been necessitated to billet the Recruits, that came over with me, upon this City, which I am sensible, hath been a Burthen to the Inhabitants, but I hope you will soon ease them of that Burthen.

The sitting out a good Sloop, to attend her Majesty's Men of War in their Cruisings on this Coast, I take to be so necessary, for preserving your Navigation, that I expect you will find out a proper Method to defray that Charge. I am willing my Salary should be Taxed, that I may pay my Quota to so useful a Service."—

A closely written journal of 74 pages kept by Col. Samuel Vetch in connection with the projected expedition against Canada, commences March 11, 1709, the day of his departure from England with Col. Nicholson. It goes into minute details of their doings, including interviews with various assemblies of the American provinces. After negotiations in New England, they came into New York on May 18. On the 19th, Col. Vetch recorded: "the Lieut.
Governour Colgildsbie summoned a Councill at Fort Ann; where wee presented to them Her Majesties original instructions relating to the Expedition copies of which wee had transmitted them before; after they had been read over in councill and wee had had acquainted them with several things to be done not express in the same, . . ." From this point he continues his account of the transactions. The original document was in the possession of Maggs Bros., London, in October, 1720, and appears in their catalogue of that date.

By the terms of the first New York paper currency act, the bills of credit were to be for a total face value of £5,000. The form of the bills, as described in the act, is shown in the reproduction given on p. 973. The bills were to be for the following denominations:

It should be observed that the act of May 24, 1709, for raising £6,000 by taxation, to aid the Canada expedition, named Capt.
Robt. Walters, Capt. Lawrence Read, Capt. John de Peyster, and Capt. Robt. Lurking commissioners to manage the expedition.

Until 1922, when two of these bills (one for 5-shillings and one for 10-shillings, now in the author's collection) were offered for sale at The Anderson Art Galleries, examples of the bills of this first issue were not general in existence. The justice of the bills has been reproduced. More recently, Mr. Victor Palitsis has acquired two examples of the same issue, showing variations in wording, indi-
Five Shillings. [No.3920]

This Indented Bill of Five Shillings, due from the Colony of New-York to the Poste for thereof, shall be in value equal to Money, and shall be accordingly accepted by the Treasurer of this Colony, for the time being, in all publick Payments, and for any Fund at any time in the Treasury. Dated, New-York 31st of May, 1709, by order of the Lieut. Governour, Council and General Assembly of the said Colony.

From the original letter, advertised in Oct., 1709, by Maggs Bros., London.

Col. Francis Nicholson writes from New York to the Earl of Sunderland regarding preparations for the Canada expedition: “... Some of the Long Island Indians are come to me already and I am hopes there will be more. By the acct. that the Indian Spyes give who are returnd from Canada [this he enclosed] your Lordp. may likewise see in what condition they were in Carolina. If the Indian acct. may be relied upon, I find that one of the great difficulties I shall meet with is the Transportation of the men, Provisions and Ammunition, and I suppose we shall meet with the like difficulties of carrying 3 or 4 small brass Guns ... This day Governor Ingoldsby and myself designs for to meet the Indians at Albany whither all the forces are gone up and most of the Arms and ammunition.” — From the original letter, advertised in Oct., 1709, by Maggs Bros., London.

The governor’s council decides “that the Lieut. Governour cannot grant any order or warrant for impressing any Mariner or other person who serves on board or is retaind to serve on Board any Privater or Trading Ship or Vessell that is employed in this Province or any Mariner or other person on shore in any Port tharof unless such Mariner shall have deserted from some Ship of Wars belonging to Her Majesty since the 14th. February 1709.” — From a certified official copy of the council’s report, advertised in Oct., 1720, by Maggs Bros., London.

The Indians in the New World had been under great pressure to join the European powers in their colonial conflicts. This letter describes the difficulties faced in transporting troops to Canada, which was a crucial battlefront in the French and Indian Wars. The costs and logistics involved were immense, and the British Parliament was struggling to fund these military expeditions.

Adding to the challenges, the British were also facing significant financial issues back home. This was evident in the financial strain described by Col. Francis Nicholson, who was trying to secure funds for the expedition. The letter highlights the difficulties in raising money for the cause and the administration’s struggle to manage the costs associated with the war overseas.

The letter also touches on the recruitment of mariners and the condition of the troops, which were in poor shape and required better provisions and supplies. The British were not only facing military challenges but also had to contend with internal political and financial issues, which were making it difficult to secure the resources needed for the expeditions abroad.

Overall, this letter is a snapshot of the complex and challenging times during the mid-17th century, when the British were engaged in global conflicts and the cost of maintaining colonial empires was a constant concern.

Gov. Hunter writes to Gov. Dudley, of Massachusetts, that the transports with provisions from New York have started.—Col.

Gov. Hunter writes to Gen. Nicholson enclosing the letters just received from Gen. Hill (see Aug. 22). He says: "My heart is

Gov. Hunter writes to Gen. Hill that he has received by an express from Gen. Nicholson "the Resolutions of their Council of Warr" to retreat to Albany (see Oct. 9). He says the miscarriage of the expedition has "shook me severely," and tells him that he is now
"in great pain for ye' flour to stock and the Transports (see Sept. 17) with her which besides one thousand Barrels of pork have a vast quantity of all other provision for you on board of them." He hopes the fleet will sail in with them at the mouth of the St. Lawrence.—Col. MSS., LVII: 109 (Albany). The transports were wrecked on Cape Breton, and all with the officers, except two, and one hundred seamen.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VI: 284.

Gen. Nicholson, having retreated with his force to Albany (see Oct. 1), is met there by Gov. Hunter, and a conference is held with the Indians. A speaker for the red men says: "We see god is against us and... We cant go forward to Reduce Canada having Returned twice;" the hope is expressed that Albany and Schenectady "may be forbyed with all Speed," so that the enemy cannot "take the Towns with fifty men." Hunter assures them of increased provision on the frontier, and that he is now not what Resolution the great Queen shall take for the Renewing of this Expedition but hope that you will be in Readines if it shall be again intended." The Indians are given "a Belt of war-pump and one Barrel Beer."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VI: 278-79.

Loring Andrews, A Prospect of the Colleges in Cambridge in New England (1897); and Green, Ten Fac-simile Reproductions Relating to Old Boston and Neighborhood (1901), 7. Only four copies of this view are known; one of these, owned by the college, being very imperfect. The best preserved copy known is owned by the author; this, however, lacks the title. The Mass. Hist. Soc. owns the other two impressions, one in the first and one in the second state. Paine Commander, several likely Welsh and English Servant Men, most of them Tradesmen. Whoever inclines to purchase any of them may agree with said Commander, or Mr. Thomas Noble, Merchant, at Mr. Hazard’s, in New-York; where also is to be Sold several Negro Girls and a Negro Boy, and likewise good Cheshire Cheese.”—N. In the case of the white servants, this means, of course, the sale of their time and services, under indenture of apprenticeship, to pay for their passage to America.—See, for example, April 20, 1752. The negroes, on the other hand, were doubtless to be sold into slavery.

Gen. Cracy writes to the lords of trade: “I have very long declined laying before your Lordships the behaviour of a certain Member of his Majesty’s Council, here, while I had the least hopes of his return to his duty, upon this prospect I have been [sic] born with many inconveniences his dangerous conduct still growing upon my patience till his Majestys Service and the safety of this Province demanded that I should explain this man to your Honble Board.

“Mr James Alexander is the person whom I have too much occasion to mention, at my first arrival I found that the late President Van Dam had employ’d him in the payment of the forces, and for that reason I should him all the Civility in my power, but no sooner did Van Dam and the late chief Justice Morris (the latter especially) begin to treat my Administration with rudeness and ill manners, then I found Alexander to be at the head of a scheme to give all imaginable uneasiness to the Govern[i], by infusing into and making the worst impressions on the minds of the people, A Press supported by him, and his party began to swarm with the most virulent libels, Scurrilous and abusive pamphlets publish’d against the Ministry, and other persons of Great honour and quality in England were reviv’d and reprinted here, with such alterations as served to injure and enrage the people as have been done by the Council, the Assembly, and all Magistrates in general, no man in his Majesty’s Service tho’ many had been ten and twenty years, in the same employments was spair’d...

“Cabal was form’d against the Government and a meeting of their factious men is still held several nights in the week at a private lodging which I have discover’d Alexander always p’sent and Morris, till he lately fled privately for England, in great fear as this publicly reported least the printer of their Seditious libel should discover him, for these reasons it is, that I have not lately receiv’d Alexanders presence in Council.

“My Lord at this distance from England I am not able to trace the facts, but I am assured that this Alexander (some years since a teacher of navigation on board one of his Majesty’s Ships) was turn’d away and dismissed from the Service for disaffection to the protestant Succession, and refusing the oath of allegiance, &c.,... now while I am writing, after the Council had ordered certain Seditious libels, tending to open rebellion, to be burnt by the hands of the common Hangman, that the printer of them be committed to the Common Goal, and prosecuted by the Attorny Gen[el] and a proclamation issued by their unanimous advice,... with a reward of fifty pounds for the discovery of the Author of them, this man James Alexander has appeard as the printers Council and Attorney for several successive days before the Chief Justice James De-Lancy Esq.,... for these reasons I intreat your Lordships to intercede with his Majesty that a Member of Council, whose behaviour has declar’d him to be in an interest opposite to that of the Crown, who is daily inciting the unthinking people, to sedition, riot and insurrection by blackening and aspersing his fellow Members of that board, and all others whose loyalty and integrity have recommended them to my predecessors and myself, may be removed from a seat to which he is the greatest disgrace and disgrace, and I hope ye Lordships will be so good to move his Majesty in order that a Commission be granted for John Moor to succeed James Alexander as Councillor in the Province of New York."—N. . . . No Morris deed can be found, but the probability is that the withdrawal of the Carrol advertisement in the ‘Papers’ in June, 1765, marks the time of the purchase of the property by Roger Morris, and approximately that of the building of the house.”—Shelton, The Jailman Mansion, 41 Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 941.

Patrick Henry makes his famous speech in the Virginia house of burgesses against the stamp taxes. A French traveller (see Aug. 27), who chanced to visit the place on this date, writes in his journal: “Shortly after I Came in one of the members stood up and said he had read that in former times tarquin and Julius had their Brutus, Charles had his Cromwell, and he Did Not doubt but some great American would stand up, in favor of his country, but (says he) in a more moderate manner, and was going to Continue, when the speaker of the house rose and Said, he, the last that had stood up had spoke treason, and was sorry to see that not one of the members of the house was loyal Enough to stop him, before he had gone too far.”—From “A French Traveller in the Colonies, 1765,” in Am. Hist. Review (Oct., 1921), 745, printed from MS recently discovered in the archives of the Service Hydrographique de la Marine, in Paris.

There appears in Weyman’s Gazette an advertisement of an unusual nature. It issues from “Johnson-Hall,” under date of July 4, Sir William Johnson giving public notice “That in Consequence of his having last, in the Spring of this year, of Susquehanna,” he has in his custody 25 white captives, surrender’d to him by the Indians, whom he will be glad to deliver “to their Relations on Application.” Most of the 25, whom he goes on to describe in the advertisement, have been in Indian captivity over two years, and some so young that their names are unknown. The list includes “A Girl of about 8 Years old, supposed to be taken near Minisimick,” “Three Boys taken some years ago of about 8, 10, and 12,” and two young women, “supposed to belong to New-Jersey,” with “Two Children they had by Indians.”—N. Y. Gaz. (Weyman), July 22, 1765.

A description of the city at this time appears in the journal of a French traveller, as yet unidentifed: “Sandy hool, and the Southermost point of long Island, form the Entrance of New York Bay. This is Called the Narrows. it is but 2 m. broad and opens the ocean to full view. the passage up to York from sandy hool is safe, and not above 25 miles in length. the Common navigation is between the East and west bays, in two or three and twenty feet water, but it is said that an Eighty gun ship maybe hrought thorough a narrow windung unfrequented Channel, between the North End of the East bank and Coney Island. there has been a 7 East shore, on this point is the town, the Island on which the City is built is about 143. long, and not above one mile bread. the S. W. point projects into a fine spacious bay, 9 miles in length and about 4 in breadth, at the Confluence of hudsons or N. -built brick houses in the English taste, the others in the Dutch with the gables towards the Streets and Coverd with tyles [Cf. Kalm, Travels, I: 249]; this City is supplyed with markets in different parts, abundant with great plenty and variety, they have Beef, pork, veal, mutton, poultry, venison, wild fowl, Especially wild pigeon, fish, oysters, roots, and all Kinds of vegetables and fruits, in their Seasons; this City is the metropolis of the province and by its Comodious situation Commands all the trade of the western part of Connecticut and that of East Jersey; no Season prevents their shipping from going out and Coming into port, there are always pilot boats at the narrows ready to Conduct them In on first sight.

upon the S. W. point of the City stands the fort which is a square with four Bastions mounted with 56 pounders but in very bad order. within the walls is the Governors house where he usually resides, opposite to it is brick barracks. the Governors house is 3 stories high and fronts to the west.

Below the walls of this fort or Garrison near the water there is a fortification to defend the grand road, (but Ships Can Lye with safety out of its reach) the lower part or foundation of this Battery is built with stone, and the merlons Consist of Ceder Joints filed up with Earth. it mounts 94. 24 pounders which are almost level with the water. this fortifion is not of any great service to the harbour, which is in East river and also the principle part of the town which lies that way. about 6 furlongs from the fort lies norten [Governors] Island behind which, betwixt [in] and long Island, is a passage for prey large vessels, on which not one gun of this fortifion Can be brought to bare. this Island lies about 5 E from the fort in the midle of East river, it is reserved as a Sort of a Demence for the Governors, they propose to Erect a Strong Castle on it, but there is as yet not the least appearance thereof. this according to my judgement is the piperperfest place for a fortifion.

"there are besides this, two other Islands in the Bay oppose the town but out of reach of the guns, they say there is very good fresh water on all those Islands they serve for vessels to ly Carenten by them.

the City hall is a Strong building two Stories high situated where four Streets meet and fronts to the S. W. on one of the most Spacious Streets in town. here they hold their Council and General Courts.

the Inhabitants of New York are a mixed people, mostly Decended from the Dutch planters originally, there are still two Churches in which religious worship is performed in that language, but the number that talks it Diminishes Daily. all religions are permitted here Except the roman Catholique.

the City of York Consists principally of merchants, shop keepers, and tradesmen (as Dos philadelphia) who have the repuation of punctual and fair Dealings. there are Some very rich houses in it. the people are very sociable and kind [to] Strangers.

the N. E. part of New York Island is inhabited Chiefly by Dutch farmers who have a Small village there Called harlem pleasantly Situated on a flat Cultivated for the City Markets.

scarce a third part of the province is Cultivated. the Colony of Connecticut which is vastly inferior to this In its Extent, has according to a late Computation, above 15,000 Inhabitants of which a militia of 26000 men, whereas the whole number of Souls Contained in New York province is but 110,000, and the militia 18000.

the Situation of new york with regard to foreign markets is to be preferred to any of the Colonies. it lies in the Center of the Continent, has at all times a Short and easy access to the ocean, and has almost the whole trade of Connecticut and New Jersey, two fertile and well Cultivated Colonies. hudsons river which runs up in the Country near lake ontario (and Caries Small vessels as far as Albany 24.) and the60 Great Lakes, they have to Cary on a Considerable trade with the Back Indians, to whom they Send rum, ammunition, blankets, Strouds [blankets], and wampum or Conque shell Bugles. in return for which, they have all Kinds of fur, and peltry; they always have been in good Intelligence with the five nations, now Six Nation Indians, which are the Bravest and most redoubtable of all the Indian Nations, that Canada has often Experienced.

and notwithstanding it was with difficulty their persons & properties were protected, by the better sort of people. A set of people who have associated themselves in many of the Provinces, under the appellation of the Sons of Liberty, continue their meetings, which correspond with each other, & publish their resolves in the Papers without reserve, amongst others they agree to oppose the Stamp Act, even to take the Field, at the risk of their Lives & Fortunes. There seems throughout the Provinces to be a dissolution of all legal authority, the Country is in a state of anarchy, all coercive powers in General are annihilated, the people so accustomed to excess & riot without control, that it is to be feared it would not be an easy task to bring them back to their duty, should the wisdom of Parliament even think proper to remove the present cause of clamour, by a repeal of the Stamp Act. There has not however been any requisition made for my assistance but it becomes my duty when I see the King’s affairs in such a situation, to do every thing which depends on me for the support of his service, & I must take my own resolutions which is to draw all the Force I can, & as soon as it can be done, into these Provinces. I have opened myself on this head to Sir Henry Moore, who sees affairs in the same light, and he told me tho’ he could not procure the advice of his Council to demand in Form the aid of the King’s Commander in Chief, he privately asked my assistance.”—Am. & Eng. Arch. (1766), vol. supra, 621.

Aug. 26 says: “There has been some disturbance in this place between the People & the Soldiers. The latter were accused of cutting down a pole set up in an open Place near the Barracks; It appears upon enquiry that it was no general act of the soldiers, but there is reason to suspect some of them, as well as some of the People of the Town, were concerned in it. A mob assembled to erect the Pole again, and a Drummer passing, words ensued, they fell upon him & afterwards upon a corporal who came to his assistance & pursued both to the Barrack Gate, from whence twenty or more Soldiers sallied to drive the mob a considerable distance. Some officers being near got up in time to force the Soldiers back to their Barracks tho’ in passing the mob some were beat & the whole grossly abused. The Mob afterwards in presence of the Magistrates surrounded the Barracks and vented so much abuse & provoking language that some of the better sort of people who had assembled there did not think it possible that the Officers could command themselves, or restrain the fury of their men & pressed the Magistrates to support their own dignity & disperse the mob. The soldiers were however kept quiet & no mischief ensued, nor is there any person much hurt except the Corporal. The populace presented highly the check they had of the foreign islands, but a day or two after they thought that the Soldiers might be ordered out of the City; but finding that no person of consequence or reputation would sign it, they fixed up a paper inviting the people to drive them out by Force, but these were immediately pulled down. The meaning of these proceedings was that the populace are tired of receiving tax & power and authority they have so long usurped, to which they think the Soldiers may give some obstruction: the better sort tired of the anxiety & confusion which has so long prevailed want to have order restored & the Laws put in Force, which they judge the presence of the soldiers is necessary to bring about. The Magistrates see the necessity of checking the mutinous spirit in the People, but they depend so much upon them for their Elections into the Magistracy or General Assembly that they act with timidity & even suffer themselves to be insulted. It became necessary to take more than usual care of the behaviour of the Soldiers on this occasion, & such a readiness has been shewn to deliver up every soldier guilty of committing disorders, to the Civil Power, or to punish them by Military Law, that the People seem disarmed of all complaints against them.”—Am. & Eng. Archives (1766), op. cit. 377-82.

A petition signed by 257 merchants of New York is addressed to the House of Commons, stating: “That the Commerce of the North American Colonies is so severely clogged and restricted by the Statutes of the 4th and 6th of His present Majesty, as to afford a melancholy presage of its destruction, the fatal effects of which, if suffered, would finally be transferred to Great Britain, and centre with her merchants and manufacturers. An evil so extensive, could not fail of alarming your petitioners, whose situation exposes them to the first impression of this calamity. They therefore think it their duty to implore this Honorable House, to resume the Consideration of the Plantation Trade. Fully Confiding in the impartiality, justice, and pantilation of the British Parliament, they are equal regard to the Welfare of every part of His Majesty’s dominions, for effectual redress. Your petitioners do therefore most humbly represent, That it is the Singular disadvantage of the Northern British Colonies, that while they stand in need of vast quantities of the manufactures of Great Britain, the Country is productive of very little which affords a direct remittance thither in payment. From necessity therefore, the inhabitants have been driven to seek a market for their produce where it could be vended, and by a course of traffic to acquire either money or such merchandize as would answer the purpose. The privation and want of a market for our Commerce when free from the late restraints ought to be understood, the Petitioners beg leave to observe, that our produce then sent to our own and the foreign Islands, was chiefly bartered for Sugar, rum, molasses, cotton and indigo.—The Sugar, cotton and indigo served as remittance to Great Britain; but the rum and molasses constituted essential branches of our Commerce. . . .

“Considering the prodigious consumption of West India produce in Great Britain, Ireland, and the continental Colonies, the rapid increase of these Colonies, their inhabitants already exceeding 20 millions, the vast exportation of all commodities either raises or stimulates the innumerable tribes of Indians in the extensive Countries annexed to the British Crown, the utter incapacity of our own islands to supply so great a demand, will your petitioners presume to be out of all question.—On the other hand the lumber produced from clearing this immense territory, and the provision extracted from a fertile soil, which most of the inhabitants are employed in cultivating, must raise a supply for exportation, with which the consumption of our own Islands can bear no sort of proportion. It seems therefore consistent with Sound policy to indulge the Colonies in a free & unrestrained exportation of all the lumber & produce they raise and can spare and an ample importation of rum, and Molasses, to supply the various branches of their trade, to which they appear So necessary. . . .

Your Petitioners having thus represented the nature of their Commerce, now humbly beg leave to point out the Several grievances which it labors under from the Regulations prescribed by the two before mentioned Acts of Parliament. . . .

The heavy embargoes which attend the Article of Sugar is a Capital Subject of Complaint. . . .

Besides the absolute necessity of a great importation to sustain our Trade, it is a well known truth, that it often happens at the foreign islands, with which we have intercourse, that a sufficient Return Cargo independent of Sugar, cannot be procured, which alone must render Trade precarious and discouraging. But the high duty of 5s. a ton, as stated by Mr. M‘Laury, and approved by the British Parliament, is as inconsistent with the nature of our affairs as it is ruinous. It is therefore time to reduce the duty of Sugar to a lower rate, or altogether remove it. Those duties, which must not only encumber our consumption, but encourage smuggling to people less scrupulous . . . The Petitioners therefore most humbly intreat that a moderate duty be laid on foreign Sugars, which they are assured would not only greatly conduce to the prosperity of these Colonies, and their utility to the Mother Country, but increase the Royal Revenue far beyond what can be expected under the present restraints.

Compelling Merchants to land and Store foreign Sugars in Great Britain before they Can be exported to other parts of Europe is another most Expensive and dilatory restriction, without being of any material advantage to the Revenue of Great Britain, . . .

Foreign Rum, French established is a law, against which your Petitioners most humbly protest for consideration; the importation thereof on a moderate duty would add Considerably to the Revenue, prevent Smuggling, promote our navigation, increase the vent of our own produce with British Manufactures, and enable us to bring back the full value of our cargoes.

The exportation of Foreign Logwood to foreign Markets has already been distinguished as one of the principal means by which these Colonies have been enabled to sustain the weight of their debts for British Manufactures, . . . The low price of logwood, rum, &c. is a thing totally destructive of this valuable branch of our Commerce and throw it into the hands of foreigners, unfettered with these heavy embarrassments . . . .

. . . your Petitioners conceive the North American Fishery to be an object of the highest national importance. Nothing is so essential for the support of Navigation... Your Petitioners therefore humbly presume that it will be cherished by this Honorable House, with every possible mark of indulgence, and every impediment be removed which tends to check its progress.

Encouraging the jurisdiction of the Admiralty is another part of the Statute of the 4th of His present Majesty, very grievous to the Trade and Navigation of the Colonies, and oppressive to the Subject; the property of the Trader being open to the invasion of every informer, and the means of Justice so remote as to be Scarcely attainable.

"Your Petitioners beg leave to express the warmest sentiments of gratitude, for the advantages intended by Parliament to America in General, in the opening Free Ports at the Islands of Jamaica and Dominica, at the same time they cannot but lament that it is their unhappiness to be in no condition to reap the benefits which it was imagined would flow from so wise a policy. The collecting great quantities of the produce of Martinico, Guadaloupe &c. at the Island of Dominica will be the natural consequence of opening that port, and would prove of real importance to these Colonies ordered back in return for their import and provision; but as they are now prohibited from taking any thing except Molasses, and it is justly apprehended there cannot be a sufficient quantity of that commodity to support any considerable Trade, your petitioners think it evident that no substantial advantage can be derived to them under such a restraint."

"Upon this advice, with the greater reason they find themselves obliged to inform this Honorable House, that as to the last Session the necessity of leaving the Trade of these Colonies seems to have been universally admitted, and the tender regard of Parliament for their happiness highly distinguished, nevertheless experience has evinced, that the commercial regulations then enacted, instead of remedying, have increased the heavy burthen under which it already laboured. As therefore upon due consideration, it will be manifest, that the ability of these colonies to purchase the manufactures of Great Britain, immediately depends upon, and is inseparably connected with, the progress of their Commerce; and as that ability only, by removing the necessity of home manufactures, will leave them at liberty to pursue agriculture in which their true interest consists: Your Petitioners most humbly implore this Honorable House to take the several matters herein suggested, into their wise consideration, and to grant such relief therein, as shall be thought consistent with good policy, and the mutual interests of Great Britain and her Colonies."—Am. & Eng. Archives (1785), vide supra, 421-50. The petition is printed in Prior Docs. (London, 1777), 163; also in Penn. Jour. (Phil.), April 30, 1767; and nearly all in N. Y. Gaz. (Weyman), April 27-May 4, 1767. This petition was read in parliament on Feb. 16, 1767. No action, however, was taken thereon.—Jour. House of Commons (1766-68), 158-60. See also A. M. Schlesinger's "The Colonial Merchants and the Am. Revolution, 1765-1776, pub. in Columbia Univ. Studies in Political Sci., LXXVIII (1918), 87.

The legislative council receives from the general assembly an act which it is asked to approve. The title is "An Act authorizing and empowering Abraham Lott to have recourse to and take out of the Secretary's Office of this Colony such ancient records as are wrote in the Dutch language." This bill is read the first time and ordered a second reading—Jour. Leg. Coun., 1668. We have no record that such permission was granted. For evidence of Lott's interest in the old Dutch records, see Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 732.

Hugh Gaine published the results of the vote for assemblies, held between these dates, in a booklet bearing the title: A Copy of the Poll List, of the Election for Representatives for the City and County of New-York; which election began on Monday the 23d Day of January, and continued on Friday the 27th of our Lord, MDCCLXIX. Alphabetically Made. Besides this booklet, there are in the N. Y. Pub. Library similar lists for 1761 and 1768. They list by name practically the entire voting population of New York.

On the next day, the Sons of Liberty held a meeting at the Province Armes, and unanimously agreed to the same resolution.—N.Y. Jour., April 13, 1769. The object of this resolution was to further home manufactures by increasing the supply of wool.—Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., II: 400.

The facts that an earlier constitution of the Sons of Liberty is known, that no organization is known having the title "United Sons of Liberty," that the house of M. De la Montagne is mentioned as the meeting-place of the society, that the word "United," wherever used in the broadside, has been deleted in pencil, and that several additions are made in pencil, taken collectively are pretty strong evidence that the broadside here reproduced (Pl. 39) was a proof copy of the proposed constitution, with amendments made at the meeting on Monday evening, July 10.

Samuel Adams, writing to Arthur Lee, says: “Should the

Correspondence proposed by Virginia [on March 12, 1773—see

Wincor, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VII: 56, 89-90] produce a Congress; and that an Assembly of States, it would require the Head of a very able Minister to treat with so respectable a Body.”—Writings of Samuel Adams, III: 21. This is the earliest suggestion of a continental congress found.—See July 7, 1773, March 5 and May 15,

In a private letter to Thomas Cushing, of Boston, bearing this date, Franklin, after mentioning the proposal of the Virginia house of burgesses to establish committees of correspondence, adds: “It is natural to suppose, as you do, that, if the oppressions continue, a congress may grow out of that correspondence.” In an official date of the same letter, which was to be read in the assembly, Franklin declared: “I hope, perhaps, it would be best and fairest for the colonies, in a general congress now in peace to be assembled, or by means of the correspondence lately proposed [see April 9, 1773, and March 5, 1774, Addenda], after a full and solemn assertion and declaration of their rights, to engage firmly with each other, that they will never grant aids to the crown in any general war, till those rights are recognised by the King and both Houses of Parliament.”—Works of Franklin (Sparks ed., 1882), 55, 63-64.

The letter written on this date by Sears and McDougal appearance contains the first suggestion, made by a public body, for a continental congress, the significant words used being: “we have stimulated the Merchants to appoint a Meeting to morrow Evening at 7 o’Clock to agree upon a general Non-importation, and Non-exportation Agreement of Goods, to and from Great Britain.”—Sears, & McDougall, of Cap Tingley, to Dr. Jonas

Adams, by the American Correspondence, in the N. Y. Pub. Library (see Pl. 41 A, Vol. IV). The committee referred to was evidently the committee of correspondence chosen on Dec. 17, 1773 (q.v.), of which both Sears, and McDougal were members (see Dec. 18, 1773). The notice of June 6 (q.v.) can hardly be considered an official disclaimer.

From the incomplete extracts in the Boston Gazette, Becker

(Hist. of Pol. Parties in N. Y., 1760-1776, 1,18) draws the erroneous conclusion that this letter of May 15 contained no suggestion for a continental congress. For a still more definite suggestion, for “a

Congress of Deputies from all the Colonies in which all the griviances which were sustained by each and every of these Colonies could be duly considered, and concerted action be secured,” says: “We are not insensible of the fact that the origin of the Congress of the Continent, which was assembled at Philadelphia, in 1774, has been variously stated, by many of those who have preceded us; and we are equally sensible of the other fact, that individuals, in different Colonies, without any connection with each other, had suggested, theoretically, that such a Congress would be useful for various limited and, generally, local purposes, previous to that more general and practical proposition which was made by the Committee of Correspondence in New York, on the occasion under consideration.

“The Town of Providence, in Town-meeting, May 17, 1774

(q.v.), was, probably the first organized body which recommended a Congress of the several Colonies, for general purposes; . . .

‘Because the General Assemblies of the greater number of the Colonies, at that time, could not have elected Deputies to the proposed Congress, even if they had been willing to have done so —the Governor having in each case, the power of proroguing or dissolving the Assembly, which in the greater number of instances, had to be held in the interval; the action of the legislature, on the other decision, although well intended, could not result in the creation of a Congress. . . . The honor, what there was of it, remains, therefore, with the Committee of Correspondence of New York, as related in the text, of having originated the Congress, on the twenty-third of May.”—Dawson, Westchester Co. during the Am.

Rev., 1710-17.

As will be seen by reference to the letter of May 23, reproduced as Pl. 42, the significant words used are: “Upon these Reasons we conclude that a Congress of Deputies from the Colonies in general is of the utmost Moment; that it ought to be assembled without Delay, and some unanimous Resolutions formed in this fatal Emergency, not only respecting your deplorable Circumstances, but for the Security of our common Rights.” It will be noticed that, whereas this letter suggests a congress of deputies from the colonies in general, the letter of May 15 proposes “conference of Deputies from the Principal Towns on the Continent, to meet in a general Congress,”—clearly a less official body, even if an equally representative one. Samuel Adams’ suggestion of April 9, 1773

(q.v., Addenda), Franklin’s of July 7, 1773 (q.v., Addenda), and

John Hancock’s of March 5, 1774 (q.v., Addenda), although earlier, are personal, not official, and theoretical, not specific.

25. May 7. John Hancock, on his way to Philadelphia (where he was chosen president of congress on May 24), having arrived at New York on Saturday, May 6, thus writes from "New York, Sabbath Evening, May 7, 1775," to Miss Dorothy Quincy, addressing her "At the House of Thaddeus Burr, Esq. In Fairfield."—

27. "I arrive'd well, tho' Fatigued, at King's Bridge, at Fifty minutes after Two o'clock yesterday, where I found the Delegates of Massachusetts and Connecticuth with a number of gentlemen from New York, and a guard of the Troop. I Din'd and then Set out in Procession for New York, the carriage of your humble servant, of course forming part of the Procession. When we Arrived within three miles of the City we were met by the Grenadier Company and Regiment of the City Militia under Arms, gentlemen in carriages and on horseback and many thousand of persons on foot; the roads fill'd with people, and the greatest Cloud of Dust I ever saw. In this situation we Enter'd the City, and passing thro' the principal streets of New York amidst the Acclamations of thousands, we were Set Down at Mr. Francis's. After entering the House, three Huzzas were Given, and the people by degrees Dispers'd. When I got within a mile of the City, my carriage was Snapt, and persons Approaching, with proper Harnesses insisted upon Taking out my Horses and Dragging me into and through the City, a Circumstance I would not have had taken place upon any consideration, not being fond of such parade. I Beg'd and Intreated that they would suspend the design, and ask'd it as a favour, and the matter Subsided; but when I got to the entrance of the City and the numbers of Spectators increas'd to perhaps seven thousand or more, they Declar'd they would have the horses out, and would drag me myself, thro' the City. I repeated my request, that they would so far oblige me as not to Insist upon it; and they would not, therefore, apply to the leading gentlemen in the procession to interfere with them not to carry their designs into execution, as it was very disagreeable to me. They were at last prevailed upon, and I proceeded. . . . After having rode so fast and so many miles you may well think I was much fatigued, but no sooner had I got into the rooms the houses we were Visit'd by a great number of gentlemen of the first character in the City, which took up the evening. . . . at 11 o'clock went to Capt. Sear's (the king here) and Lodged. . . . To morrow Morning, propose to cross the Ferry. We are to have a large guard in several boats, and a number of the city gentlemen will attend us. I can't think they will dare to attack us. The Grenadier Company of the city is to continue under arms during our stay here, and we have a guard of them Night and Day at our doors. This is a sad Mortification to the Tories. Things look well here."—New Eng. Hist. & Gen. Mag. 1776 Aug.

28. The military committee appointed by the provincial congress meets to determine the rank and command in the several regiments. As ordered by the provincial council, the New York regiment is named "the first or senior regiment of the troops raised in this colony," and McDougall is appointed as its colonel, Rudolphus Ritzema as lieutenant-colonel, and Herman Zedwitz as major. The other regiments are to take rank in the following order: Col. Goose van Schaick's, second; Col. James Clinton's, third; Col. James Holmes's, fourth.—Col. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 117.

29. The first provision of the Militia Bill, passed by the provincial congress on this day, is as follows: "Resolved, That every county, city, manor, town, precinct and district within this Colony, (where the same is not already done,) be divided into districts or beats, by their respective committees, in such manner that out of each may be formed one military company, ordinarily to consist of about eighty-three able bodied and effective men, officers included, between sixteen and sixty years of age, (the battalion commanded by Col. Lasher, the companies of artillerie, light-horse and husars, in the city and county of New York, and the troop of horse, companies of grenadiers, and associated companies already formed in the several cities and counties within this Colony, excepted.)"

30. The manner of electing officers is defined. Col. Lasher's company, now under the direction of field officers, shall in the future be commanded by captains, to be chosen in the manner defined. It is further resolved "That for the purpose of completely carrying into execution the recommendation of the Continental Congress [of Aug. 9], after the whole militia is formed as above, every fourth man of each company be selected for minute men, of such persons as are willing to enter into this necessary service. . . ."

31. The several companies so formed, the bill provides, shall be "joined into regiments, each regiment to consist of not less than five nor more than ten companies, (the battalion commanded by Col. Lasher excepted;) also "That a major-general be appointed and commissioned by this Congress, to command the militia of the Colony of New-York;" and "That the militia of this Colony be formed into brigades," the militia of the city and county of New York, and of the counties of Kings and Richmond, to constitute one of these brigades, and the militia of the other counties to be combined in a manner designated in the bill. There are thus defined a total of six brigades.

32. The bill further provides "That every man between the ages of sixteen and fifty, do, with all convenient speed, furnish himself with a good musket or firelock and bayonet, sword or tomahawk, a steel ramrod, worm, priming wire and brush, fitted thereto, a cartridge box, to contain twenty-three rounds of cartridges, twelve flints and a snap-cap, agreeable to the directions of the Continental Congress, under the advice of a harness maker, for the manufacture of a musket or firelock, and of one shilling for the want of a bayonet, sword or tomahawk, cartridge box, cartridge or bullet; the whole to be judged of and determined by the captain, or next commanding officer. . . ."

33. That each company, (not minute men,) do meet the first Monday in every month, and spend at least four hours in each of the said days to perfect themselves in military discipline . . . "Regulations affecting the companies of horse," their officers, equipment, etc., are given; fines and penalties are imposed for violations of orders; and the officials, etc., exempt from military service are listed.

34. . . . the minute men, when called out in defence of their country, shall be subject to the articles of war, established by the Continental Congress, and be entitled to the same allowance, as to pay and provisions, with the Continental forces; to be under the direction of the Commander-in-Chief of those forces.

35. Then follow the regulations affecting the conduct of troops "in case of any alarm, invasion or insurrection." Every subaltern and soldier "is immediately to repair, properly armed and accoutred, to his colours or parade, (which parade shall be understood to be the habitation of his captain, unless otherwise ordered;) and the captain or commanding officer of the company nearest to the place where such invasion or insurrection shall be, shall immediately march his company to oppose the enemy, at the same time send off an express to the commanding officer of the regiment or brigade to which he belongs, who is to march with the whole or part of the militia under his command as he shall judge necessary, and use all possible diligence to prevent the enemy from landing or penetrating into any part of the country, and to quell every insurrection . . . ."

36. These provisions, further extended, close with a general one that the militia and minute men, when thus called out, "shall be subject to the same rules and orders as directed and ordered by the Continental Congress of the associated Colonies, hold at Philadelphia on the 10th day of May last for the better government of the Continental troops."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 114–16.

William Smith sends to Gen. Halldimand his opinions concerning "this unnatural Controversy, which if it lasts a few years may bring the British Empire to the Brink of Destruction." He says in part: October 6.
"A Day approaches for the most important Consideration. This Winter will decide the great Question, whether Great Britain and her Colonies, are to be happily reconciled, or to prosecute their Animosities to an eternal Separation! There is no more to controvert on this Side of the Water.

As it never would be expedient for Great Britain to attempt to impose Taxes upon her Colonies, without their Consent, and Parliament seems to be of that Opinion, to me it appears to be madness to plunge into a war, for supporting a Claim of Right to do, what they never means to execute in Fact. What hinder the passing of an Act, which while it averse her sovereignty in every Thing else, acknowledges that American Aids for the general Defence, shall flow from their own Spontaneity, and the devising of a Plan to open the Sluices of our Generosity, as often as the public Expediency of the Empire, shall call for our united Assistance?... Give them [the provinces] a constitutional Security against arbitrary Levies; that is, say, covenant that they shall be Englishmen, and the advocates for Indepenency, will be found such an inconsiderable Handful, even in the most suspected Colonies, that they may be left to the Correction of the Rest of their own Country; who will soon restore the general Harmony of the Nation. Till this is done there is no Place for the Maxime divid ut impera, for no Man will ever enter into a Compact by which nothing is to be got, but all to be surrendered. A War is begun which every good Subject would wish to see ended in a rational and equitable Establishment of the authority of G B. & the Felicity of her Colonies & if Parliament will this Winter indulge a Liberty, recommended by every Motive of Humanity and sound policy it may easily be effected; but for the irritation of that unfortunate Excursion to Concord, which drew a Question the Sincerity of the Proposals M Gage had then in his Pocket, and all the Governors were commanded to make to their assemblies, and the subsequent Battle and configuration at Charles Town, which Fare says your Advice would have prevented, America would before this Day have liberate her Trade;..."

"I have said Nothing of the Justice of the American Cause. There is no Necessity for it—it is enough to direct the Measures of Policy that Great Britain has herself populated this Hemisphere & trained up the Inhabitants with sentiments inconsistent with the Claims of taxing them by parliamentary Authority. If the American’s every Complaint be not Correct, they have borrowed Lessons of her own teaching—... I confide in your Friendship respecting the prudent use of what I have written—"The Weal of the Whole Empire is my Aim."—Wm. Smith MSS, folio 208.

Wm. Smith having requested "Instructions to the [New York] Delegates at Philadelphia to move some conciliatory Propositions," Wm. Smith makes a draft for the provincial congress to send them. In this he instructs the delegates to urge the following measures:

"1 To recommend it to the several Colonies in the Confederacy to procure a Session of their assemblies for the Purpose of petitioning the Crown & the two Houses of Parliament once more upon the Subject of our Grievances."

"2 To direct the general Nature and Substance of these new applications carefully distinguishing what we fight for from what we request and will trust to the Justice of Great Britain to grant us."

"3 To state how far we approve of the Parliamentary Resolution of last Feb’r. and in what Instances we are ready to accept its offers and comply with its Requisitions."

"4 To authorize each Colony to contribute a precise Sum to the general Defence of the Nation for procuring a view so that it is to be considered as a Gift upon the Principle that every Branch of the Empire is bound to consult the common Safety of the whole Body and that we expect Accounts to be rendered of the Disposition of it shewing that it has been intirely expended for the Support of the Navy & Army and other National Purposes.

"5 That while the Colonies maintain the Civil Government & the Administration of Justice within their respective Limits no Officer of the Colony shall receive any other Pension or Provision..."

Nov. 25

"That all these Petitions be expressed in Terms of Decency avoiding as much as possible everything that tends to irritate or offend in asserting the essential Rights and Privileges of his Majesty’s American Subjects...

"That as often as Great Britain shall renew her Requisitions for the Contributions of the Colonies towards the general Defence it shall be lawful for them to hold Congresses for deliberating upon the Request and apportioning the Quotas to be raised by their several Legislatures...

"That they declare their Willingness to co-operate in forming a Body of Representatives from each Colony for this Purpose and that they are disposed most cheerfully to liberate their Trade and cultivate a perfect Reconciliation on the Removal of the grand Cause of Complaint for which they have taken up arms and the passing of a general Act of Oblivion and Indemnity expressing their Readiness to place an entire Confidence in Parliament for Relief in all those other Instances which the Continental Congress may enable the Assemblies to point out as Grievances requiring a Redress for better promoting the Felicity of America and the Re-establishment of a compleat and permanent Harmony between all the Branches of the Empire

"That every Colony be understood to be at Liberty to pursue any Measure by the Appointment of Agents or otherwise that may facilitate the designed negociation; & to be on a footing with the Plan of Conduct so to be concerted and recommended to them by the Continental Congress."—Wm. Smith’s Diary (M.S.), V.

Nathan Hale is commissioned as a captain by the continental congress. There is a photograph of his commission in the Emmet Collection, No. 6980, the original being owned, in 1914, by William A. Read of New York.—Johnston, Nathan Hale (1914), 192.

Smith writes: "Upon Advice that General Lee had left Boston and was raising Troops in Connecticut to possess and fortify New York’s Lord Drummond requested me to urge the Congress here to prevent his Approach as it would embarrass the Captains & might end in the burning of the City and render the expected Negotiations abortive—I told him that I did not intermeddle in their Affairs nor seek their Confidence and that I disapprove’d more particularly of their Resolve that neither themselves nor the Assembly should declare upon any Terms of Peace nor even in a Way of Instruction to their Delegates at Philadelphia—He then desired..." to send to the Town Hall for Col. McDougal who came upon a note —I introduced them to each other and Lord Drummond assured him that there were good Prospects of an Accommodation—that he knew the Captains would as much as possible avoid Extravagance—That they commiserated the Flight of the Inhabitants at this severe Season and that he wished the Committee of Safety would dispel their Fears by a Request to General Lee to desist from any Works to annoy the Ships and distress the Town. He spoke in general as to the Prospect of Peace, and conceded much of what he has in several Interviews revealed to me. McDougal assumed a very consequential Tone at first... which Lord Drummond heard unmoved & did not exasperate, upon which the other fell into a Calm and frankly said that Lee was at New Haven waiting for the levy of two Regiments & that the Committee of Safety had by Letter to him declared it to be dangerous to this Town to bring Troops into it—Lord Drummond declared that the Captains knew Peace would take Place soon and that Adm would not thank any servants of the Crown for irritating Men’s Minds—That General Howe was also apprized of the amicable Designs of Gov’t and that if Mischiefs ensued he was persuaded the Fault would be our’s."—Wm. Smith’s MS, folio 208.

Wm. Smith writes: "I had a visit this Morning from Mr. Lynch the S Carolina Delegate with whom I became first acquainted in October 1765 and have since expressed to him my doubt whether I had seen Lord Drummond & what his Character was? I told him I had often & that he was esteemed among us as a Man of Truth and Honor and that he had conducted himself with more Prudence than common to People of his Years." Lynch gave Smith a report of an interview between Drummond and the members of congress, and spoke of the "New Matter of Information I now got from Mr. Lynch this [i] "That they [members of congress] did not dislike the Proposal of a Duty to raise a Revenue for the common Defense. If we separate says he from England we shall be obliged to set up a 1776 Republic & that is a Form of Government some People are fond of which I think reads better than it words—It is best in Idea bad in Experiment. "He [Drummond] affected says Lynch to deny that he had any Credentials, but being pushed upon the Points we think essential & the following the Minutes of Sentiments respecting them he pulled out a Paper which under great Caution he read & laid on the Table as what he had from Lord North. He would not suffer us to copy it but consented to our abstracting the substance in our own words till we were satisfied of its Meaning.

The Point of Revenue settled the other Duties in regulating Commerce were to belong to the Colonies & Supplies Drummond here & selves a "Further Aids pro Renta to be expected by Way of Requisition as formerly to the assemblies singularly. "The Minister did not doubt but that the offensive Acts would be stopped. "Great Britain would for the Revenue renounce the Claim of Taxation. "Parliament might be prevailed upon if the People of Massachusetts so chose to restore the Government established by the Charter of King William or the Altering Act might be amended. "The greatest Difficulty apprehended the Quartering & March of Troops. The Prerogative of the Crown was concerned here & made it a Matter of extreme Delicacy—"To this last Mr Lynch said Matters might be made easy—Drummond said at first the Colonies must give it up—We said British Troops here were as oddious as foreign Troops in Great Britain but we can come to a Compromise if they will stint them to a reasonable Number & then divide them among the Provinces—Drummond thought this would go down & the Delegates said in that Case all objections would be removed for they should consider them then as so many Hostages for the good Behavior of the Mother Country. . . .

"Upon the whole I found that the Congress gave confidence to Lord Drummond and Mr Elliot, and that Mr Lynch at this Day has no Idea of pushing for the Independence of the Colonies His Idea is that the Cabinet has any own will.

"That under a Persuasion that America aimed at a Dissuasion supplies were to be obtained—That Commissioners were to come out to grant Parliards but with Power to negotiate & stop the Progress of the War upon Terms—That the Ministers were to cooperate in ramming them down upon the Parliament, if a Revenue was secured, & in this Way the Nation is to be satisfied—opposition silenced—and the Ministers Neck and Power secured, and Mr Lynch was clear in the opinion that America would make a better Compact with the present than any new Set of Ministers, the Professions of the Opposition notwithstanding."—Wm. Smith's Diary, V.

9 Maj.-Gen. Lee, by letter of this date, informs the continental congress that a transport with troops has arrived at New York, that more may be expected, and, therefore, that a farther reinforcement is necessary to secure and defend the city. On receipt of this information on Feb. 12, congress resolved "That it be recommended to the convention or committee of safety of New Jersey, immediately to send detachments of the minute men equal to a battalion, under proper officers, to New York, there to put themselves under the command of Major General Lee;" likewise, to the committee of safety of Pennsylvania, to send detachments equal to a battalion from Philadelphia.—Jour. of Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 127-28.

Wm. Smith records in his diary: "Monday Evening 12 Feb' at Simmons's Tavern Col. Mc Dougall called me upstairs and after Promises of Friendship intimated his Satisfaction on the Forbearance of the Navy the Day before, said the Captains had acted wisely for he knew that the New England Troops & People wished to render a Reconciliation impossible & to bring on the Destruction of the Town as conducive to that End—That the Susquehanna squadron had taken the Hold of the Generality of their chief men & they conceived the necessity of coercion from Great Britain.—A Word to the Wise says he is sufficient.

"I replied that every Man of Discernment must perceive that the Populace irritated by the War would insist upon an Independence or distressed by Poverty would turn their Wrath upon the Congress or the Commander in Chief. It had Reason to imagine that administration were disposed to make such capital Concessions as would render America happy & that her own Growth would ensure every Thing in future which we could reasonably desire—that I believed the Continental Congress would not countenance the Extravagance of the Multitude nor wish so to reduce the British Authority as to leave the Minor Provinces exposed to the Control of New England & the other formidable Colonies & that it would become him to have an Eye to Peace & so to act as to be in Reputation under the Restoration of Government which I was persuaded the Cont! Congress meant to effect upon some late Intimations from Administration of which he was uninformed.

My Answer was made, to meet a Design of reading me an Instrument for urging the Govt & the Captains to leave the Price, that the Army might have the greater Swy away without exposing himself to the Inhabitants who are exasperated by the Loss of their Property & the cruel Flight they were driven to. He declared that he was opposed to Independence, as he always had done on my Warnings that Things were verging to it—but I fear that the Delay of the Commissioners will make it the Interest of many to fight for an eternal Separation—Oh Britain! Oh America!—"Upon the whole I believe Lord Drummond has led him to suspect there might be a sudden Peace & this was a Device to secure his Reputation with one for whose Friendship he has always been solicitous. He is artful—has a plain sound understanding & I always thought him honest & wish he may wear well to the last."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

Smith and four other council members dine with Gov. Tryon and discuss the conciliatory efforts made by the General & the whole debates of this occasion "After Dinner we had much Conversation & the Colonies were charged by Kempe & Skinner the two Attorney Generals with a fixed Resolution to set up an Independence. I grew warm in the Debates upon this Subject. I charged the Parliamentary Vote of the 20 Feb with a studied Concealment of a Design to give up the Claim of taxing the Colonies as a great Fault on the Side of Administration dangerous to the general Interest of both Countries. Tryon who had not interfered before caught Fire at this and said he was sorry to hear an Officer of the Government say so. I turn'd upon him and insisted upon my Remarks. I appealed to himself whether the Minister had not informed him that the taxing Power was given up. To which he answered, Yes. I demanded the Evidence of it in any written explicit Declaration & he confessed that he would have declared the Surrender with more Liberality. Parker and Vandeput were present and the latter who sat by my Side declared that if he believed the Colonies intent only upon an Exemption from Parliamentary Taxation he thought them on the right Side in the present Controversy and seemed pleased with the Resistance I made to the Intemperate Partialities of the two Attorney Generals, occasionally supported (to whom good sense & more Dicency) by Mr Psymaster Barrow. The Train I took was a Defense of the continent from the Charge of aiming ab Initio to severing the Empire, admitting that the Congress had countenanced the Imputation in 1774 & faulting administration in listening to Misrepresentations & concealing the ultimate Terms to which they would yield for preserving the Union & thro' the whole Debates I indulged now and then a little asperity at the Refugees to abate the Governor's Confidence in their suggestions. The Rest of the Council said Nothing but in the Bout after we had left the ship at night signified their approbation of the Part I had acted and bore patiently some censures for their silence."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V.

Stephen Moylan, Washington's aid-de-camp, informs the Mar. 9 "commanding Officer of the American forces—New York" that the British are preparing to move from Boston, but if they do not leave, the general is "determined to force them to a Battle or make that Town, so hot, that they will have but little rest therein." Moylan adds: "His Excellency has good reason to imagine that New York will be the place of their destination, he therefore desires that You will exert Yourself to the utmost in preparing for their reception, as he has ordered, the Armed Schooners to be in readiness to attend their Motion and connected with a total Security of the Course they steer by which Intelligence his Motions will be governed if they steer West, You may expect a large reinforcement from this Army, & in all probability the main body will soon follow. You will please to communicate this to the provincial Congress or Congressant Way. That I had Reason to imagine that administration were disposed to make such capital Concessions as would render America happy & that her

Harvard College confers the degree of "Doctor of Laws" upon George Washington.—N. E. Chron., April 25, 1776.

The letter in the Chronology under this date purporting to have been written by William Smith, and describing to the British the approaches to New York and the best place to land, was repudiated by Smith in the Conn. Gaz. of Oct. 4. He there claimed that it was written by refugees in England, to bring about his downfall.

William Smith writes in his memoirs: "I now set down my Thoughts as a Rule for my own Conduct at this melancholy Hour of approaching Distress." These "Thoughts" are extended over 125 pages, and served as the basis for a pamphlet published anonymously in Charleston, S. C., Sept. 30, 1780 (q.v.), and later (see Jan. 30, 1781) reprinted in New York. In connection with researches undertaken for the ICONOGRAPHY, it has been discovered that William Smith actually wrote the anonymous pamphlet (see Sept. 30, 1780). On one occasion when Smith was asked who the author was, he gave the evasive answer that "it was imputed in Charles Town to one Williams a lawyer."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), VII. An analysis of the contents of the Candid Retrospect appears in Vol. V, under date of Jan. 30, 1781.

A British fleet attacks the American fort on Sullivan's Island, and the regulars are decisively defeated by 435 provincials commanded by Col. Moultrie. Regarding the importance of this battle, Bancroft says: "It kept seven regiments away from New York for two months... it dispelled throughout the South the dread of British superiority; it drove the loyalists into obscurity. To the other colonies it was a message of brotherhood and union from June South Carolina as a self-directing republic."—Bancroft, Hist. of U. S., IV: 335-417. This fort on Sullivan's Island, in Charleston harbour, built of palmetto-logs, was named Fort Moultrie, and, according to Lossing, was near the site of the later Fort Moultrie, which came into prominence in American annals in Dec., 1860.—

The New York delegates in the continental congress write to the provincial congress of New York: "The important Question of Indepency was agitated yesterday in a Committee of the whole Congress and this Day will be finally determined in the House.
We know the Line of our Conduct on this Occasion; we have your Instructions [see April 20, 1775, Addenda; and June 11, 1776, Chronology], and will faithfully pursue them. New Doubts and Difficulties however will arise should Indepency be declared; and that it will not, we have not the least reason to expect.
... What Part are we to act after this Event takes Place; every Act we join in may then be considered as in some Measure acceding to the Vote of Indepency, and binding our Colony on that Score.
... Our Situation is singular and delicate. No other Colony being similarly circumstanced with whom we can consult. We wish therefore for your earliest Advice and Instructions whether we are to consider our Colony bound by the Vote of the Majority in Favour of Indepency and vote at large on such Questions as may arise in Consequence thereof or only concur in such Measures as may be absolutely necessary for the Common safety and defense of America exclusive of the Idea of Indepency."—Burnett, Letters of Members of Cont. Cong. (1921), I: 524-25. The action taken by the New York provincial congress on July 9 (q.v.) was a sufficient answer to this letter.
